She was stricken with pneumonia, being sick only one week. She was fully prepared to lay down her life, having prepared, like the king's daughter, "raiment of fine needlework," by her own ever-busy fingers; and, best of all, had made herself "all-glorious within."

She leaves, as immediate relatives, her mother, Ann V. Congleton, and half-brother, Jas. Slusser, and numerous other relatives.

NO TIME LIKE THE PRESENT

If you are planning a time to begin doing things better all around, don't plan it for next week, or even tomorrow. Begin right off, the next thing, the next minute. If the blacksmith waited to strike until next week, or tomorrow, the iron would be cold, and all the hammering in the world would not be of any use.—Selected.

GIVING AND FORGIVING

What makes life worth living
Is our giving and forgiving;
Giving tiny bits of kindness
That will leave a joy behind us,
And forgiving bitter trifles
That the right word often stifles;
For the little things are bigger
Than we often stop to figure:
What makes life worth the living
Is the giving and forgiving.

Do you own work. Ask no favors of anyone, and you will succeed better than one who is always beseeching someone's patronage.—Greenwood.

Singleness of aim is one great secret of success. We can not do better than by setting before our souls some "one thing" for which we mean to live.—Selected.

Govern the lips as they were palace doors, the king within; tranquil and fair and courteous be all words which from that presence wins.—Edwin Arnold.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16, Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God," and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

"QUESTIONING"

Will there be a brighter morrow,
Or is the hope an ideal dream?
Will no joy succeed the sorrow,
When the morning sun shall gleam?

Will the lurid clouds forever
Hang above our dwellings here?
Will the hosts of evil never
From our planet disappear?

Will the past of human history
Repeat itself through countless years?
Who'll unfold the darkest mystery,
This mingled scene of blood and tears?

Will the mighty surging ocean,
Will the dreaded earthquake's shock,
Will the wind in wild commotion,
At man's efforts always mock?

Will the din and roar of battle
On land and ocean never cease?
Is it vain and idle prattle
All this talk of coming peace?

Written in 1883. JOHN L. WINCE.

A Reply to "Questioning."

Yes, there'll dawn a brighter morrow,
And these clouds will pass away;
Then there'll be no sighs or sorrows—
Joy will crown that summer day.
(John 16:22)

No, the "evil" that is spreading,
And the tares that throng the way,
Shall not gather at the "wedding,"
But by fire shall pass away.
(Ps. 37:8, 9; Matt. 13:40)

No, the past of human "history"
Will not shade the countless years;
God will light the darkest mystery—
In that world there'll be no tears.
(Isa. 56:13; Rev. 2:14)

No famine dread with fingers gaunt
Will reach for heartstrings there,
And fill the earth with woe and want,
Nor wither lillies fair. (Isa. 65:21-23)

Yes, the clarion notes of battle
O'er our world at last shall cease;
No, brother, 'tis no "childish prattle,"
This our hope of "coming peace."
(Isa. 2:4; Joe 4:1-5)

Then push your journey to the gate,
Without one murmuring sigh;
Where comes no startling thought "too late,
'Twill brighten by and by.

"LOVE OF CHRIST CONSTRAINETH US"

M. JOBLIN

Concluded

I referred to this incident to press home upon you the fact that every good soldier of Jesus now wears a badge that tells everybody that he has been with Jesus and learned of him as surely as did that of Peter and John. The evidence that Christ lives in us, the evidence that the lives we live are in faith of Christ Jesus, is not furnished through miraculous powers to heal or speak languages we never learned, but I maintain that it is just as infallible as that was. The fruits of the spirit are so plainly catalogued that no honest, intelligent person can be deceived in the matter. The Master has told us grapes do not grow on thorns, or figs on thistles, and continues: "Even so, every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit." He is not satisfied to leave the matter, but goes on to say: "A good tree can not bring forth the evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit." That looks like a complete statement; but even now he is not content to leave it, and so adds: "Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire; wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them."

Take notice that there are two phases to this subject of fruit-bearing. It is not enough for a tree to bear fruit; the fruit must be good. The owner of the tree is the only one qualified to pass on the quality of the fruit. The production of fruit will not suffice to spare the life of the tree; the tree will be hewn down and cast into the fire if the fruit is not what it should be. By their fruits shall ye know them applies both to men and trees, and this principle is emphasized by other words of our Lord in Matt. 15:13. On being told that the Pharisees were offended at some words Jesus uttered he answered: "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." This shows that all the trees that bear bad fruit have not been planted by the Father, and are considered cumberers of the ground. At the time appointed they will be rooted up; and this means that they can not again start to grow. He has other use for the room they occupy.

I must not fail to quote the spirit's own list of the fruits of the spirit, the fruits of the trees planted by the Father, and stamp those who produce them as trees of righteousness, and by which we can and will know them. I quote Gal. 5:22-26. "But the fruit of the spirit is love"—love to both

God and man, love to friend and foe, love to them that hate them, and despitefully use them. You may depend upon it there is only one kind of tree that produces that sort of fruit. The next kind is joy, and the next peace, and the next forbearance, and the next kindness, then goodness, and fidelity, meekness and self-control. Against such like things there is no law; and then it adds: "And those who belong to Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with the passions and desires. If we live by spirit we should also walk by spirit. We should not become vainglorious, provoking each other, envying each other." All this points to a tree of God's right-hand planting.

I wish now to clinch some of the nails so far driven; it shall be by the words of him who spake as never man spake. They are found in Matt. 5: 14, 15: "Ye are the light of the world. A city set on an hill can not be hid, nor is a lamp lighted to be placed under the corn measure, but on the lamp stand, and it gives light to all the family. Thus, let your light shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify that Father of yours in the heavens."

Now I trust we shall never hear anyone say: "I don't see what I can do for God, and Christ, and truth." Here's something everyone can do. And the best of all is, we have the Lord's estimate of that kind of work for him; or at least that their light is to shine for a definite purpose, and that is, that others, seeing their good work, their different habits, tastes, principles, self-control, integrity of purpose, kindness, godly conversation and deportment, may in time be led to glorify God by following their example.

This suggests a word or two in reference to the light they keep burning for the benefit of others. Those who are in their company in time conclude that it is a divine light that emanates from them. It is so unlike what emanates from others that the conclusion is arrived at that they have been with Jesus and absorbed his light, his truth, his spirit, that what they see is reflected from him, and even that recognition is a glory to God.

Another thought here occurs to me. The idea with many seems to be that so long as they do nothing very objectionable and retain the confidence of their brethren generally by what is regarded as straightforward business principles, attend the church gatherings regularly, and do their share toward the support, that they fill the bill; and yet, in thirty, forty or fifty years, perhaps have never led a soul to the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world, being so absorbed in the business of this life, day after day and year after year, that scarcely a seed of the kingdom has been sown. Diligence in business has been very great, but the fervency of spirit and the service of the Lord has been almost entirely neglected. I would suggest that it would be well to see that the love of the spirit is not perishing or needing to be developed and emanates other things to be done. The words of Jesus in Matt. 23:23 fully illustrate what I mean: "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, for ye pay tithe of mint, and anise, and cummin, and have omitted weightier matters of the law—judgment, mercy, faith;" and Luke adds: "And the love of God. These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the others undone."

At this point it is proper to ask if this course of conduct is of the flesh or of the spirit. Is it dictated by the old natural man, or by the new creature in Christ Jesus? You can only answer that the natural man is at the helm. Whoever acts thus considers that he belongs to himself, and must take care of himself, and lets others do the same. The spirit, addressing believers, says: "Ye are not your own, having been bought with a price, even the precious blood of Christ, as a Lamb without spot." Then, what's the status of one who acts that way? Why, he is in the first Adam. He has not put on the new man, the second Adam, the Lord from heaven. He needs to be converted, changed, and become a new creature in Christ Jesus. "Be not deceived, God is not mocked: whatever a man sows, that shall he also reap."

But I must now consider my text. It says: "The love of Christ constraineth us." Brethren and sisters, is this true in our case? Is the love of Christ constraining us? I mean, does it exert an invincible power over us? If so, what does it impel us to do? What are we doing through the power of that love over us? This love of Christ for us has doubtless moved us to love him in return, and to love God also for the amazing gift of his Son to die for us. But to what extent? It is easy to quote this declaration of the apostle, as if it equally applied to us, but it is of vast importance that we examine ourselves faithfully, and not hastily conclude that we stand upon the high ground of the apostle. His record is before us, so that we can easily compare notes with him. In comparing himself with some of his detractors he says: "Are they Hebrews? So am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? So am I. Are they ministers of Christ. I am more. In labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in wrath. Of the Jews five times I received forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day have I been in the deep. In journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren. In weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in cold and nakedness, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often. Besides these things which are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches. Who is weak and I am not weak? Who is offended and I burn not? If I must needs glory I will glory of things which concern mine infirmities. The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is blessed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not. In Damascus the governor, under Aretas the king, kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me, and through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall and escaped his hands."

After reading this record no one can question Paul's right to say, The love of Christ constraineth him. What but that love could exert power enough to cause one endure all these things for nothing in sight but what faith could see, and after all could call them "light of afflictions, which are but for a moment," compared to the roll of unending ages? And we know if they could have been doubled many times it would have been the same, for we find him exultingly saying in Rom. 8:38: "I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor heights, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

What a noble soldier of the cross! What a defender of the faith! What a faithful witness he was! What a bright example!

WHICH WILL YOU CHOOSE?

We can have our choice. Rev. 22:17: "Whoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Many say, and think they believe, that God's word is true. What reason have we to dispute it? To illustrate: If I should tell my neighbor (that was destitute) that I had a rich gold mine in the mountains, not over forty miles from here, and a man can easily take out from ten to fifteen hundred dollars per day, and that he was welcome to use my tools and work the mine for the two weeks that I am away, which will net him from $21,000 to $36,000. He says: "I surely believe what you say, and am glad to know that I can get money to relieve my wants, and get a good home, in so short a time; I will go at once." He does not go to work the mine, but spends part of the time in looking for a job; the balance of the time he works hard for low wages. Did he believe what I said, or only thought he believed it? Surely the latter. We say we believe God's word; sometimes our actions prove that we only think we believe it. God's word don't fail; he is able and will fulfill all of his promises.

I will now speak of two classes; which will you belong to? You can choose. 1 Thess. 4:16, 17: "The dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Rev. 6:15, 16: "They hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains, and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne." Awful! Rev. 20:6: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." James 5:1: "Weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you." Awful! Rev. 22:1, 5: "They shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads. And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun, for the Lord giveth them light." Glorious! Ps. 37:2, 10: "They shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb. The wicked shall not be; thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." Awful! Rev. 21:1: "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." Grandly glorious! Mal. 4:1: "The day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, sayeth the Lord." Certainly awful! Mal. 4:2: "You that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings, and ye shall go forth and grow up as calves of the stall." Prov. 37:20, 36, 38: "The wicked shall perish, be as the fat of the lamb; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away; passed away; could not be found; transgressors destroyed together; the end of the wicked cut off." Matt. 5:7-12: "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy; pure in heart, shall see God; peacemakers, called the children of God; them persecuted for righteousness, theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Ps. 49:12, 14: "Man being in honor, abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish. Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them, and their beauty shall consume in the grave." Ps. 37:3, 11: "Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shall thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed. The meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Rom. 6:23: "The wages of sin is death" (eternal). Ps. 37:18, 19: "The inheritance of the upright shall be forever. In the days of famine they shall be satisfied." Matt. 25:41: "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." 2 Tim. 2:11, 12. "If we be dead with him, we shall also live with him; if we suffer, we shall also reign with him." Ps. 9:17: "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God." Gal. 3:29: "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Glorious promise! Rev. 22:15, 18, 19: "Without are dogs, whoremongers, murderers, idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a life. If any man shall add to, or take from, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book." Do you believe this, or only think you believe it? It is surely awful, for the careless ones. Dear ones, be not deceived, God is not mocked: whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap (Gal. 6:7). We can have our choice in the sowing, but not in the reaping, for we are compelled to reap what we sow. "He that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption." Thinking that we believe God's word is not sufficient; we should prove, by all of our words and acts, that we do believe his word. Then we will have our choice in the reaping, as well as in the sowing. Precious thought, that we can have our choice in such a grand and glorious matter.

PRAYER

"Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations," and we thank thee that thou art still the home of homeless hearts. We come to thee seeking to make good our habitation in God, and pray thee to help us that we may indeed dwell in the secret place of the Most High. We thank thee that thou dost come near to them that seek thy face, and dost cast thy great protection round all shelterless souls that take refuge in thee. And we beseech thee that day by day, amidst the changes and the storms, we may find our calm abode in him who changes not, and whose years are throughout all generations, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Keep your face with sunshine lit,
Laugh a little bit;
Gloomy shadows oft will flit
If you have the wit and grit
Just to laugh a little bit. — J. E. V. COOK.

CHRONOLOGY

"Yea, have ye never read, out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?" (Matt. 21:16).

False chronology has made havoc, and as theories they pervert the truth and do not agree with the Scriptures, or among themselves.

God is the author of perfect law and order, not confusion.

The starting point of chronologers is always with the time of Adam's creation on the sixth day. This brings them to the conclusion that the Millennium, or seven thousandth year, is now at hand. According to certain facts, this is impossible. Now, "let us reason together."

How can the sixth or seventh day of creation be the beginning of a new week of days, when the old weeks were still incomplete in Adam's day, and when as yet in full working order even during and after the flood? That week of days was only finished with the time of Abraham, as we shall see.

Abraham's day was the eight thousandth year from the beginning in Genesis, and, accordingly, here began a new first day of another week with the promises.

Adam was created on the sixth day, or six thousandth year, of creation, as recorded, and from Adam to the flood was about 1656 years, and from the flood to Abraham was about 367 years, added together, 6000 - 1656 - 376 = 8023 years.

The value of this starting point we may now consider for Bible chronology. In grouping together past, present and future time periods into Bible Harmony, a foundation for the ages of ages, as the Father has arranged them in order, from the beginning to the end. From the creation unto Abraham was about eight thousand years, the eighth day or the first day. The correct beginning for a new week, and such is every eight day, according to God's law and order; this fact is incontestable.

On the eighth day, or the first day of a new week, a new creation began, after the flood washed away the old one. A dispensation of hope commenced with the promises to Abraham, as in Gen. 22:18; Gal. 3:16. Man had no hope until the promises were made to Abraham. [This is such a serious mistake that we can not let it pass without correction. Paul traces the promises back prior to Abraham, and declares that Abel, Enoch, Noah and others enjoyed them (Heb. 11)—Editor.] So began the world's hope. The new starting point for all the future ages. Matthew 1:17 so states. So all the generations from Abraham to David are fourteen generations, and from Captivity to Christ are fourteen generations (three equal dispensations), forty-two in all. The generation of man is seven multiplied by seven, equals forty-nine years, multiplied by the forty-two generations, two thousand years, which is the correct measure according to history and Bible chronology. The first verse of the book of Matthew emphatically states that it is the book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the Son of David, the Son of Abraham. The dispensations are founded upon Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and terminate with Joseph and the tribes. Hosea 5:9: "Among the tribes of Israel have I made known that which shall surely be." The Abrahamic dispensation lasted about two thousand years. The Isaac dispensation lasted about two thousand years. The Isaac dispensation at present will last about the same period, allowing for the lapping over one and the shortening of the other, as can be seen in the previous three times, fourteen generations. And the Jacob dispensation about the same (will be). Joseph and the Brethren dispensation will only last about one thousand years, or the Millennium so-called. Completing this (the new week of seven days), from the beginning with Abraham. Exodus 3:6: "I am the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob." Exodus 3:15: "This is my name forever, and this is my memorial unto all generations." Also Luke 20: 37, 38. These alone live unto God. The children of the resurrection, Christ, and his body of saints. The rest of mankind are dead to him. Matt. 22: 32; Mark 8:21, 22: "Let the dead bury their dead." We are presently concluding the second dispensation, the Isaac period, and are shortly to begin the third or Jacob dispensation to complete the body of Christ, the mystery of God, required for the salvation and hope of the whole world (Rom. 8:19-22). [The world has neither hope nor salvation.—Editor.]

"In Isaac (Jesus) shall thy seed be called." Luke 13:22: "Go ye, and tell that fox (Herod, Gentile), Behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures (healing of sinners), today (end of Abrahamic period), and tomorrow (Isaac period, now ending), and the third day (Jacob) I shall be perfected (Christ and his body). Read the 33rd verse.

Matt. 12:39, 40: The "sign of the Son of Man," the body of Christ, completed in three dispensations. "No other sign shall be given to an evil and adulterous generation" (or the world). "I must be in the heart of the earth three days and three nights," six ages, or about one thousand years, or three dispensations. This completes the anointed body of Christ Head, Body and Feet.

This Key unlocks the door to the plan of the ages and dispensations. From Abraham to the present has been four working days, four thousand years, two days and two nights, or two dispensations. The third dispensation, Jacob's, and the fifth and sixth working day of Jesus, or the third day and the third night in the heart of the earth (or men), that completes the feet of the body and head, which is the Christ.

In John 2:19 Jesus also gave this type. "Destroy this temple (he spoke of his body, which is always figurative of his church, the elect saints, flesh of his flesh, bone of his bone), and in three days (three dispensations) I will raise it up." Abraham, Isaac and Jacob dispensation. We clearly notice that all teachings and types Jesus gave are in concert with the plan of the ages, fully corroborating one another's testimony in the seven-day week plan, which began anew with Abraham, to be fully carried out, which is two thousand years for each of three dispensations, as two of them, four thousand years, or four days, being now nearly passed, and one thousand years for the fourth dispensation (Millinnium), making the full seven-day week to the new heaven and new earth.

Luke 13:6: "A certain man had a fig tree (Levites) in his vineyard (Israel), and he came and sought fruit (servants, Israel in the Abrahamic dispensation), and found none. Behold, I come these three years (three dispensations, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob), seeking fruit and find none. Then he said to the dresser, why cumbereth it the ground? The dresser answered, Let it alone this year also (the third year, Jacob dispensation), till I dung it, and if it bears fruit, well, and if not then (end of Jacob dispensation), after that thou shalt cut it down."

Matt. 13:33, 35: "The leaven which the woman hid in three measures of meal" (in three dispensations), "I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world" (Luke 13:21).

This will conclude the Jacob dispensation, which has not begun yet. This dispensation has not expired, as we learn in Rom. 11:25: "Blindness of Israel prevails until the fullness of the Gentiles come in." "Babylon the great" is to pass away with a great noise, when Jacob shall be grafted into his own dispensation (into the feet), "for a remnant shall out of Israel be saved for the heavenly calling." We can see that previous to any millennium must come the fulfillment to natural Israel of the promises made of restoration (about to begin in Jerusalem), when the Jacobs (feet of the body) will fall away from the then instated Mosiac system (Esau), with its animal sacrifices in Ezekiel's temple, then built in the land.

To this order the book of Job testifies, showing a type of Israel in three dispensations in three conditions:

1. Job as Israel in favor, Abrahamic dispensation;

2. Job as Israel in disgrace, Isaac or Gentile dispensation; and

3. Job as Israel restored, Jacob dispensation.

Otherwise the book of Job is a sealed volume; but this manner of exposition throws a flood of light on the history of Judah and Israel.

After the restoration dispensation, the millennium, or seventh day from Abraham, will be in correct order as a Sabbath for God's people and the world, when our Jesus (Joseph) sits upon the throne of Egypt (the world).

This completes the present week of seven days, from Abraham's day, the first day of this week of days, cutting off of all flesh on the eighth day, "the great circumcision." Read 2 Pet. 3:5, 6, 7, 8. Don't overlook the eighth verse. Notice 1 Cor. 3:13: "The fire that will try men's work, of what sort it is." Luke 17:28-30: "Likewise also as it was in the days of Noah and Lot." The flood and fire on the eighth day from creation. Matthew 24:27: "Even thus shall it be when the Son of Man (Jesus) is revealed (first day of the new week). Rev. 21:1: "The new heavens and the new earth (new week). Fifth verse: "Behold, I create all things new."

I WONDER

If it be a fact that the righteous dead are now in the high courts of heaven, and know infinitely more than when on earth, as popular theology teaches, I wonder what Solomon means when he says: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might, for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goeth" (Eccl. 9:10).

If the righteous dead are now playing on golden harps before the throne of God and singing praises to his holy name, as creeds and hymn books teach, I wonder what David means when he says: "In death there is no remembrance of thee (God), in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" (Psa. 6:5). God says by the mouth of Solomon: "The living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything" (Eccl. 9:5). The modern preacher says the dead know infinitely more than the living. I wonder which is true.

If the soul, or thinking part of man, is immortal and can not perish, as popular theology teaches, I wonder what David means when he says: "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His death goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish" (Psa. 146:4).

A father of a large family and a brother of standing in the church is dead, and on the front seats of the church sit the bereaved family. The minister, thinking to teach an impressive lesson, says: "Dear children, your honored father is not dead. This form you see in the casket is only the house in which he lived. Your father is now in heaven, and is looking down in pity upon you. If you do that which is right you will make him glad, but if your deeds are evil you will cause him sorrow." I open my Bible and read: "His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them" (Job 14:21). Shall we believe God or man?

If man is by nature immortal, as theology teaches, I wonder what Job means when he says: "Shall mortal man be more just than God?" (Job 4:17). In 1 Tim. 4:16 Paul tells us plainly that "God only hath immortality." If this be true, I wonder how all mankind can possibly possess it.

I wonder why the great mass of professing Christians refuse to believe the plain teaching of God's word on these and kindred subjects, and by so doing exchange, as did their father Esau, their precious birthright for a mess of pottage. God in heaven, I wonder why!

EDITORIAL

May 25th we had a most pleasant visit from Bro. Auld.

Sister Rose Millar writes: "Will you please change the date of the Michigan Conference notice? It should be May 29th instead of May 28th." This mistake was not ours, as we followed the copy. Will secretaries please be careful in writing dates? Will they also please send us all notices in plenty of time prior to meetings?

Since we changed the form of The Restitution hundreds of brethren have expressed their thanks for the change. A few, however, have disapproved the change. One sister writes this week that we have "cut it down too small; it does not look as pretentious as it did." Let those who feel this way remember that five dollars in gold is not "as pretentious" as a dollar in silver. It may be news to some that The Restitution now contains practically as much reading matter as it did when they suppose it was "larger." The directors of the paper have eliminated the "leads," cut down the paper in other "pretentious" forms, and yet are giving the readers the same amount of reading matter weekly. The original form of the paper was fully a hundred years behind the times. At an increased expense we are giving you the paper in its present form.

Sister Dixson, of Massachusetts, writes: "In a bundle of papers recently received from a friend was a copy of The Restitution of February 4, 1913. On reading 'Evangelistic Happenings' I was surprised to find what purports to be a quotation from volume 5, page 154, of Bible Studies, viz.: 'It was necessary that Christ Jesus should die, but just as necessary that the man Christ Jesus should live again -should remain dead to all eternity.' I have the six volumes of Bible studies, and can not imagine how anyone can read them without being impressed with the writer's conviction that Jesus Christ not only died for our sins, but rose again for our justification. As I gather from Mr. Russell's publication, his only hope is the second coming of Christ to restore all things, and reign on the earth in righteousness. How could he do this were he to remain dead? No, this is not Mr. Russell's statement. An enemy hath done this." We are always ready to correct any mistake made editorially or by contributors in The Restitution. Sister Dixson obviously thinks an injustice has been done Pastor Russell in the charges made against him by Bro. Wilson. However, we suggest that she has not yet mastered "the depths" of Russelism, and that many absurdities are hidden in verbal niceties which she has not yet perceived. We can not admit that Bro. Wilson has misrepresented his teachings in the quotation made. Our library volume of Bible Studies is dated "1906," the "74,000 edition." From top paragraph on page 454 we quote: "Nor could our Lord have been raised from the dead a man, and yet have left with justice our ransom price; in order to the release of Adam (and his condemned race) from the sentence and prison house of death it was necessary not only that the man Christ Jesus should die, but just as necessary that the man Christ Jesus should never live again, should remain dead, should remain our ransom price to all eternity." Again we quote from the same page, third paragraph from the top: "Since the man Jesus was the ransom price, given for the purchase of Adam and his race, it could not be that the man Jesus is the second Adam, the new father of the race instead of Adam; for the man Jesus is dead, forever dead, and could not be the father or life-giver to the world."

WRATH

The Greek word orge, says G. L. Young, occurs in the New Testament thirty-six times. It is rendered indignation once, vengeance once, anger thrice, and wrath thirty-one times. It is found in such expressions as "wrath of man," "wrath of God," "wrath of the Lamb," "wrath to come," "day of wrath," etc.

In the scriptures "the wrath of God is revealed" (Rom 1:18). We are there informed of "the day of wrath" (2:5). This special day is due at the finality of earthly scenes. The sixth seal ushers us to "the great day of his wrath" (Rev. 6:14-17). This is that "wrath to come" of which we read (1 Thess. 1:10). When at last the seventh angel shall sound, then God's "wrath is come" (Rev. 11:15-8). When Christ shall return and at last we all stand before his judgment seat (2 Cor. 5:10), then shall be a time of "indignation and wrath" (Rom. 2:8).

In Paul's time, and likewise in our own time, men treasure up for themselves "wrath against the day of wrath" (Rom. 2:5). Dr. J. A. Best says: "This implies that day by day the impenitent man is increasing the punishment awaiting him at the great day."

Wrath does not mean death. It may result in death, but in itself it does not signify death. There are words in the New Testament that do mean death, but wrath is not one of them. When death is meant it is those other words that are used But the word wrath has a different meaning, and is used because of this difference of meaning This is so in English. It is equally so in Greek. The wrath of God, though, the divine indignation against sin and the inflexible determination to punish it—this may and will eventuate in the final death of the sinner. Penal death will be a result of which wrath is the just and actively operating cause. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God" (Heb. 10:31). "For our God is a consuming fire" (12:29).

"WE THEN AS WORKERS TOGETHER WITH HIM"

The British Weekly reports an interesting sermon given at the Bloomsburg Baptist Church by Mrs. C. Barclay. The opening verse of the sixth chapter of 2nd Corinthians was Mrs. Barclay's chosen text. "We" is a word of comfort. "Together" is a word of power, and when "together" links us with him it becomes practically omnipotent." * * * "When the charge is going forward, and the humble foot soldier finds himself for a moment side by side with the general, and when the general turns and says, 'Come on, my man, we must win the day,' etc., it is easy then to charge the ramparts. The general has said "we." In illustrating the power of the "together," the stimulating friction of companionship, Mrs. Barclay told—with the mimicry of a born raconteur—a story of an old maid of the north. "She is very poor, but, as she herself says, 'Though poor, I am superior, as my mother was before me.' She may be plain, but she trusts she is elegant. She is elegant in her diction. If there is a long word that can be used she uses it, especially—(the speaker's eyes danced mischievously)—if she chances to be talking to an author. Finding Miss Letty deep in a work of fiction one day, Mrs. Barclay questioned her in some surprise, and evoked the interesting statement in grandiloquent tones, 'Oh yes, I read all kinds of literature. I peruse books of travel, I peep into biographies, and I read a novel occasionally; * * * as I often say to my friends, 'a little friction does us good.'"

Praise for "Young's Concordance"

In the course of the speech Mrs. Barclay paid enthusiastic tribute to that wonderful book, "Young's Analytical Concordance," and her advice to anyone about to have a birthday to choose it for a present caused much amusement and woke hearty cries of "Hear, hear." "In all work, what you want is a vitalizing force." The illustration used to impress this fact was perhaps the most telling thing in a speech every line of which was told. Taking out a tiny object that flashed in the lights, Mrs. Barclay said: "I am going to show you a very precious treasure of mine, which I brought back from the dear old city of Florence." It was a minute jeweled casket, and as it gleamed and glittered it was easy to believe that a "hundred precious stones were set in it." "In this jewelled prison there lives a little bird; * * * every feather is perfect; he is not quite an inch high. When I touch a spring he will pop out and sing you a little song." In response to the laughter—a laughter that had a note of incredulity—Mrs. Barclay added: "You laugh, * * * but Mr. Phillips will bear me out when I say that 3,500 people in Manchester heard every note of his song in the great Free Trade Hall there." There was absolute silence for a moment, and the jeweled lid burst open. "The little song" was indeed audible—every perfect trill and roulade was heard in the back of the church—and it was some time before the ovation for the vanished songster was hushed. Mrs. Barclay drove the lesson home. "There are some church members like that bird—at a given signal they pop up in the pew, and they sing a hymn right through; * * * they may sing such sacred words as 'Were the whole realm of nature mine, that were an offering far too small.' * * * When the hymn is over they go home, and on Monday morning down goes the jeweled lid; * * * they are shut into the prison of worldliness, self-seeking, money-making," and, like the bird, they lack, without knowing it, life and liberty and light."

COMMUNICATIONS

Editor Restitution:

Thinking that some would like to know that we are still trying by precept and example to get the truth before the people of this place (Letcher, S. D.), Bro. Marsh came over from Iowa March 17th and gave us eight sermons to good, attentive audiences.

Bros. Adams and Allard have been here and sown the word, and now Bro. Marsh nas ably presented the truth here. We believe our effort has not been in vain, but that the good word sown will spring up and bear fruit.

REPORT OF FONTHILL MAY MEETING

The eighth annual May meeting of the Church of God, Fonthill, Ontario, Canada, began on Friday evening, May 23d, and closed Sunday, May 25th. The two ministers present were L. E. Conner, of Cleveland, O., and F. L. Austin, of the Fonthill Church. We were pleased to have Bro. Conner in our midst again. The weather during the meeting was fine ,but cool. Many of the isolated brethren scattered around for miles attended this meeting. Everything indicated that the Fonthill brethren spared nothing in providing for the comfort of each and all who came. A debt of gratitude belongs to them. The committee have no small task to wait upon 200 at dinner and 175 at luncheon and attend every service. The two week-night services were fairly well attended. Sunday was a big day with us, not for temporal food only, but with an unusual appetite for strong spiritual food. The church was well filled every service, and at the evening services the aisles were packed. One or two of the brothers and sisters were absent on account of sickness, including Bro. Wm. Platts, Jr., who has been one of the most active workers.

Bro. Conner's opening address was based upon God's greatest, highest and nobles principle, namely, love, the test of which is obedience. Love not producing obedience was seen to be nothing more than vain delusion. Saturday evening the question arose as to the nature or line of thought best to follow, doctrinal or practical. The subject taken for our consideration was the nature of man. This picture of mortal man in death would indeed be dark had it not been followed the next evening by a very beautiful discourse on the subject of resurrection. Bro. Ivy, of Port Dover, took the Men's Bible Class. He is a very able and competent teacher. Following the morning service some 105 stayed for communion. A social meeting was held in the afternoon, Bro. Reece, of Jordan, taking the lead. Our experience has led us to sympathize with the isolated ones who have not the privilege of hearing and meeting together on the first day of each week, yet gave abundant testimony of God's keeping power. The young people's meeting lacked nothing to prove by their essays that their minds were readily taking hold of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God

At 8 p. m. a discourse by Bro. Austin was "Leaving behind the first principles and going on unto perfection." The thoughts presented on this subject must have impressed the minds of all intelligent believers as applying to the new creature in Christ Jesus. The last address by Bro. Conner went to show that the outgrowth of a godly life is the result of loving our neighbors as ourselves. How inspiring to those who are looking for that blessed hope, and what encouragement we can give each other when we meet together on these special occasions. And as those who continue to work among us as ministers are working out and telling to others God's wonderful plan of salvation, what growth and development continues. Truth, new to some, is scattered far and wide. And each year brings us to know and love each other more.

One remarkable feature about these meetings is that the truth was presented in a most inoffensive manner, but still with an abundance of material to fortify and build up the individual sufficient for all. And with such thoughts on our minds may we ever press on.

J. H. FLETCHER, Secretary.

DID PETER GO TO HEAVEN?

S. C. LEHMAN

Did Peter go to heaven? My neighbor, Mr. Lane, claims he did, and quotes John 13:36 to prove it. In fact, it proves that Peter was to follow Christ in the death state, into which Jesus was about to be condemned for the sins of the world. This is the reason Jesus, in verse 33, tells them where he was about to go they could not come. He had no thought of telling them they could not come to heaven, neither did Peter understand his Lord so, as Mr. Lane can see by reading 2 Pet. 1:14. Here Peter makes mention of what Jesus in John 13:36 told him, and he stirs them up to remember the promises God granted unto them, by which they were to receive divine nature after their death. The 16th verse shows Peter did not expect to receive this divine nature till his Lord returned, thus proving that Peter did not go to heaven at death.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES

Dear Restitution:

We left you as we were preparing to help in a meeting to be held at Los Angeles. On Saturday, the 3rd, the brethren began to gather, and we had our first meeting together Saturday evening. Several more came on Sunday. We had a fine attendance, especially in the morning. Many had to leave before the evening meeting on account of reaching their homes in time to attend to their chores. Only a few were situated so they could stay all the time, or even a part of the time.

We held regular services each day three times. One day Bro. J. C. Smith, of Burbank, Cal., and Dr. Carey of Pasadena, men who have been First Day Adventists nearly all of their lives, but who on account of their broadness of vision of the future glory of the coming ages are now given the cold shoulder by their former associates, each gave us a lesson; Bro. Carey on prophecy relative to the near advent of the Savior, and Bro. Smith gave us a splendid talk on the importance of being ready for the event. We enjoyed meeting these men and exchanging views, and while they are very near where we as a people were twenty or twenty-five years ago, we are glad to know they had advanced on some lines a great deal from where we heard preaching by J. M. Orrock, Geo. W. Burnham and many of the able men of the First Day Advent Church when we were a boy forty-two years ago.

On Friday evening, the 7th, Bro. A. E. Hatch came from Santa Ana. On Saturday he gave us a lesson which was surely beneficial to all. Among other things he said: "When I was a boy ten or eleven years old I can remember when father used to go and preach. This meant patched clothes for us boys; it meant old clothes made over from the cast-off clothes of others; it meant that my stepmother had to take in washing. We used to write to father; he expected to hear from some of us every day or so. One night I wrote him we were all well, and had had bread and water for supper. I just simply wrote it in my boyish way."

As I listened to him relate the experiences of his boyhood days I just wondered how many boys of today would stand by the faith his father preached under such conditions. I tell you, brethren, this is nearly giving one's life for the cause, and his family as well. How many of us realize that it was just the work of such men that made the Church of God? Preachers alone have not given their lives; their families make just as much and many times more sacrifices than the preacher himself. Think of a mother at home taking in washing and living on bread and water that the gospel might be preached! If a preacher today is given five or ten dollars many think they've given a great deal, and they have; but the preacher thinks he is badly used. None of our preachers have to live on bread and water that I know of. But if a man did not work at some other work occasionally to keep up, and depended solely on donations, he would sleep in depots, eat at lunch counters and sit up and ride in couches all night if he traveled. But I do not think he would have to come to bread and water. If he kept up the appearances he is expected to in the places he visits, his family might come very near to it even now. I said it took a great deal of fortitude for a boy to stand by the faith his father preached under those circumstances, but if he did not, and should go back on it after such sacrifices, would he not be trampling upon the life of others. I thank God tonight for such men as Bro. Hatch, J. M. Stephenson, H. V. Reed, C. A. Chaplin, B. J. Wilson, L. Chase, B. W. Woodward and all who have made the sacrifice they have for the sake of truth. Had it not been for such men as these there would have been no meeting like we had at Los Angeles. It will be long remembered by those who attended. We felt edified and built up by the association of the brethren in California. We expect to visit with our uncle, J. P. Allard, at Zelzah, for a few weeks before returning to Iowa.

O. J. ALLARD.

REPORT OF MEETING IN LOS ANGELES AND ORGANIZATION OF STATE CONFERENCE IN CALIFORNIA

When we learned of the contemplated visit of Bro. O. J. Allard to southern California we lost no time in communicating with him in regard to holding meetings in Los Angeles and securing his aid in effecting an organization. All the beloved were notified throughout the state, as far as we could secure names and addresses. Many came, mostly from the near-by districts—Santa Barbara, Pomona, Lordsburg, Santa Ana, Long Beach and Whittier being represented. Many good letters reached us from Chico, Sacramento, Oakland, Tulare, Grangeville, Pleasdale, Riverside and San Diego, expressing regret at not being able to meet with us and a "God-speed."

We had a very profitable and enjoyable time, and all feel that much good will result, especially to the little band assembled.

Bro. Allard is a "live wire" in expounding the scripture, and we have been strengthened and built up by his earnest exhortations and his power in rightly dividing the word of truth. May God be with him in the work before him, for the time is short—the day of the Lord draweth nigh!

Our meetings began May 3rd, closing on the 11th, including three sessions per day, Bro. Allard being the principal speaker and teacher. His sermons were strong and vitalizing, and the Bible studies of the afternoons were instructive and profitable. Those on the "Symbolism of the Tabernacle Service" were especially good.

Bro. Kimball gave two lectures from his charts on "The Plan of the Ages" and "The Chronological Times and Signs of the Coming of Christ."

Sister Ether Richardson presented a study on "Sacrifice," and Bro. C. E. Hatch one on "Character Building." Both were most excellent.

The following officers were elected: Lavigne J. Kimball, President; John P. Allard, Vice-President; Mary E. Kimball, Secretary and Treasurer; Mary L. Bailie, Corresponding Secretary.

A meeting was appointed for the second Sunday of June, when Bro. Allard will give a sermon morning and afternoon.

POETRY

We have searched the Bible through,
Trying to find something new;
But every time it's just the same
You must believe in Jesus' name.

That sacred One, so just and true,
Has told us plain what we must do
To live with him when he shall come
To gather all his loved ones home.

When will he come, and what for, too?
You see he has a work to do;
And that will be on Lord's Day
A thousand years, the Bible says.

That day will be the Savior's own,
When he shall sit upon his throne,
And judge the world with his bride,
The church sitting by his side.

Who is the bride that she will share
The kingdom with the Savior dear?
Those who have not stepped aside, nor Failed to stem the tide.

The rich, the poor, the great, the small,
Will hear the Savior's call:
"Awake, ye dead, great and small;
I'm here to burst the prison wall."

Then the judgment will begin,
And everyone can see their sins,
And hear the blessed Savior say:
"The wilful sinners must decay."

Then we'll see, what Daniel said,
Atom the image with golden head;
The stone has smote the image sure,
And it's like the chaff of threshing floor.

—W. J. PECK.

"START ME"

"Start me!" cries little Alice from her perch in the swing. "I want to go high, so start me!"

"Somebody can't be starting you all the time," answers Tommy, half impatient of her demands upon him, half desirous of giving her a bit of instruction. "Put your foot to the ground and start yourself."

It is the same story, the same cry the world over. People are longing to mount high along many lines, but for the most part they are sitting still and waiting for somebody to start them. They want to reach success in literature, in business or professional life, but they want to swing high from the first—to be pushed by someone's money, strength or name. Those who are really willing to begin with their feet on the ground and start themselves are comparatively few.

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). THE "SEVENTY WEEKS" OF DANIEL

CHAS. A. GOSS

By the prophet Jeremiah, a captivity of seventy years was foretold as a punishment to befall Judah for idolatry and sins (Jer. 25:8-12). Near the closing year of this captivity in Babylon, in the first year of Darius, the prophet Daniel understood from his study of this prophecy that the seventy years was near its close. This period of seventy years extends from the first destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kings 26:10; Jer. 25:1) to the edict of Cyrus for the return of the Jews to their own land and the rebuilding of the temple (Ezra 1:2); that is, from B. C. 605 to the end of B. C. 536. Before considering the "seventy weeks" period in its relation to Jewish restoration it may give us a better apprehension of the divine "times and seasons" and of God's manner of measuring the great periods of history to consider the seventy years which were just ending when the prophet foretold the period of "seventy weeks" of their restoration.

In the prophecy of Jeremiah there is no element of symbolism concerning the seventy years. Seventy years is called seventy years, hence it is reasonable to interpret the words of the prophet literally, just as we see that Daniel did. Seventy years is the normal meaure of human life, and is the day of which symbolic prophetic periods are multiples. Astronomically, it is a soli-lunar cycle, in which the solar years gains on the calendar-lunar year of 360 days, one entire year.

It is also interesting to note that the period of seventy yeaar enters into the reckoning of the duration of the great empires, though not mentioned in that connection. Thus the Babylonian empire stood from the era of Nabonassar, 747 B. C., to the capture of Babylon by Cyrus, 538 B. C.=210 solar years, or 3x70=210 years. The seventy years of the Jewish captivity was almost exactly the last third of the period named. And the whole existence of Babylon would be seven prophetic months. The period of the second great empire was also measured by the same method, but on the lunar or inferior scale of years, compatible with its inferior glory as compared with its great predecssor, Babylon. The Persian kingdom of "silver" endured 210 lunar years from B. C. 538 to B. C. 334—three times seventy years, or seven months of years. So the Grecian, or third universal kingdom, was also measured by the same scale, enduring 280 lunar years (i. e., from the conquest of the Persian empire, B. C. 334, to the capture of Jerusalem by Pompey, the Roman, B. C. 63), or 4x70=280 lunar years. And as showing the supreme rule of the number seven, we note that the combined duration of three, the Babylonian, Persian and Grecian, was 707 lunar years, i. e., 217, 210 and 280, respectively, in the order named.

Anti-typical Babylon is twice said to endure forty and two prophetic months, during which the symbolic holy city and temple court are trodden under foot (Rev. 11:13).

From the ninth chapter of Daniel we read of "seventy weeks" being determined to restore and build Jerusalem and for the coming of Messiah the Prince. The event itself proved that it was to be weeks of years, not of days. Had it been foretold, as was the seventy years captivity, in literal language, it is obvious that the fulfillment might have been interfered with. It is hardly supposable that the predicted "cutting off" of the Messiah would have taken place had the ambiguity of the language not existed. But this period was not composed of elements unknown to Jewish history; it was simply ten of their jubilee period of forty-nine years expressed in a different way. A peculiar fact in their history is that it had figured in other epochs, as for instance, from Abraham to the entrance into the land of Canaan under the leadership of Joshua was "seventy weeks," or about 490 years; and from this date, B. C. 1585-1586, to the beginning of Saul's reign as the first king of Israel (B. C. 1096) was also another ten jubilees, 490 years, covering the period of the days of the judges and Samuel, styled the Theocracy. From the day of Saul, the first king, to the capture of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnebzzar, B. C. 606, in the reign of the last independent Jewish king, was another period of "seventy weeks," or 490 years. By this we see that the seventy weeks mentioned in Daniel's prophecy of the restoration was the fourth in a series of such periods dating from the days of Abraham and reaching to the coming of Messiah the Prince. Similarly, we note that the seventy years of the captivity was the third such period in the history of the kingdom of Babylon, dating from the era of Nabonassar. It is quite worthy of note that the period of 490 years, though so clearly indicated as being used by divine wisdom and foreknowledge in measuring epochs of history throughout Israel's existence, as we have seen, yet is never clearly and specifically mentioned in any case.

These recurrences are mentioned to impress upon the minds of all readers that God has a plan and a perfect system of times and seasons, and that they are just as certain and unchangeable as are the movements of the great orbs which revolve through space in endless cycles. He has made no miscalculations in the past; will make none in the future. All these periods go from a certain time to a certain time, and no breaks occur in the regular sequence of years and events.

But we are told by a certain school of writers that God ceased counting time for Israel during the last week of the seventy, and they tell us that the events of this last week of the prophecy remain to be fulfilled as the closing events of the present age. To find place for such an impossible supposition or theory they announce that "God stopped counting time for Israel" at that time. "Israel's clock stopped," say these befogged interpreters, and they inform us that at the close of this gospel age it will be "started again," and the prince that is to come and destroy the city (verse 26) will come in the person of a false Messiah, in whom we must believe all the prophecies relating to "the man of sin" and "Anti-Christ" are to be accomplished in the space of seven literal years.

We would as readily believe that God had stopped the sun and moon in their circling orbits as that he had stopped reckoning the time, which from the beginning of time had been measured by their movements. Did God stop reckoning time in any of the other periods of "seventy weeks" which have been so evidently a part of his plan in dealing with Israel in all past ages? No, we find no such vagary in the divine system of counting time. His system of "times and seasons" does not require that the great break of nineteen centuries should occur between the sixty-ninth and seventieth "week" of Daniel's prophecy, nor is any break indicated at all. The "weeks" must run on in unbroken sequence to a consistent end.

"And after three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself" (Dan. 9:26). By reading the previous verse we have no difficulty in seeing that this was the seventieth week, for the commandment restore and to build Jerusalem unto Messiah is said to be a period of 7x62-69 weeks, till he shall have come. Now, as there is but one more week to complete the seventy, is it not self-evident that when the Angelic Revelator resumed speaking of the Messiah at the beginning of verse 27 he could be speaking of no other week than the one remaining of the seventy, which he had not as yet expounded to Daniel?

To the coming and public ministry of Messiah was 483 solar years from the command to rebuild the city, which edict was made B. C. 457, and extends to 27 A. D. As is well known, the Messiah was cut off in the midst of the week of years following after the date above indicated, in other words, in A. D. 29.

Now, as we know that it was not intended that Daniel's contemporaries should fully understand this prophecy, and the angel commanded him to close up and seal the words, it is evident that some method was to be used which would give the people ground for hope, and leave room for doubt and skepticism at the same time. Events must be revealed and the time be left so veiled and uncertain that the actual fulfillment was necessary to positively establish the truth. By thus reckoning we see how that order or continuity of the story must be broken or interrupted to prevent a correct interpretation by those of that generation who were actors in it. If we have grasped the idea, now let us, after reading in verse 26 the words, "Messiah shall be cut off, but not for himself," just regard the balance of that verse as parenthetic, and drop down to verse 27, read right along to the end of it, and then the portion of verse 26 regarding "the people of the prince that shall come and shall destroy the city and the sanctuary"—the order of events as they occur in fulfillment.

God's mercy lingered forty years after his Son, the Messiah, had been cut off and rejected by the nation of the Jews. The wicked city of Nineveh had repented when God had spoken by the mouth of the prophet Jonah, saying: "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown." The records says: "The people of Nineveh believed God, and proclaimed a feast," etc. But Jerusalem did not believe nor repent, even when forty years of grace was allowed. How well does history confirm the truth which Jesus himself had declared to that city? He said: "The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment, with this generation, and shall condemn it; because they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here" (Matt. 12:41). History tells us how the Romans under Titus began in A. D. 66 the war which brought destruction upon the city of Jerusalem in A. D. 70 (the war continuing until A. D. 73), forty years after the crucifixion of the Messiah. Some futuristic interpreters, by assuming that a personal Anti-Christ or false Messiah is referred to as "He who shall confirm the covenant with many for one week, and in the midst of the week cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease," have built up a fanciful interpretation of other scriptures, and force them to serve as a bolster to their flimsy theory. They assume that Anti-Christ is to make a "covenant" with the Jews, who receive him as their Messiah; then break his covenant with them, take away the daily sacrifice, and persecute them for their religion. They discuss "Anti-Christ's seven years' covenant with the Jews," as though it were as well established a truth as God's covenant with Israel on Sinai.

The prophecy of Dan. 9 does not allude to Anti-Christ, past and future, but is entirely relative to the first advent of Christ, his rejection and death, and the Roman destruction of Jerusalem that followed. Regarded from a historical standpoint and as a fulfilled prohpecy, it is one of the strongest evidences of the Messiahship of Jesus of Nazareth and of the inspiration of the scripture. Futurist teachers are guilty of tampering with a great fundamental prophecy, and by applying the same to a fanciful creation of their own minds bid us look for a personal Anti-Christ to arise and fulfill this great prophecy. Given at the close of the seventy years of captivity in Babylon, it gave under its veil of symbolism the duration of the restored nation of Israel up to the advent of Messiah. It foretold that within 490 years from the date of the decree to restore and to build Jerusalem the long-predicted supreme atonement for sin was to be accomplished by him, reconciliation for iniquity effected, and everlasting righteousness be brought in; that vision and prophecy should be sealed up, and the Most Holy anointed.

This period was also subdivided in three parts: 7 weeks, 62 weeks, and 1 week=49 years, 434 years, and 7 years. The rebuilding of the city and re-establishment of the Jewish polity would occur in 49 years, or "seven weeks;" 434 more would elapse, and the Messiah and Prince would appear. At some time within the seventieth week, or last seven years of the period, Messiah must be cut off; but not for himself. This prophecy further tells us how Jerusalem and the temple would subsequently and in consequence be destroyed, and a flood of foreign invasion overflow the land, and that, though "cut off," the Messiah would confirm the covenant with many during that week—the last week of the seventy, in the midst of which he would "cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease." Jerusalem, then desolate, should so remain until the judgment predetermined should fall upon the desolator. That judgment is now being executed upon the people and nation of the false prophet, and the eastern "little horn" power will be utterly wasted and driven out. How was it in the past?

All was accomplished with exactness. The edict to build and restore was issued to Artaxerxes, and Ezra and Nehemiah were the two great restorers of the Jewish polity and religion. Their joint rule or administration was about "seven weeks," or 49 years; the wall and street were built in troublous times. After a lapse of 434 years more Messiah the Prince did appear, and his words were: "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand." "He came to his own (people), and they received him not." He was "cut off" from the land of the living, but not for himself. The next scene shows the Roman soldiers—"the people of a prince that shall come" (Titus); they did as the prophecy foretold and destroyed both city and sanctuary, and swept away the people as by a flood. But the Messiah's work had been done he did confirm the covenant with "many," though the nation rejected him and it. What covenant did he confirm? He answers: "This is my blood of the new covenant, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." He is the "mediator of the new covenant." Do we have any need to explain here the relation or bearing the "cutting off" of Messiah has to the blood of the new covenant confirmed or ratified and made effective thereby?

The "prince that shall come" is easily descriptive of Titus (verse 26), but the pronoun "he" in verse 27 can not possibly apply to him, nor yet to a future Anti-Christ. If it does not apply to Titus —he being the one referred to in verse 26—how are we going to find any room for Anti-Christ? Impossible! It is Messiah who alone can be said to have caused the sacrifice and oblation to cease, and who made the city desolate on account of the "overspreading of abominations." Refer again to Deut. 28; 29:21-28, and see how exactly they were receiving the judgments written of them. In Jesus' own words: "The blood of all the prophets which was shed from the foundation of the world may be required of this (that) generation, from the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, which perished between the altar and the temple. Verily I say unto you, It shall be required of this generation" (Luke 11:50, 51).

HOW THE GOSPEL WAS REDISCOVERED IN THIS AGE

Darkness had covered the earth and gross darkness the people. So-called Christianity had descended to about its lowest ebb in the middle ages. The dominant Catholic power had absorbed everything it could from the heathen world and still retain the name Christian. Morality had sunk to a very low condition. Then God raised up two great champions in the beginning of the sixteenth century to bring the scriptures to the knowledge of the (so-called) common people, viz., Luther in Germany, and Tyndal in England. Luther is a much better known character than Tyndal; but all English-speaking people are much more indebted to Tyndal for an opportunity to read the scriptures in their own language than to Luther. He was educated both at Oxford and Cambridge universities; he was from his youth very religiously inclined. He resolved when quite young to translate the New Testament from the Greek into English. He was born in 1484, the year following the birth of Luther. The Lord was preparing champions to destroy the Catholic power. Tyndal went to London in 1523 to fulfill his long-cherished desire to translate the New Testament into English. Failing to get any help there with his great work, he went to Germany in 1524. There he published his translation of the New Testament in 1525 or 1526, and sent it to England. There it met with the most bitter opposition from the clergy. Bishops bought up all the copies they could get hold of and burned them; but the people were eager to get them and many copies got into circulation, notwithstanding all the efforts of the government and the clergy to destroy it. Tyndal's version is practically our New Testament of today, known as King James' translation. The so-called translators practically adopted Tyndal's translation; the spelling was the main thing they altered. Tyndal also translated the Pentateuch and the book of Jonah. In 1533 he took up his abode at Antwerp, where, in 1534 and 1535, he published two revised editions of the New Testament. In 1535 he was seized by the old Mother of Harlots, cast into prison, and, after a confinement of sixteen months, was strangled, and his body burned.

He, in common with Luther, saw clearly that the immortality of the soul was a heathen doctrine, and he denounced it. Tyndal wrote: "In putting departed souls in heaven, hell and purgatory you destroy the argument wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection. What God doeth with them, that shall we know when we come to them. The true faith putteth the resurrection, which we are warned to look for every hour. The heathen philosophers, denying that, did put that the souls did ever live. And the Pope joineth the spiritual doctrine of Christ and the fleshly doctrine of philosophers together—things so contrary that they can not agree. . . . And because the fleshly-minded Pope converted into heathen doctrine, therefore he corrupteth the scriptures to establish it. . . . If the souls be in heaven, tell me why they be not in as good a case as the angels be? And then what cause is there for a resurrection?

Luther also wrote against the immortality of the soul. He said: "I permit the Pope to make articles of faith for himself, such as the soul is the substanital form of the human body, the soul is immortal, with all those monstrous opinions to be found in the Roman dunghill of decretals; that such his faith is, such may be his gospel, such his disciples and such his church; that the mouth may have meat suitable for it, and the dish a cover worthy of it."

Sir Thomas Moore took up the defense of the soul's immortality against Luther, and wrote: "What shall he care how long he liveth in sin that believeth Luther, that he shall after this life feel neither good nor ill in body nor soul until the day of doom?" To this Tyndal replied: "Christ and his apostles taught no other, but warned to look for Christ's coming again every hour, which coming again ye believe will never be, therefore have ye feigned that other merchandise."

Pope Leo X., who died in 1521, called what is known as the fifth council of the Lateran. At that council this decree was issued: "Whereas, some have dared to assert concerning the reasonable soul that it is mortal, we, with the approbation of the sacred council, do condemn and reprobate all who assert that the intellectual soul is mortal, seeing that the soul is not only truly and of itself essenitally the form of the human body, as it is expressed in the cannon of Pope Clement V., but likewise immortal; and we strictly prohibit all from dogmatizing otherwise; and we decree that all who adhere to the like erroneous assertion shall be shunned and punished as heretics."

It would appear from this decree there were quite a number at that time who were denying the immortality of the soul. Luther's followers and admirers keep very quiet about his belief on this matter, and have quietly gone back to wallow in the Roman dunghill; and the churches which believe and teach this heathen doctrine may well be called the daughters of the Mother of Harlots. Very few of the early so-called reformers, as far as I can trace, were willing to discard this heathen dogma. Calvin wrote hotly against those who dared to question that the soul was inherently immortal. He asserted that the soul is wide awake in a state of consciousness through the whole night of death. He called his opponents babblers, madmen, dreamers, drunkards, etc., and that settled the whole question as far as so-called Protestantism was concerned.

Luther was summoned to the Diet of Worms to answer for his heresy. He secured a safe conduct from Charles V., and went much against the wishes of his friends, who tried earnestly to dissuade him from going, but he told them he would go to Worms, "although there were as many devils in it as there were tiles on the housetops." He went, and came out safely from among the devils, but he had to go into hiding for quite a while afterward, for the vicious old harlot would have burned him if she could have got her hands on him after that safe conduct had expired.

On his return from Worms he was seized, at the instigation of his friend, the Elector of Saxony, and safely lodged in the old castle of Worthburg. He remained there about a year. While there he translated the New Testament into German, thus placing within the reach of all Germans the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, as Tyndal had done for English-speaking people. If it were not for false doctrines instilled into the youth it would not be a hard matter, it seems to me, for any intelligent person to come to a knowledge of the gospel by simply studying the teachings of the New Testament alone; but very few are apparently able to do it. The only one I have ever been personally acquainted with who was able to do it alone was my own father, and he had no schooling, but, Scotchman-like, he had large caution. He was afraid to tell of his discovery for fear of being called an infidel; but after I sent him literature on the subject he came to London, where I was, four hundred miles from his home, to be baptized. After that he had no hesitation in spreading the gospel. It took me, however, over two years of hard work after the subject had been forcibly brought to my notice, before I could rid myself of many of the heathen ideas I had been taught in my childhood. My great difficulty was, Could it be possible that all these great and learned men were wrong, and had been misleading people through the ages? At last, when I became convinced that such was the case, I resolved that I would find out, if possible, when, how and by whom the gospel had been perverted; and I have been engaged in that quest for over fifty years. I have found that an immense number of those reputed to have been the great teachers of truth have been pervertors of the gospel.

THE STUDY OF PROPHECY

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy; Whereunto ye do well that ye take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place until the day dawn and the day star arise (Jesus, the bright and morning star), in your hearts knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prohpecy came not of old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the holy spirit" (2 Pet. 1:19-21). Peter informs us that the word of prophecy is something that is "sure," and can be relied upon; it is a solid rock that will never disappoint us. But says one: "I have not found it so. I find nothing over which theologians wrangle and dispute and differ as they do over prophecy. Why is it so?"

The answer is, the "private interpretation" of men alone are responsible for the differences that exist at the present time. There is too much interpreting done; one interprets one way, another in some other way. Prophecy largely interprets itself. Let me give a few samples. In Daniel 7 Daniel had a vision concerning four beasts, "a lion, bear, leopard, and the fourth a nondescript beast, which had ten horns." Now notice the divine interpretation (verses 17, 18): "These great beasts which are four, are four kings that shall arise out of the earth." Verse 19: "Then I would know the truth of the fourth beast." Verse 23: "The fourth beast shall be fourth kingdom upon earth." Verse 20: "And of the ten horns that were in his head." Verse 21: "And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise." Dan. 8:3: "Then I lifted up mine eyes and saw, and behold, there stood before the river a ram which had two horns, and the two horns were high, but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last." Verse 20: "The ram which thou sawest having two horns are the kings of Media and Persia."

See verse 5: "Behold, and the goat came up from the west on the face of the whole earth and touched not the ground, and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes." See verse 21: "And the rough goat is the king of Grecia, and the great horn that is between his eyes is the first king."

See Rev. 1:12-16: "I saw seven golden candlesticks; and in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like the Son of Man. * * * And he had in his right hand seven stars," etc. See verse 20: "The mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches, and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches." What are the seven churches? See verse 4: "John to the seven churches which are in Asia."

See Rev. 17:7: "And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman and of the beast that carried her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns."

See verse 9: "The seven heads are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth. And there are seven kings; five are fallen, and the other is not yet come, and when he cometh he must continue a short space. * * * And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings which have received no kingdom as yet."

I might give much more, but space will not permit. There is no difficulty whatever in understanding the above if the "private interpretations" of men are rejected.

The book of Revelations is far from being a "mystery;" all the mystery there is in it is man-made. It is a plain message of God to his "servants." It is difficult to make these things plain in a few disconnected papers, so I have concluded to issue a 96-page book, bound in cloth, to cost 25 cents each. In order to meet the cost of production it will be necessary for each one to pledge for as many copies as they may feel able. Kindly let me hear from you at your earliest convenience. Address: W. H. INCARNATION, PRE-EXISTENCE

J. AUGUST SMITH

The theory of incarnation is a doctrine borrowed from ancient mythology, and is the foundation stone upon which is built the doctrine of a personal immortal-soul entity in man, and its transmigration from the human body at death into another body of some kind—human, fish, reptile or fowl.

Incarnation is a heathen legend, and in order to sustain the doctrine of an existent, personal, prehuman body Christ, the theory of incarnation has been tacked in to so-called Christian belief. But the term incarnation is not found in the Bible, and therefore the dogma of incarnation should be rejected by all believers in the holy scriptures; for whatever can not be expressed in Bible language is not a Bible doctrine. That Jesus had a personal existence prior to his begettal, and his incarnation and reception by Mary as her Son at his birth, is but an importation of a heathen idea.

Incarnation has a bad origin; it is anti-Christian, and leads to many harmful and unscriptural theories, especially that of an immortal-soul entity in man; and therefore the doctrine of incarnation should be renounced, abandoned by all who accept and believe the Christian Bible. The babe of Bethlehem was and is the Christ of God; the body Jesus was and is the begotten Son of God. This babe, this begotten Son of God, had no personal, independent existence until the day the angels announced his birth to the shepherds. Jesus could not, therefore, have had a prior, independent, personal existence.

The Christian has not an incarnated Son of God as his mediator with God, but a "begotten" Son of God (John 3:16). Jesus was "begotten," he was "born," he was "eight" days old, he was "twelve" years and "thirty" years old. Jesus is not a twin God from the beginning, always existing like his Father the Almighty himself.

But what does the teaching of Christ's pre-existence mean? That he existed before he existed! Strange logic! Christ existed before he existed; wonderful discovery! Yet this is the belief of the Catholic and Mormon churches, and also believed by many Protestants.

The term pre-existence is not found in the Bible, and, as before stated, whatever can not be expressed in Bible language is not a Bible doctrine. After the resurrection of Jesus he said: "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself; handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have" (Luke 24:39). The flesh and bones of the Son of God is Jesus himself; he is not an incarnated, pre-existent God who made the world; Jesus is the begotten Son of God. Jesus was begotten—not incarnated. He died for man; he rose again from the dead, and this same Jesus that ascended to heaven shall return again (Acts 1:11) to judge the world and to reign as King over all the earth when it is made new.—Messiah's Advocate.

Bigoted, egotistic people are the ones who get insulted quickest.

"Let no man deceive you with vain words." If ever there was a time when we should take heed to this injunction it is now. "Because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the disobedient." Cling to the Bible, my brother.

Don't be alarmed when there is impending gloom or when there are evil forebodings. The enemy will try to deceive the very elect. God is at the helm; he will safely guide and protect you if you trust him. "He abideth faithful."

The brazen serpent (Numb. 21:8-9) is a type of Christ "made sin for us" (Jno. 3:14, 15; 2 Cor. 5:21). Look to him and live, ye serpent-bitten humanity!

Sunday, June the first, was a blessed day in Cleveland. Two candidates, Mrs. Rowe and Mr. George P. Alldridge, were obedient to the faith. Both cases are of unusual interest.

Sister Rowe has been associated with different bodies who had a few items of the truth, but who knew not the truth as a grand harmonious system of the "things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ." These purblind "fellow-servants" could not satisfy her with fragments of truth distorted and exaggerated, so, desiring "the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," the providence of God sent her to the fellowship of "the brethren" (Rev. 6:11).

The case of Bro. Alldridge is possibly more remarkable still. In the fellowship of the Russellite fraternity for the past twenty years, an indefatigable worker in that body as elder and minister, his acute mind became restive as the fatuous theories of that befogging system were apprehended. His good and honest heart led him to become a truth-seeker. Thus while God was preparing him for his message of salvation, in his good providence he was also preparing the means "to open his eyes, turn him from darkness to light, from the power of satan to God, that he might receive the remission of sins, and inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith." Sister Chappele, a neophyte in the truth, was honored of God in reaching him with the message of life. She placed a book in the library dealing with the truth in some of its elements. This Bro. Alldridge found: a small thing, doubtless, yet it led him out of the bewildering, mind-unhinging theories of the "fellow-servants" into the heart-satisfying truth of God's revelation and the fellowship of "the brethren." The Lord make this dear sister and brother happy and useful in the work of the truth.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Restitution:

I wish to write and thank Sister Wince for her article under the caption, "Pray for your ministers." As she says, we go out in a cold world and "fight with men like beasts," and have many trials; and oh how comforting to know that somewhere some brother or sister is praying for us! Paul said he prayed for the brethren. Who can tell the good that may result from such a religious invocation? It is a duty, and duty performed has its reward.

I hope every one of God's people will perform this most pleasant duty. Don't let us neglect it. Let us all be up and doing.

One who needs your prayers, and who prays for you. ALMUS ADAMS.

Dear Restitution:

I read with interest Bro. Hogarth's comments on the judgment. He says the first one is at the coming of Christ. I would like very much if Bro. Hogarth will in The Restitution give us, in a few plain words, supported by statements of scripture, what judgment Peter refers to in 1 Peter 4:17: "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God." What judgment is this? When does it begin, and who is it that is judged, Bro. Hogarth?

Yours in the work, O. J. ALLARD.

BEREAN DEPARTMENT

"Our Savior"

In the coming of our Savior we have the glorious hope, the price of which can not be equaled with gold.

And how thankful we should be for what God has done for us, and purposed concerning us. How should our hearts soften at the contemplations before us, and swell with emotions of love toward so great a benefactor. How we should be concerned to find out the will of such a friend and seek to approve ourselves unto him!

How cheerfully should we hail him as the chief among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely!

How we should do his gracious commands, and keep his loving counsels. In him is our strength, our hope and our joy. He is not ashamed to be our Savior, and surely we should not be ashamed to be his people, looking for that blessed hope, his appearing. Let us then give ourselves to him, which is our reasonable service. Let us fully identify ourselves with Jesus, knowing that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. Let us not forget that "every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as the Savior is pure;" and let us remember it is "only unto them that look for him" that "he shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

Yours in Christ, LILLIAN DAUNTLES.

TESTS OF CHARACTER

Search me, try me, lead me (Psalm 139:23, 24); God tests us by the spirit and the word (1 Cor. 4:5; 18).

1. God commands us to love our enemies; also to pray for those who despitefully use us (Matt. 5:44).

2. God commands us to not resist him that is evil (Matt. 5:39-42).

3. He commands us to overcome evil with good (Rom. 12:21).

4. Do you love Christians as the Christ loved you (John 15:12)?

5. Are you willing to lay down your life for the brethren (1 John 3:16)?

6. "In honor," do you prefer others to yourself (Rom. 12:10)?

7. Have you learned to be content in whatsoever state you are (Phil 4:11)?

8. Do you think more highly of yourself than you ought to think (Rom. 12:3)?

9. Have you enough love to stand the following tests (1 Cor. 13:4-8):

(a) "Love suffereth long, and is kind, never displaying the least resentment.

(b) "Love envieth not;" that is, she does not crave what others have.

(c) "Love vaunteth not itself;" that is, she is not rash, forward or self-assertive.

(d) She "is not puffed up;" that is, she has no opinion of herself.

(e) "Doth not behave herself unseemly," or unbecomingly, but is always courteous and obliging.

(f) She "seeketh not her own." What is truly her own she holds with a slack hand. She gives to him that asketh of her, and takes joyfully the spoiling of her goods.

(g) "Is not provoked." Treat her as badly as you may, she is not ruffled in the least.

(h) She "takes no account of evil." She has no memorandum book in which to record insults or outrages, nor does she have any memory to recall the evil done to her.

(i) She "rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth." Truth and love are born companions, and will remain so.

(j) "Beareth all things"—all that falls to her lot, and that, too, without the least impatience.

(k) She "believeth all things;" that is, all the words of truth.

(l) She "hopeth all things;" that is, she puts the best construction on all things, and sees the silver lining in every cloud.

(m) "Endureth all things." Nothing is horrible enough to excite her to impatience. She trusts patiently under every burden, knowing that it is one of the "all things" that work for her good.

(n) Love "never faileth."

Ask yourself this question: Do I measure up to all of these requirements? If you find that you fail in any particular, just know that God has something more to do in you.—Selected, Leota B. Hanson.

In the death of Sister Nellie Congleton, one has gone from our midst who will be greatly missed. She was Second Vice-President of the Illinois Berean organization, and President of the society at Moriah. One so true and faithful in all her duties, so devoted to any work in the Master's cause, one whom it seems we could not well spare; but "God's ways are not our ways," and, though we can not understand why these things must be, yet we can trust Him who doeth all things well, and, "Sometimes when all life's lessons have been learned, the things o'er which we grieve with lashes wet will flash before us out of life's dark night, and we shall see how all God's plans were right, and we shall say that he knew best."

In a letter written a few weeks before her death she spoke regretfully of the fact that the Moriah society was forced to discontinue its meetings on account of so much sickness in the community, saying how helpful the lessons had been, and that she was looking forward to an early date for meeting again, speaking hopefully of the work before her in the interest of the society. So we would say to you who are members of that little band, you can do honor to her memory in no better way than to take up the work she has left behind, and with God's help carry it forward in the way you know she would wish it done.

Let us all strive to be as faithful and true as our dear sister was, that we may meet her in that kingdom where partings shall never come.

One who knew and loved her.

OBITUARY

F. C. Myers, of Pomona, Cal., fell asleep in Jesus at his home on Tuesday, May 27, 1913. He was born in Ohio, January 25, 1847; married to Miss Minerva Wright, of Plymouth, Ind., July 6, 1870. Three children survive—Mrs. P. D. Nelson, of Fremont, Neb; Mrs. A. W. Oliver, of Merced, Cal., and G. A. Myers, who with his wife made his home with his parents. They and a loving wife are left to mourn his loss.

He was baptized into the saving name in 1880, then moved to the state of Nebraska. After residing there several years he moved to California, then moved back to Indiana. But, after having tasted of the sweets of the salubrious climate of California, he could not stand life in Indiana. A few years ago he returned to Pomona, where he lived until his death by apoplexy. His demise was a shock to all, as they had anticipated no serious illness, although he had been ailing for some time. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer upon the subject of the resurrection, after which we laid him to sleep in the beautiful Pomona Cemetery to wait the call of the Master.

AN OPEN LETTER

My Dear Friend:

You have asked me to give you my views on women voting. I apprehend from your words that you would like to know what my mind is as to what the scriptures teach on this subject. After thinking much on this question and searching the word of God, I would like to amend your question, "May women vote?" to this; "May saints (men and women) vote?" In other words, is voting on the affairs of this world sanctioned by the Bible?

My reason for changing the question is found in Gal 3:28: "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye (saints) are all one in Christ Jesus."

From this I take it that all commands of this kind are given jointly to men and women as members of one body, even Christ. Now, let us take up the question, Are saints allowed to vote on the affairs of this world"

First, what does the word vote imply? Webster gives as one definition: "The expression of a will or choice in which the person voting has an interest, in common with others, either in electing a man to office or in passing laws, rules, regulations, and the like." We may therefore make the question a little more comprehensive and ask: "Are saints allowed to have a voice in making laws, rules or regulations relating to this world, which the apostle Paul styles "the present evil world" (Gal. 1:4)? Peter says that Christ left us an example that we should follow (1 Pet. 2:21). Let us see, then, how Jesus stood as related to the governing (or law-making) of this world.

Turning to Luke 12:14 we find a certain man asking Jesus to decide a question of legal inheritance. Jesus' answer was: "Who made me a judge over you?" From Matt. 17:24-27 it seems that our Lord did not feel called upon to change, or try to change, what he plainly showed was an unjust law; he simply was subject (as the spirit commands) to the powers that be.

If it is right and lawful to give our time to the changing of what we call the bad laws of this world, or making new ones, why did not Jesus leave us the example? He answers in John 18:36: "My kingdom is not of this world." We see from these scriptures that the Lord refused to become entangled in any way in the government of this world, because he says "My kingdom," or time of ruling, is not of this world or age. We ask, then, what was Jesus' mission in this world? You find his answer in Luke 4:43: "I am sent to preach the kingdom of God." Now looking to the example left us by our Head, we have established two facts.

First, Jesus did not take any part in regulating the affairs of this world by electing men or making laws in common with others (which Webster defines as voting).

Second, he himself said his mission in this world was to preach (or teach) the things concerning the kingdom of God.

This is the example which Jesus left his brethren, and which the holy spirit bids us follow.

Now, let us see what is the direct command to the household of faith. In John 17:16 we find this statement: "They (the saints) are not of this world, even as I (Christ) am not of the world." From this we judge that our relation to the world is the same as was our Lord's. See John 17:18: "As thou (the Father) has sent me into the world, even so have I sent them into the world." For what was Jesus sent? We have seen —to teach the things of the kingdom of God. If you will read the 20th verse of this same chapter you will see that this petition was not for the eleven alone, but for all saints who may come into the belief of the truth.

What is the first qualification of a voter? Answer, citizenship. Are saints citizens of this world? Let the word of God answer (Eph 2:6): "God has raised us up together and made us sit together with Christ in heavenly places." Philippians 3:20: "For our conversation is in heaven." Revised version: "Our citizenship is in heaven."

Let us look at the father of the faithful. Hebrews 11:8-16; by these scriptures we see the ancient worthies confessed themselves to be strangers and pilgrims in this world. If strangers and pilgrims, then, they were not a part of the world. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed (Gal. 3:29), so are strangers and pilgrims in this order of things.

Suppose men came from England, France, Germany, or any foreign country, to the United States of America; they could not vote. They might live a whole lifetime in this country, but they could not vote, because they are aliens. Now, if our citizenship is in the kingdom of God, we are aliens to the governments of this world. Paul says in Gal. 6:14: "The world is crucified (dead) unto me by the cross of Jesus Christ, and I (am dead) unto the world." Again he says, in Romans, that if we have died to sin, we are alive to a new order of things. We have forsaken the old order (this present evil world), and have given allegience to the things of the world to come. Now, listen to Paul in Eph. 2:12: Addressing the saints, he tells them that at the time they were outside of Christ they were alien from the commonwealth of Israel. Why? Because they were the citizens of the world. But when they have come into the Anointed One they are no more aliens, but citizens of the commonwealth of Israel. Now, what must of necessity follow? Why, they are now aliens of the world, and have no more right to meddle in the law-making of this world. This is incontrovertible, because no man can serve two masters. No man can be a citizen of two countries at the same time. It seems to me this passage alone ought to forever settle the question.

Another thing. The spirit expressly says: "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." When a saint attempts to help make the world's laws is he not yoked with and working with unbelievers—which God forbids? You say, "Ought we not to vote for the best person?" Now, even if our allegience was given to this present evil world, how do we know who is the best person? We can not discern the thoughts and intents of the heart. Facts have shown us that many who have been the loudest in promises of reform have, when voted into office, failed entirely to keep their promises. The Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and setteth up in them whomsoever he will (Daniel 5:21). He does not always set them over the "best man," for sometimes he chooses the basest (Dan. 4:17). Be assured that whoever will work out the will of God will be chosen, whether good or bad. Then, as Bro. Thomas Wilson says: "Why not wait and see who is God's choice?" You might be voting against the man whom God chooses.

Does not the Bible say to search the scriptures, to meditate upon the word of God? Now, if you truly wish to vote for the "best man," you will need to "read up" on all sides of a question, you will need to think deeply upon these things, you will want to hear each political speaker to determine which is the nearest right. I ask you, will you have much time left to read the word of God, to meditate on the things promised, to meet with those who love the Lord? If you attend political clubs and lectures will you have much time to visit the sick, the fatherless and the widow in their affliction? Where will your mind be—upon the things of the world to come, or upon this present evil world?

Another thing: Does not the spirit expressly charge that the saints be of one mind, that they all speak the same things? How can this be when here is a brother who is a good democrat, here is another who is a republican, still another a prohibitionist, and so on. Do they all speak the same things, and are they are of the same mind? No, my friend; looking at this question on all sides, and in the light of scripture, it does seem to me that one who has given allegiance to the King of kings may not meddle in any way with the governments of this world. When we were baptized did we not die to the world? Did we not renounce our old master and give allegiance to our Lord? Did we not say: "We are strangers and pilgrims here; our inheritance is in a better world?" Why should we who are washed go back to the unclean thing of the world? Of course those aliens who come to our shores might renounce their own country and become citizens of this. Abraham might have gone back to the country out of which he was called, but he would have lost the heavenly inheritance. God forbid that any who have renounced the world should be entangled again therein.

And you say, "Shall we not work against sin?" Most assuredly. Take the social evil. No one can know whether to vote against segregation or for it would lessen the evil—but we can all go to the fallen one and point her to the Lamb of God, who will wash and cleanse and make her pure in his own precious blood; and if she will accept him, clothe her with the beautiful garments of salvation. We can not see just which would be the best way to deal with the saloon question—but we can all reach out a hand to lift up a fallen man and lead him to One who is mighty to save. This is the work our Lord left us to do in his absence.

One other thing I must notice. You called my attention to an astounding statement that "not even in the age to come is there any mention of women judging." Now, my sister, do not be troubled. Listen: "Know ye not that we (saints) shall judge angels? Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world" (Paul)? Are you a saint? Then judgment will be given into your hand in the age to come. To him who overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne (Jesus). Are you an overcomer? You shall reign with Christ. And the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom, and the dominion, and the power (Daniel). Are you a saint? Then to you will be given a kingdom, dominion, and power, in the age to come.

Now, two more quotations from God's word, and I am through. When they believed they were baptized, both men and women (Acts 8:12). When they were baptized they came into Christ, both men and women (Gal. 3:27), and there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus (Gal. 3:28)—one in the blessings and honor promised to the faithful.

You asked my understanding of the word of God on this question. It is this: That neither men nor women, as saints, can vote, and retain their citizenship in the age to come.

Yours in a desire for truth, and a place in the world to come, FLORA A. WOOD.

NOT "FOR," BUT "FROM"

J. J. SCHAUMBURG

Not long since a good brother with whom I was personally acquainted, and whom I love, wrote something in The Restitution regarding Eph. 3:15. He wrote it—as he always does—"for whom the whole family is named," etc. I have called the attention of this dear brother to his error several times, but so far I think I have accomplished little. It is so hard to dislodge error among us all. I will, however, try once more. If this fails to convince him, then he may go on, and I shall conclude that he has a theory to support, and that he will fight for it and try to sustain it at the expense of putting our pure English in the rack, and the Greek on the guillotine!!

1. The English doesn't read "for."
2. I know of no translations that read "for."
3. I know of no Greek manuscripts which read "for."
4. The Greek itself doesn't read "for."

Now to the Greek. It reads: "Ex hou pasa patria en ouranois," etc. This is from the New Testament by "Westcott and Hort." "Ex" is a preposition. Now turn to "Hadley's Greek Grammar," and on page 241 we read: "Prepositions used with only one case, viz., * * * the Genitive: anti, apo, ex, pro," etc. So "ex" is used with the Genitive case "only." That is why "ex" means "from," or "out of," because that sense goes with the Genitive case. But it never means "for."

But, to clinch it, go to the next word, "hou." It is the Greek relative pronoun, first person singular, masculine gender and Genitive case. It has an antecedent and the word is "patera" (father). The only rendering can be: "Out of, or from (as a child from its mother, out of), whom," etc. Anyone translating it "for" disregards all rules of Greek grammar and shows that he knows little of Greek. Every lexicographer gives its meaning: from, out of, as far as I can find.

WHAT ARE WE HERE FOR?

What are we here for, you and I,
As the long and wonderful days go by?
Each one stretching to us a hand
Filled with privilege high and grand;
Born of a meaning our lives must be,
God has his purpose in you and me.

We are here to sing of hope and cheer
When the skies are dark and the way seems drear;
We are here to be faithful and strong and true
To the work that lies to our hands to do;
To make for all that is noble and good,
And be true to the bonds of our brotherhood.

We are here, you and I, to pass along
Blossoms of kindness and gladness and song;
To give of our joy a sacred cup,
That the hearts around us may be brimmed up;
And to hold to the struggling where'er we stand
The comfort and strength of a helping hand.

This we are here for, you and I,
As the long and wonderful days go by;
Welcome them gladly, for each one brings
The duty and beauty of common things;
And as they unfold shall unfolded be God's own purpose in you and me.

L. M. MONTGOMERY.

SUNSHINE FURTHER ON

The mountain's base is wrapped in gray,
And chill and cheerless is the way,
As slow I tread the shadowed trail
That stretches upward still and pale.
But as I rise I see it glow
With what seemed mist and cloud below,
And soon I stand amid the dawn
Of warmth and sunshine further on.

O soul, that beats the shadowed air
About the base of summits fair,
Be brave and patient. Mists obscure
The lower way, but hold secure
The higher path. For those who rise
On toiling wings to clearer skies,
Tho' down below the way seems dull and gray,
Sunshine is on the summit day;
Thou, too, shalt stand amid the dawn
That deepens in sunshine further on.

PRAYER

O Lord, draw near to each of us, and let thy hand, laid upon our spirits, subdue and quicken us, calm and comfort us, lift us above our ordinary selves, and strengthen us to leave behind all that would interfere with our communication with thee at this time. We bless thee for every mercy received at thy hand, for all the good gifts so constantly, so punctually, so abundantly and so wisely showered upon us. And we pray thee that, more and more, we may be able to see God in all things, and all things in God, and that whatever lurking unbelief and rebellion against thee and thy will may hide in our hearts, it may be drawn on into the light, and we may be able to cast it out from us. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

FULFILMENT OF SCRIPTURE

Is scripture being fulfilled in our day? Why not? Are we living in an age of such vast activities among the children of men, and the great God, the author of all things, inactive? We think not.

Let us note the fulfillment of one scripture, at least, in our day. For more than thirty years I have had a certain passage in the Bible marked concerning the gathering of the Jews back to their own land, and during all these years I have been looking for that particular passage to be fulfilled. And no one can tell how glad I was at the beginning of this year to hear of its being fulfilled. "But," says the objector, "the Jews are never again to be gathered back to their old land as a people." Then I shall be sadly disappointed. But I do not believe this statement is true.

Before I notice the passage now being fulfilled in which I now greatly rejoice, I wish to prove from the Bible that the objector's statement is untrue. While there are many Bible passages that go to show that Israel will be (at some time) restored to their old land, to be "scattered no more," I will give only a few in order not to become tedious to the reader because of the length of this article. Isaiah 60:1: "Arise, shine, thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." Verse 10: "And the sons of strangers (other peoples and nations, as the Jews now are not mechanics) shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee; for in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favor have I shown mercy on thee." Verse 15: "Whereas thou hast been forsaken and hated, so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations." Verses 18-22: "Violence shall no more be heard in the land (when that time arrives), wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls salvation, and thy gates praise. The sun shall be no more thy light by day, neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; for the Lord shall be thin everlasting light, and the days of they mourning shall be ended (not ended yet). Thy people (the Jews) also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land forever, the branch of my planting (not the planting by some other power or nation), the work of my hand, that I may be glorified. * * * I, the Lord, will hasten it in his time."

Please read the whole of Isaiah 60; also Jer. 30:1-24; 31:39, 40: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the city shall be built to the Lord from the tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner, and the measuring line shall yet go forth over against it unto the hill of Gareb, and shall compass about to Goath. And the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes, and all the fields unto the brook Kidron, unto the corner of the horse gate toward the east shall be holy unto the Lord; it shall not be plucked up nor thrown down any more forever."

I have given a little proof from the scriptures as to the future restoration of the Jewish people. Now for the marked passage that is now being fulfilled, to which I alluded at the beginning. It is in Jer. 32:37-44, and reads as follows: "Behold, I will gather them out of all countries, whither I have driven them in my anger and in fury and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God; and I will give them one heart and one way, and that they may fear me forever, for the good of them, and of their children after them. And fields shall be bought in this land whereof ye say, It is desolate without man or beast; it is given unto the hands of the Chaldeans. Men shall buy fields for money, and subscribe evidences (deeds), and seal them, and take witnesses (as we do) in the land of Benjamin, and in the cities of Judah, and in the cities of the mountains, and in the cities of the valley, and in the cities of the south: for I will cause their captivity to return, saith the Lord."

The above passage is the one I long ago marked in my Bible, and since have been watching for its fulfillment—the beginning of the buying of that land, as above stated by the prophet some thousands of years in the past. This prophecy is being fulfilled in the year 1913.

The following quotation is clipped from a February or March number of The Restitution. Hear it:

"New York, February 25.—A special cable from Berlin to the Tageblatt brings the information that the Zionist organization has made a loan to Turkey. In return Turkey has agreed to make concessions which, it is declared, are of the utmost importance to the Zionist movement. One is this, the right to buy real estate in Palestine, giving full legal title to the purchaser in the way of deeds, which has hitherto been impossible."

Here is recorded the beginning of the fulfillment of Jer. 32:27-40, spoken centuriss ago.

God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps on the sea,
And rides upon the storm.

L. S. BRONSON.

A PRAYER FOR WISDOM
(2 Chron. 1:1-17)

1. Pity poor Solomon, called to be king over Israel! For kingship in those days meant something very different from kingship today. It was no limited monarchy, it had no constitutional bearing of responsibility by "advisers of the crown." It was sheer despotism. The king must himself make the laws and administer them, or, what was more general, act without laws upon his own responsibility. He had the power of life and death, and he also was constantly wagering his own life. Failure or weakness meant revolt and regicide. And to danger of this sort was added the gravest moral and spiritual danger. An eastern despot enters upon opportunities of personal enrichment and voluptuous luxury, which almost invariably undermine his character—as they did, indeed, the character of Solomon.

2. The distinction between the despot and the ordinary man is not, however, one of kind; it is rather one of degree. Every man is a despot in some little kingdom, and has in his hands the powers of life and death. The late Mr. W. T. Stead is a remarkable example of the way in which a private person may wield an immense influence. Beginning life as an errant boy, he became a small journalist, and then rapidly advanced, until his writings were as mighty as the decrees of powerful statesmen. He prevented, we are assured, a war between England and Russia. He forced the conquest of the Soudan. He helped to destroy Parnell. He created what has been called "Cape to Cairo Imperialism." His hand forced laws upon the statute books. Well, within a narrow circle every man exercises a similar influence. He affects the whole life of his children, he plays a part in the development of his village, he does something to frame public opinion. In his business, his pleasure and his civic life he impinges upon and molds the lives of others.

3. Wisdom is the faculty of choosing such a course of action as shall make our exercise of power tell for good and not for evil. Wisdom does not mean cleverness or thinking power. It is practical and not speculative, bent on deeds and not doctrines, something in which conscience plays a larger part than knowledge. An essential element in wisdom, then, is the power to come to a decision. The wise man is not the man with a mind always open in the agnostic sense. He comes speedily to determinations.

It is a mark of a good deal of our modern world that we are slow to decide. As Dr. Jowett says: "We lack moral verdicts. Our thinking trails on and on and on, for the mere delight of the intellectual process, and the verdict is indefinitely delayed. And so life is spent in a sort of royal commission which never reports, and in the flippant delay the moral slumber of the soul is deepened and intensified. Think up to an issue! * * Life is not an inquiry, but a crusade."

4. Jesus had this wisdom in the highest degree. Nothing is more marked than the assurance of his spirit, the absolute certainty with which he acted at the great crisis of his career. Already, when but a boy, he knew that this life work was to be about his Father's business. He dwelt in his home in early manhood content with obscurity, until at last the time had come for him to put his workshop in order, and to leave it; to bid his mother a fond farewell, and to set out upon his ministry. Thereafter he was constantly prepared for the doing of his Father's will. He knew when "his hour had come." He strode resolutely onward until he reached the road that led straight to the cross.

5. Obviously, the wisdom of Jesus is very different from worldly wisdom, for it sets very different values upon things. Worldly wisdom chooses those things which add worldly advantage—as "riches, wealth or honor," vengeance upon one's enemies, or long life for oneself. And it was the merit of Solomon that he put all these aside, and prayed for that heavenly wisdom which would enable him to perform his daily task of ruling right.

It is noteworthy that Solomon was promised also those very things which he did not ask. The question often arises in our minds whether godliness pays: whether the good man is not likely to have a bad time of it in this life. The true answer seems to be that whereas prosperity is not promised to the good man, in the long run prosperity is a sort of by-product of goodness. Truth, justice, sobriety and the rest of the active virtues, when practiced by a community, do enrich that community with all those things which Jehovah promised Solomon. "Those that seek first the kingdom are not allowed to starve" (Matt. 6:33).

NEWTON H. MARSHALL.

GRAND HARMONY

God's word is harmonious from beginning to end. I will give a few quotations from his word, and leave it to the reader to say whether it is in harmony with the popular theory (among heathen and Christian nations) that man has an immortal conscious entity (soul or spirit) that survives the body in death. Notice closely what part of man receives the threat of punishment and promises of reward.

God said to Adam in Gen. 2:17: "The day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." The margin says: "Dying, thou shalt die." Surely the threat was to the man that God said in Gen. 2:7 "became a living soul," for the immortal part could not die. It could not have the pnishment for the sin that has caused all of our sickness, sorrow, pain and death, from Adam until now. I hope the reader will pay strict heed to the few references that I give, so as to understand who or what part is addressed. Rev. 1:18: "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive for evermore." He said nothing about where his immortal soul was while he was dead, or whether there was such a thing. Mark 16:6: "We seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified; he is risen." How dare we say it was just the house, tabernacle or shell that bore all of the suffering, thus disputing ourselves in saying we believe that Christ died and rose again when we believe it was only the inferior part that died and rose again?

1 Cor. 15:17: "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins." The part that was buried is the part that we have interest in. See the parable in Luke 16:22, 23 (that popular teachers call literal): "The beggar died, and was carried by the angels into (not close by) Abraham's bosom (if literal, surely not very agreeable to Abraham); the rich man also died (not partly died), and was buried; and in hell lifted up his eyes, being in torments." There is not one hint of what became of the immortal souls of the beggar and the rich man when they died. Psalm 37:20: "The enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of the lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." This can not include the immortal part, for it is indestructable. Does it not seem hard for the mortal body to pay all the penalty for sin? Mal. 4:1: "The day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." The deathless entity escapes unhurt. Rom. 6:23: "The wages of sin is death." The immortal part commits no sin, for it can't die, so the mortal body, that God said in Gen. 2:7 "became a living soul," has to suffer all the penalty for sin, which is eternal death. Rev. 21:8: "The fearful, and unbeliving, and the abominable, and murderer, and whoremonger, and sorcerer, and idolaters, and all liars (which are many), shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death."

With due consideration, no one will say that the immortal soul has to suffer the death penalty for committing any or all of these sins, for immortality can not die. As the body of the wicked is destroyed, as shown here, their immortal souls have to flit around through all eternity without any bodies. We are not told in God's word how much pleasure they will have, but we have good reason to believe that they will not suffer any, nor enjoy life very much; for we are told in Psalms 146:4 that the very day a man dies his thoughts perish. We have no account of the immortal soul having any eyes, ears or brain; it weighs nothing, and according to God's word it is absolutely nothing. On account of the many places in the Bible that speak of the death of the soul, the hungry soul, thirsty soul, lean soul, weary or tired soul, souls bought, sold and eaten, souls being saved from death, souls sinning, souls dying, souls being killed with the edge of the sword, and such like passages, has caused some to quit speaking of the soul as a conscious entity apart from the body.

But as the saying is, "Some have jumped out of the frying pan into the fire" by saying that the spirit is immortal and conscious after the death of the body. They quote Eccl. 12:7: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return to God who gave it." They believe and appreciate what Solomon says in this verse; but have no use for what he says in chapter 3: 18-21, where he says, speaking of man, "that they might see that they themselves are beasts. For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; as the one dieth, so dieth the other. So that man (in death) hath no pre-eminence above a beast." Then if man has a part that never dies, so has the beast, or else the wise man told a falsehood. Let Job settle the matter (27:3): "All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils." The margin says, "The breath which God gave him," instead of the spirit of God, plainly showing that breath and spirit are one. Job 34:14: "If he (God) gather unto himself his spirit and his breath, all flesh shall perish together, and man (not his house) shall turn again unto dust." Now we can plainly see that Job and Solomon are in harmony with each other; if one made a blunder, so did the other.

One more thought concerning the spirit that returns to God. The spirit of all, not just the good men, or the breath that God breathed into man's nostrils, causing man to become a living soul, is the part that returns to God. I will say in conclusion to any that believe they have an immortal conscious entity that survives the body in death, if you cut out of your Bible all that is not in harmony with that belief you will have a ragged looking Bible. You will have nothing left on the nature of man except Gen. 3:4, where the serpent said unto the woman: "Ye shall not surely die." He is in harmony with popular belief. I don't believe him, for God says, in speaking of the devil: "He is a liar, and the father of it" (John 8:44). I have been a reader of the Bible for fifty years, and have found nothing that was in harmony with the statement of the serpent.

I wonder why a Bible reader will believe and teach that the principal part of man never dies, and thus makes God a liar instead of the serpent. But I think of Noe; a preacher of righteousness for one hundred and twenty years, and no one to believe except his own family. The people probably taught tradition (as they do nowadays), instead of God's word. See their awful fate in Matt. 24:27-29: 'So shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." All signs indicate that his coming is nearing. Dear ones, be not deceived; God is not mocked; his threats to the careless, and his grand and glorious promises to the faithful, are sure, and are addressed to the material part, the part that has substance; ears to hear, and brains to understand what God has promised, instead of the imaginary, immaterial part; that is of no more importance or use separated from the body (man) than steam is separated from the engine.

G. W. CALDER.

NATURE OF MAN

W. J. PECK

If we are led by the spirit of God, as Paul says we will crucify the old man. Now Paul tells us in Rom. 6:6: "Knowing this, that our old man is crucified." Now what does it mean to crucify the old man, and what is the old man?

As we are commanded to crucify the old man, we must learn what the old man is. The old man is the Adamic nature; the new man is the Christ nature. Now we will see if this is correct. Paul, in 1 Cor. 15:47, says: "The first man is of the earth, earthy. The second man is the Lord from heaven." Now, friends, which is the oldest, the first man or the second man? All will say, the first. Then as we are to crucify the old man, we must not mistake and crucify the new man. We are surely crucifying one or the other: if we are not crucifying Adam we are crucifying Christ.

In case I have not made it plain enough as to the first and second man, I will quote Paul in 1 Cor. 15:45: "So it is written. The first man Adam was made a living soul; the second Adam was made a quickening spirit." Adam is the old man. In the garden he lied, he stole. Eph. 4:22-26: "Put off concerning the former conversation, the old man, which is corrupt, and be renewed in the spirit of your mind, and that ye put on the new man which after God is created in righteousness. Wherefore put away lying; speak every man the truth." 28th verse; "Let him that stole steal no more."

Now, friends, this lying, stealing, and this coveting spirit of greed is the old man. We are told to crucify him. We are told to crucify and to put off and keep him off, and if he comes back to kill him again. We are told by some that old man is the body, and that the God part of us does not sin. Now, friends, that is a most dangerous doctrine. First, the body is not one of the men. In 2 Cor. 3:16 Paul says our outward man perisheth, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. As Paul grew stronger in the Lord, the Adamic nature became weaker. This is what Paul calls crucifying the old man. Second reason why we know the body is not one of the men is because the old man commits sin and the body commits no sin. The new man is Christ in the Christian; he commits no sin; so the old Adamic nature is the old man, the Christ nature is the new man.

"Well," says one, "I can't help sinning no more than I can prevent a bird from flying over my head." Well, you can keep the bird from building a nest in your hair and hatching a brood, can't you? It seems to me some are not even doing that. Well, if they are not they are not crucifying the old man, but they are crucifying Christ.

As some might think that I made a grave mistake when I said the body did not commit sin, I will quote 1 Cor. 6:18: "Every sin that a man commits is without the body." Webster says "without" is independent of. So, friends, every sin that you commit, remember that it is you that commits it, and not the old house, but the intellectual part, the part that God holds responsible, and so do we. We arrest a man for murder and put him in jail, but should he become insane before his trial what would the law do? Go on and try his house? I think not.

A LETTER TO A ROMAN CATHOLIC PRIEST

Dear Mr. S.: This letter is considered by me as a continuation of our little friendly talk on the cars last Sunday evening.

Were we out on a head-measuring expedition I would fear. But as we are both after the truth, I trust, we may with safety talk over these matters. No man is perfect. I am wondering if you will concede this. I think you will—at least as far as you and I are concerned.

Now, you asked me why I could not believe the Roman Catholic Church to be the true church of Christ. I gave you some reasons. I will now be more explicit. We had not much time on the train to be very definite.

I say that the Roman Catholic Church is not the true church, because—

First: She does not teach the doctrine of the Bible. To instance: She teaches the immortality of the soul. The Bible not only does not teach that doctrine, but its contradictions thereto may be read on every page from Genesis to the Apocalypse. The dogma of the immortality of the human soul had its origin in Egypt. It is not to be found in the oldest books of the Bible, such as the book of Job or the Pentateuch. Neither can any living person find it in any other part of the Bible, excepting Gen. 3:4, and the author of that was the serpent. Why? Because God Almighty never taught that doctrine.

Now, you said on the train to me that the Roman Catholic Church did not teach anything contrary to the Bible. Geo. M. Searle says that "the Catholic religion" is "thoroughly in accordance with scripture" (Plain Facts, p. 5). This is a Catholic book.

Now, the Catholic Bible (barring the Apocryphal books) uses the term immortal but once, and the word immortality but three times. I will give them to you: "Now to the king of ages, immortal," etc. (1 Tim. 1:17); "This mortal must put on immortality," etc. (1 Cor. 15:53); next verse: "And when this mortal hath put on immortality." "Jesus Christ * * * who only hath immortality" (1 Tim. 6:16). These quotations are from the Catholic Bible, and you ought to take them at their face value, surely. What do they mean? Do they not teach as plainly as can be taught that Jesus, of all who ever lived on earth, is the "only" one who has immortality? Go where you will and you will find this substantiated in the Bible. The serpent of the garden of Eden taught that we do not die. And Eve believed him, and just see what trouble she got us all into! Well, should we, as Christ's ministers, preach what the serpent taught in Eden? No. We are supposed to teach what God taught. God taught in the prophets, and also in the Apostles and through the blessed Jesus, that man is death-doomed, and can only become immortal by believing on Jesus Christ. If he fails to get hooked on to Christ he is destined to perish. Proof: "God so loved the world as to give his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him may not perish, but have life everlasing" (John 3:16). This is from your own Bible. Then is it not a case of "perish" or "everlasting life" (life everlasting)?

How can we evade these plain things? I am going to leave this for your consideration.

I know that we may not agree in all things as yet. We may not till the blessed Savior comes in the clouds of heaven. But we may talk them over in a friendly way, anyhow. Please write and let me know how these facts appear to you. They are Bible facts. No one can dispute them.

Hoping to hear from you soon, when I shall have another letter touching some other interesting matters, I beg to remain, in Christ,

J. J. SCHAUMBURG.

THE LEAFLESS BIBLE

A Texas reader of this paper has sent us for comment a sermon preached by a San Antonio pastor lately, in which the higher criticism was reviewed and approved as a factor in religious progress, and which demonstrated, doubtless to his own satisfaction if not to that of his hearers, the superiority of the theological attitude which consists largely of exploiting or rejecting scripture in a way that must have puzzled some members of his congregation. The case reminds us of the story of the pastor who, having finished a course of sermons on Bible criticism, was visited in his study by one of the earnest workers in his church. His caller began by asking what he should now do with the Bible.

"Why, read it of course," was the reply.

"But," said the visitor, "I don't just know what to do about it, so I came to ask your advice."

And he produced, as he spoke, a Bible, which he opened and laid before the smiling pastor.

"Why," said the latter, "there is nothing here, John—nothing left of it. How is that?"

"Well," was John's answer, "you see, it's this way: you told us that the stories of the creation and the flood were largely myths, and that the patriarchs were legendary figures, so out went Genesis. Then you told us the Pentateuch was chiefly folklore and ancient legends, and out went those books too. Ruth was a pastoral, you said, and then there was a bunch of Jewish history books, with more or less legendary contents, and out they went, like the rest. Job, you told us, was a dramatic composition, just a play; the Psalms were simply the Jewish hymnal; Proverbs and Ecclesiastes were the wisdom of the ancients gathered from everywhere, and the Song of Solomon was nothing but a wedding song, so out they went with the rest. To make the story short, pastor, you cast so much doubt on all of the other books that I just had to tear them out one by one until there was precious little left but the covers. You've destroyed my faith in the inspiration of the old book, and now I ask you again what I am to do about it?"

The preacher was thunderstruck at this result of the series of discourses upon which he had spent so much precious time and so much erudite care.

"Why, John," said he, in a voice that had a quaver in it, "I think you'd better get the old Bible and read it as you did before. Though it may have human errors in it, it is still the voice of God speaking to man, and the only message we have to teach us the way of salvation." Christian Herald.

TALKING ABOUT OURSELVES

If egotism is not more common in little people than in great, it is at least more insufferable. You can excuse a Napoleon or a Michael Angelo for putting considerable emphasis on the "I." But observation proves that people who have done the least are quite as likely to find an irresistible fascination in the first person singular. It would open the eyes of some of us if a stenographic reporter could take down our conversation on a social evening, and count up not especially the number of times we use the pronoun "I," but how frequently we ourselves form the theme of our conversation. There are very few of us who can not find something better to talk about than ourselves.

If anybody would make me the greatest king that ever lived, with palaces and gardens, and fine dinners, and wine and coaches, and beautiful clothes, and hundreds of servants, on condition that I would not read books, I would not be a king —I would rather be a poor man in a garret, with plenty of books, than a king who did not love reading.—Macauley.

"Ye are not your own."

"Yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead."

Your spiritual prosperity is hindered so long as you refuse to yield unconditionally to Christ and his truth.

Never mind about your reputation. As a matter of fact, you have no right to make yourself a reputation, when Christ "made himself of no reputation."

There are many, Peter-like, who are unduly concerned about John, and forget to mind their own business (John 21:21, 22).

"Ye are the light of the world," Jesus says. Light is needed only in darkness. Shine, brother, shine!

The way upon which the wicked travel is broad, but it leads to destruction. There may be those who, like Asaph (Ps. 73), are envious at the wicked. They see no bands in their death; they see only prosperity. But ah, if you have been envious, dear reader, go into the sanctuary of God, and there you will learn the end of the wicked. Instead of envying, pity, oh pity, those who are blinded by sin, and are duped into accepting earth's glittering toys rather than the certain riches that those receive who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. Many who today are glorying in their earthly possessions will find themselves paupers when they must give account to God. Yes, rather be poor in this world's goods and rich in faith, than possess all earth's millions without God. Get into the kingdom of God if you have to run into it bareheaded and barefooted.

Bro. R. M. Reynolds writes: "As my time is up I will renew my obligation, hoping our dear paper may long exist to send forth the message of life to perishing man.

"Bro. L. C. Thomas asks whom the Knights of Columbus are. They are an organization of the Roman Catholic Church, combined against the Protestant Church and all civil governments of the world. I recommend that our church arm herself with The Menace, published in Aurora, Mo. It will help you to see the anti-Christian tendencies of this false church."

A man needed $100 a few weeks ago and found it necessary to borrow. While he was negotiating his loan he started to figure how much he might have saved since he had arrived at the age of 25. He is 27 years old, and had smooked anywhere from two to six cigars a day. Suppose he had saved the price of one five-cent cigar a day. He would have had $219. Instead of having to go in debt for $100 he would have been able to meet his unexpected demand and would have $119 left in the bank. Does that start a thought? That is without the four per cent. interest, which would have greatly increased the amount.

"OUR SA ED TRUST"

Prof. D. Smith gave a sermon on this theme recently; from it we cull the following thoughts:

Dr. Smith dealt at considerable length with the banking customs of ancient civilization and the characteristics of the bankers of that age. He quoted an interesting passage from "The Tablet," the Greek "Pilgrim's Progress," the reported work of Cebes, a disciple of Socrates: "Do not show yourselves like the bad bankers. For they, when they receive money from men, rejoice, and think it their own; and when it is required of them again are irritated, and fancy themselves ill used; not remembering that they received the deposits on the understanding that there is nothing to prevent the depositor from reclaiming them." "This is a salutary exhortation," Dr. Smith goes on to say, "and points to the lesson that man's life is a trust from God. We are God's bankers, and we must show ourselves approved. We must discharge our trust. The spirit of the man with the one talent has ruined many a life whose lot lay in an obscure place. Such a man often loses heart and grows bitter, and in fretting for greater opportunities neglects the opportunities which he has. The remedy lies in recognizing that, whatever our lot may be, it is God's appointment. It is a sacred trust, and our part is to accept it loyally, and discharge it faithfully." "Show yourselves approved bankers."

The address was listened to with rapt attention by the large audience.

The indulgence of temper is responsible, perhaps, for more heart wrecks and home wrecks than almost anything else in the world.—W. Robertson Nicoll.

Don't judge a man by his family, for Cain belonged to a good family. Don't judge a man by his clothes; God made the one and the tailor made the other. Don't judge a man by his failures in life, for many a man fails because he is too honest to succeed. Don't judge a man by the house he lives in, for the lizard and the rat often inhabit the grander structure."

RUNNING WITHOUT A GOAL

The man who gains a reputation as a runner is not the one who, yielding to a sudden impulse, goes rushing across the meadows or through the woods. Instead, he runs in a track and under fixed rules. A great deal of energy goes to waste because it is erratic, because it is not applied wisely or systematically. You can run until you drop breathless, and be no nearer any particular goal than when you started.

AN ORTHODOX TANGLE

In The Firm Foundation of June 3, 1913, appears an article from G. T. Walker, who points out a "tangle" in which the "old hobby of the resurrection of the body" has involved his brethren and himself, all believers in the immortality of the soul. Unable to explain the "tangle" himself, he calls upon his brethren "to explain." His article is both amusing and instructive, hence we quote it in full:

"In the issue of May 6th Bro. Denton says: 'Materialists teach that death is annihilation. Then there can be no such thing as a resurrection. Why? Because you can not resurrect that which has no existence. You might as well talk about resurrecting nothing.'

"I heartily commend the above. But when reduced to its logical sequence it may appear unorthodox. The material body is annihilated, returns to the dust, and no more exists than before its creation; and if Bro. Denton is correct 'you might as well talk about resurrecting nothing' as to talk about resurrecting the body.

"C. R. Nichol, in his published debate with Bradley, makes the same argument.

"On page 252 of Nicol-Bradley Debate he says: 'Did not this material exist before it entered into the composition of man's body? Certainly. But it was not man then; indeed, it was no part of man then. Just so when it returns to dust it is not man, nor any part of man.'

"On page 273 he says: 'If man at death becomes as though he had never been, if only the material out of which he was created exists, I will be thankful if my opponent will tell how God can resurrect man any more than he could have resurrected man before Adam was created.

"Other statements could be given, but this shows Nichol's position. If man is mortal there will be no resurrection. Indeed, there will be nothing to resurrect more than existed before Adam was created. To this I fully agree. But what about the old hobby of the resurrection of the body? It does return to the dust and will no more exist than it did before Adam was created, and, according to these good brethren, there will be nothing to resurrect.

"But Bro. Nichol kicks over his whole argument on the following page, 334: 'Please remember there is no resurrection for the spirit of man, for it goes to God at death. The body only goes to the grave and will be resurrected.'

"Now, let Bro. Nichol or Bro. Denton explain. If man, the spirit, becomes as though he had never been, there can be no resurrection of man. But the body, which Bro. Nichol says is no part of man, does and will become as though it had never been, hence no resurrection for it; and as Bro. Nichol says the spirit is not resurrected, as it returns to God at death, there will be no resurrection at all.

"Now, I am not a Materialist, and believe in the resurrection. I also agree with these brethren that even God can not resurrect that which has no existence. But I leave them to explain this tangle."

O, how bitter a thing it is to look into happiness through another man's eyes!—Shakespeare.

THE NATURE OF MAN

Is He a Dual Being, Composed of Body and Soul, Each Being a Separate Entity: The Soul Continuing to Live When the Body is Dead? Or is He a Unit and Ceases to Exist in a Conscious State When Death Overtakes Him?

S. T. BLESSING

Where the scriptures are silent science and philosophy may write learned dissertations and deduce proofs that in their opinion are demonstrations; but to those who believe that the Bible is the word of God one "Thus saith the Lord" is worth more, is stronger proof, than volumes of lore, evolved by the thinking of the flesh, by uninspired man, or "wizards that peep and mutter." "To the law and to the testimony; if they sepak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them" (Isa. 8:19, 20). A false statement that stands, so far as the masses are concerned, unchallenged for years, takes on the dignity and reputability of truth. When put forth with the backing of "learned" authority, or claiming such backing, the masses accept it without question. Such falsehood becomes a part of our common belief, and we tenaciously cling to it, especially if it flatters our vanity and gives us an exalted opinion of our importance in the sight of God or man.

Since the days of Plato, who learned it of the Egyptians, the doctrine of the inherent immortality of the soul has been taught by philosophers of his school. The doctrine was introduced into the church by hearers being won to Christianity who were not willing to give up their former teachings, but engrafted their dogma of inherent immortality on to the Bible doctrine of eternal life until it gradually became infused into the Christian creed. Designing leaders saw in it an opportunity to awe the laity and promote their own self-aggrandizement. The clergy held the people in submission by teaching unending torment unless sins were atoned for though their mediation, which had to be purchased with a fee, which sometimes carried with it future indulgence, making the absolution the more valued.

When the Catholics gained the supremacy they, in their councils and canons, set their seal on the doctrine as truth, and strictly inhibited all from teaching otherwise; declaring such teachers hertics and to be punished as such (Lateran Council, A. D. 1513; Council of Trent, A. D. 1545-62; Pope Clement V., Pope Leo X.), one item of which reads: "The reasonable soul is immortal, and we strictly inhibit all from dogmatizing otherwise; and we decree that all who adhere to like erroneous assertions shall be shunned as heretics."

The Reformation failed to purge the church from this doctrine, although some of the reformers saw its erroneousness and had sufficient courage and conviction to speak out against it, among whom were Martin Luther and William Tyndale. Luther said: "I permit the pope to make articles of faith for himself and his faithful, such as the soul is the substantial form of the human body, the soul is immortal, with all those monstrous opinions to be found in the Roman dunghill of decretals; that such as his faith is, such may be his gospel, such his disciples, such his church, that the mouth may have meat suitable for it, and the dish a cover worthy of it."

Tyndale wrote: "In putting departed souls in heaven, hell or purgatory you destroy the arguments wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection, which we are warned to look for every hour. The true faith putteth the resurrection; the heathen philosophers, denying that, did put that souls did ever live. And the pope joineth the spiritual doctrine of Christ and the fleshly doctrine of the philosophers together—things so contrary that they can not agree. * * And because the fleshly-minded pope consenteth to the heathen doctrine, therefore he corrupteth the scriptures to establish it. If souls be in heaven, tell me why they be not in as good case as the angels be? And then what cause is there for a resurrection?"

Notwithstanding many such like protests, the doctrine was retained in the reformed and protesting churches, and is to this day almost universally taught as a fundamental Christian doctrine. Even Webster, in defining "soul," says: "Man, every man, has within him a soul which enables him to think and reason."

The inherent immortality of the soul is so universally believed and taught that it is difficult to get anyone to study the subject. When one has been trained in immortal soulism, and nurtured in trans-Skinian-kingdom teaching, it is a very hard matter, where the truth, in opposition to these dogmas, even backed by scripture citations, is presented, though swallowed at the time, to digest and assimilate the same. The first meal is more than likely to be without nourishing. If, therefore, we would profit, we must not be satisfied with a single hearing, but must repeatedly revert to the subject and study it in all its bearings. Good seed, even in good soil, may be unfruitful if not properly cultivated. In most cases, when teachers do examine and become convinced that the doctrine is not taught in the Bible, they pass it over with the plea that it is non-essential. The truth that there is no future life except for those who get into Christ by faith and obedience is so unpopular that people do not care to risk their standing in society and the church by advocating it. But is it essential to know and obey the truth? Hear Jesus: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth may make you free" (John 8:32): "In vain do ye worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men" (Matt. 15:9). It is almost universally taught by theologians and other religionists, as well as by rejectors of the Bible, that man has within him an entity called the immortal soul, which is really the thinking, responsible self, the flesh and blood organism being only the house or shell—the medium—through which the soul is manifested; and that what is called death is only the separation of the soul from the body, the body being cast off as of no more use, while the soul wings its flight to another abode, where it continues in life, freed from this mortal coil. To sustain this doctrine, Bible proof is sought for; therefore, let us go to the Bible and see what it does teach on the subject.

The word "soul" is found 524 times in the English Bible. The Hebrew word nephesh, and the Greek word psuche, from which the word "soul" is translated, are found 825 times; 524 times they are translated "soul," 149 times "life," and the remaining 152 times that they occur they are rendered by thirty-seven different words, such as "appetite, lust, mind, heart, you, us," etc. The words "immortal," "ever-living," "undying," or words of like import, are not found in the Bible in connection with "soul;" on the contrary, it is said that souls die (Joshua 11:11; Psa. 22:27; Psa. 33:19; Psa. 78:50; Ezek. 18:4, 20; Acts 3:23; James 5:20; Rev. 16:3). Souls hunger and thirst (Prov. 16:26; Prov. 19:15; Prov. 25:25). Souls eat (Isa. 55:2; Luke 12:19). Souls have blood (Jer. 2:34). Souls can be utterly destroyed with the sword (Psa. 7:2; Psa. 22:20; Joshua 10:28, 30, 32, 35, 37, 39). Beasts have souls (Num. 31:28); and many like things that pertain to the animal organism. Hence it is evident that the Bible soul denotes the physical being, the person, or some attribute pertaining to the physical or animal organism.

Parkhurst, in his Hebrew Lexicon, says: "As a noun, nephesh hath been supposed to signify the spiritual part of man, or what we commonly call his soul. I must confess that I can find no passage where it hath undoubtedly this meaning."

But since it is claimed that the Bible sustains the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, let us examine some of the passages that are relied on for proof. Gen. 35:18: "When her soul was departing;" 1 Kings 17:21: "Let the child's soul come into him again;" Matt. 10:28: "Can not kill the soul." The Hebrew and Greek words here translated "soul" are in other passages rendered "life." If we here substitute the word "life," which we are fully warranted in doing, the thought conveyed is quite different. Luke 16:23: "In hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments." This text does not contain the word "soul," but says: "The rich man died and was buried." This account of the rich man and Lazarus is no doubt a parable, because as a literal narrative it contains statements of impossibilities. As a parable, based on Jewish traditions (Matt. 15:1-9), it unveiled to that faithless generation their rejection of Jesus as the Christ, even though he rose from the dead.

Luke 23:43: "Today shalt thou be with me in paradise." Jesus could not have meant to promise the thief that he would be with him in paradise ("thy kingdom," see verse 42) that self-same day, within six hours from the time he was speaking, because "thy kingdom" was not yet established; nor had Jesus left the earth three days thereafter (John 20:17), and it was not till forty-three days after that he ascended to heaven (Acts 1:3-9). Besides, it is probable, yea, almost certain, that the thief did not die on that day. History tells us that those crucified often lived several days before death ended their sufferings. The scripture account indicates that the thieves were not dead when taken from the cross. The soldiers brake their legs, but they brake not the legs of Jesus, because they saw that he was dead already (John 19:32, 33). Why break their legs? Doubtless to keep them from escaping when taken down from the cross. For Pilate, in deference to the request made by the Jews, had commanded that they be taken down, that they might not hang on the cross on the Sabbath day. So if the thief was with Jesus in paradise that self-same day he must have been while he was yet alive, and Jesus dead.

Jesus' reply to the thief was no doubt an answer to his request, and in harmony with all Bible teaching on the subject. Jesus' words could be paraphrased thus: "The thief's request: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Paraphrased reply: "Verily I say unto thee today (now), when I come into my kingdom, which my Father has, in purpose and promise, prepared for me, and sit on the rebuilt tabernacle and throne of David, to reign over the house of Jacob (Acts 15:16; Luke 1:32); when the heathen shall be given to me for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession (Psa. 2:8); when my apostles shall sit, each on his throne, judging the twelve tribes of Israel (Matt. 19:28); when I shall sit on the throne of my glory (Matt. 25:31); and the immortalized saints of all ages (Heb. 11:39, 40; 1 Thess. 4:14-18; 1 Cor. 15:51-51; 2 Pet. 1:1; Luke 20:35, 36) shall have been made kings and priests to God, and are reigning on the earth (Rev. 5:10; 20:6; Rev. 2:26, 27; 3:21); when the Son of Man comes to give reward (Matt. 16:25) to those who have "feared the Lord and thought on his name;" when I "make up my jewels" (Malachi 3:16, 17)—"in that day shalt thou be with me in paradise" (Rev. 2:7).

To those who already believe the doctrine there are other passages which seem to favor it, but which can readily be explained in harmony with the truth. However, it must be admitted that there is one text that absolutely teaches the doctrine in so many words, and it can not be controverted. It is found in Gen. 3:4, 5, and reads: "Ye shall not surely die; * * * ye shall be as gods." Read the whole connection, and see if you wish to be in fellowship with the author.

We will now examine into the positive and direct teaching of the scriptures concerning the nature of man.

In the death state, a man, instead of having "gone to another world," is simply a body deprived of life, and as utterly unconscious as if he had never existed. Corruption will destroy his dead body, and he will pass away like a dream. Hence, the necessity for "resurrection" in order to a future life.

Psa. 6:5: In death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave, who shall give thee thanks?

Eccl. 9:5, 6: For the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten. Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion forever in anything that is done under the sun.

Eccl. 9:10: Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

Psa. 146:3, 4: Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish.

Psa. 89:48: What man is that liveth and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?

Job 3:11-17; 14:10-12: Why died I not from the womb? * * * For now should I have lain still and been quiet. I should have slept: then had I been at rest with the kings and counsellors of the earth, which built desolate places for themselves; there the wicked cease from troubling, and there the weary be at rest.

Job. 10:18, 19: Wherefore then hast thou brought me out of the womb? Oh, that I had given up the spirit, and no eye had seen me. I should have been as though I had not been, I should have been carried from the womb to the grave.

Isa. 38:18: For the grave can not praise thee, death can not celebrate thee; they that go down to the pit can not hope for thy truth.

Psa. 49:20: Man that is in honor, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish.

Prov. 21:16: The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead.

Isa. 26:14: They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish. (In contrast to the above, read verses 19, 20, 21, and see what is in store for the saints.)

Jer. 51:47: I will make drunk her princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men; and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the King, whose name is the Lord of Hosts.

Obadiah 16: So shall all the heathen drink continually, yea, they shall drink, and they shall swallow down, and they shall be as though they had not been.

Psa. 37:38: But the transgressors shall be destroyed together; the end of the wicked shall be cut off.

Rom. 2:12: For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law.

In 1 Tim. 6:16 it is declared that God only hath immortality (resident in himself). That being the case, man can not have immortality inherent in himself, regardless of his attitude toward God and the salvation that he offers through Christ.

If man by nature were immortal there would be no occasion for the scripture to urge us to "seek for glory and immortality" (Rom. 2:7). Jesus exemplified in himself how alone man may attain to immortality, namely, by faith in and obedience to the requirements of God. God delighteth not in the death of any, but would that all should turn to him and live. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." But that life is based on Jesus' reply to Martha: "I am the resurrection and the life." "To him that overcometh I will give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Paul, in Rom. 6:21-23, makes a clear and concise statement of the scripture teachings of the condition and destiny of man in his fallen state, and God's plan for his redemption, when he says: "For the end of those things (aliens, strangers, no hope, without Christ, without God, Eph. 2:12) is death." "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

From these testimonies it is evident that man is a unit, and because of sin death works in him, resulting finally in his dissolution. Had not God, in his mercy and love, made provision through the atoning sacrifice of his only begotten and well beloved Son, for the forgiveness of sin, and a cancellation of the death sentence by the promise of resurrection, conditioned on faith in and obedience to his requirements, death would have held the whole human family in its everlasting embrace. Because Jesus the Christ kept the law in every particular, and made it honorable, thus fulfilling the righteousness of the law, his Father constituted him the life-giver, and gave him power over all flesh, that he might give everlasting life to those who heartily accept of the provisions that God made, and render a willing obedience to the same. This salvation is offered to the personal sinner of the sons of Adam, and not to an imaginary entity that does not exist. Therefore it is absolutely essential that we know our condition by nature, in order to have an intelligent conception of the salvation that God offers, namely, everlasting life and an inheritance in the kingdom of God for our personal selves, and not for an immortal soul that does not exist. (If it did exist, as is taught by the apostasy, it already has immortality, and therefore would need no Savior to give it life.) Paul says in his second Corinthian letter (5:10) that the saints must appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive in body the reward. Seeing, then, it is the body, the person, that is to be saved and rewarded by being made like unto Christ's glorified body (Phil. 3:21), let us be diligent, that we may be found in him "when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe" (Thess. 1:10); when the meek shall inherit the earth, and the righteous inherit the land, and dwell therein forever" (Matt. 5:5; Psa. 37: 11, 29). Do not pass this over as a doctrine of no importance. Your eternal life depends on an accurate knowledge of the salvation offered in the scriptures, without which you can not render that obedience (Mark 15:15, 16) to the mold of doctrines (Rom. 6:17) which inducts into Christ, and makes Abraham's seed (Gal. 3:25-27) and joint heirs with Christ (Rom. 8:17; Rev. 3:21; Rev. 5: 10) in glory, honor and immortality (Rom. 2:7).

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "The things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:22, 31).

PASS IT ON

When you have a thought that's cheery,
Pass it on;
It will surely aid the weary,
Pass it on;
Give it freely—do not keep it;
Fill your measure full, then heap it;
Later you will surely reap it—
Pass it on. — M. G. KAINS.

THE CHURCH AND THE CHILD

"It is to the child they were to look for the replenishing of the church" (Address to Congregational Union).

O Church of Christ! Why brood upon thy loss?
The darkest night precedes the rising sun;
Infinite gains await thy future toil;
The children may be won!

Behold the field! It teems with unreaped grain;
Haste to the task, o'er thy day's work be done;
Carry thy sickle where the harvest waves—
The children may be won!

Thou seest the barren fields of worldliness
In hearts whose earthly course will soon be run;
But elsewhere look with glad expectancy—
The children may be won!

So shall Christ see the travail of his soul,
So shalt thou reach the glory not above;
So shalt thou bring thy sheaves with gladness home—
The children may be won!

SERMONETTE ON THE BOOK OF HEBREWS

M. JOBLIN

You have frequently heard me express my gratitude to God for selecting Paul to bear the name of the Lord, before Gentiles, kings and the children of Israel. Every page of his history and every line from his pen demonstrates the wisdom of the divine choice. A wonderful man was he, a wonderful preacher was he, and wonderful the fruits of his labor. What an embodiment of all that is noble, and pure, and frank, and bold, and humble, and faithful! What an example of patience and fortitude and long suffering! It is no wonder, after the catalogue of sufferings he gives us, that he calls upon his children to follow him as he follows Christ. With a great mind stored with the learning of the age, and richly imbued with the spirit of his Master, and endowed with supernatural gifts, he was wonderfully equipped for the work assigned him. He was a marvelous teacher. He always took into account the circumstances, the tempers and the prejudices of his hearers. He reasoned, he declaimed, he reproved, he admonished, he warned, he encouraged he compassed sea and land to furnish illustrations; he borrowed from heathenism, from Judaism, from the manners of the age, and from festive games, and from occurrences accidental and transitory he seized what he could to guide the attention which it awakened to some wise purpose; and thus set us an example to lay hold of things everybody is familiar with to illustrate divine things.

You may wonder what this has to do with the lesson now before us; but I want to help you all to think closely and read closely—I mean carefully, critically. Overmuch reading and promiscuous reading is not favorable to the cultivation of a critical habit. The critic does not gulp; he tastes, he discriminates, and carefully, step by step, arrives at the truth. And when he speaks or writes everybody can see that his fruit is ripe. If a subject be worth anything it is worth going to the bottom of. It was once said by G. S. Philips that it may do to skim milk, because the cream lies on the top; but who could skim bacon? And if this be true of bacon, because his thought goes all down thorugh it, how much more true of God's great volume?

Another reason for my introductory remarks: Many of the wise ones have decided that Paul never wrote the Epistle to the Hebrews. I believe he did, or rather I think he did, although he never put his name to it. But whether he did or did not, the divine stamp is upon it at any rate. I believe it to be God's word, whoever wrote it. And, although Dean Alford, and Luther, and many others, think Apollos wrote it, because of its eloquent style, and that a disciple of the apostles wrote it, some contending that Barnabas wrote it, others that Luke wrote it, still others that Clement of Rome wrote it, and besides these that Mark wrote it, while Titus, and Silocus and Aquilla have been named as probable authors. The truth is, only God knows its true author, or the true transcriber of the spirit's word.

But, while this is the fact, I want to say, as a matter of fact, that you can depend upon and refer to as reliable history that Clement of Rome, who was contemporary with some of the apostles in the first century, quotes from Hebrews extensively; and Justin Martyr, in his dialogue with Trypho, quotes it as of divine authority. As also does Clement of Alexandria in the second century, and refers it expressly to Paul, and says he prudently omitted his name because the Jews were so prejudiced against him. One thing that cast doubt upon this book was the fact that it was not really an epistle or letter, because it is not addressed to any particular person or body of individuals, although it contains some indications of an epistolary nature, which shows that it was not addressed to all Jewish Christians, but to some Jewish brethren the writer was personally acquainted with and who had steadfastly endured persecution and the loss of property, and had shown sympathy to their imprisoned brethren and to Christians generally (chapter 10:32-34). Thirdly, they were in danger of apostacy, and had not resisted unto blood (12:3, 4, 9). Fourth, we find none alluded to but those who were familiar with the Levitical service and the temple worship, and in fact with all the Mosiac ritual. They are called to behold in Christ the fulfiller of the law; in his person the antitype of the priesthood, and in his offices the realization of the sacrificial and mediatorial functions of the Jewish hierarchy. You see, then, that it is very necessary for us to be familiar with the Mosaic ritual in order to get a fair understanding and appreciation of this beautiful book. I am not saying who is or is not, or that any are not familiar with it; but that it is necessary to be, in order to profit much. And to the earnest searcher for truth there is nothing in the way of acquiring a sufficient knowledge of the type to understand the antitype. Don't be discouraged by what I am saying. If one does not feel able to expound he has the privilege of expressing the result of his reflections on any verse or thought. Select an idea and dwell upon it till it opens out and enlarges your minds and cheers and warms your hearts, and then proceed to warm our hearts too.

Brothers, I do not think it would be right to skim over the surface of this wonderful book, because those who may never have given it particular attention would think either that there was not much to it, or else that it was too deep for them. But it has been said in this book: "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of the anointed, let us go on to perfection." We have had milk long enough, and skimmed milk at that; we must be taking stronger food, and if we make the change carefully we shall not be hurt. The doctors tell us that our stomach will secrete the proper juice to take care of a new diet when it finds it has to. Well, it is just so with spiritual food. We will be able to assimilate it after a while.

JOSEPH AND BENJAMIN
(Gen. xliii:18, 19, 23-34)

"He that loveth his brother abideth in the light" (1 John 2:10).

There can be no more attractive picture of the way in which the hand of God weaves the web of human life and destiny with the warp and woof of men's words and deeds than this chapter of Joseph's story. We see nearly all the human passions at work—hunger and fear and shame and grief, and behind them all a very human love working out its desire. We see how famine, God's gaunt angel, does his will, and how a father's unforgettable sorrow, and the memories and forebodings of conscience-stricken men, are all used to work out the far-reaching designs of God's sovereign will. Yet how unconscious they all are, not only that God is behind it all, but of God's exceeding grace in it all. They are like actors who do not know and can not tell the story of the drama in which they play their parts. Jacob alone, with his past experience of God's dealing and his sure trust in God's power, looks up to the Great Interpreter, who makes all plain when he says (5:14): "God Almighty give you mercy before the man."

The story is displayed in three scenes. The first is the scene in Jacob's home in Canaan. The years of the famine continue. The supply brought back from Egypt is running low. Hunger makes a sharp reply to fear. Jacob sees that only one thing must be done. They must go again to Egypt. Then follows the record of the full history of the last interview with Joseph. Judah, now become by force of character the leader of the band, reasons with his father. His recollection of the strange ruler's face and words told him that they need not face him again without Benjamin. We can almost hear Jacob's cry of pain, as of one whose tender, unhealed wound had been chafed by a heedless hand. But Judah discloses, as may not have been so fully detailed before, the strict inquiries made by this keen-eyed suspicious Egyptian. Then in an act of self-sacrifice, finely typical of all self-sacrifice, and of the great sacrifice of the cross, he offers himself as surety for Jacob's darling son. With a touch of his old foresight, showing that the crafty brain was still working in vigor, Jacob bids them make a present of the fruits, for only the corn crop had failed, take double money in their hands, and essay a second visit to the storehouses of Egypt.

In the second scene we are shown the men before Joseph's house. It seems most probable that Joseph looked out from some window, with his eyes filled with the hunger of love for Benjamin, while his steward, who must have guessed his secret but kept it with an oriental secrecy, dealt with the Israelites.

The third scene discloses one of the most entirely eastern incidents in the Bible. The obeisance of the guests, the separate table for the Egyptian host, the due regard for precedence according to age, the double portion for the favored guest, together with Joseph's uncontrollable emotion as he yearns over Benjamin—his boyhood's little playmate, his solace in the days when his coarse-minded older brothers scowled upon him, his charge from the child's tender, motherless years—all might have been set in a nobler version of the "Arabian Nights." Yet we must realize that the story is touched with a deeper pathos and a diviner passion than mere romance or love unbaptized by God's spirit can show.

Now each of these scenes yields us a ruling truth of God's dealing. The first presents the strengthening by God's discipline of the family bond. The tender ties which bound these brothers to their father and to each other and to Benjamin might shame many of our modern homes. How slight are the bonds between brother and brother, and sister and sister, in many families! They grow up, and separate and scatter, and years pass without intercourse or inquiry. Were help needed it would be brutally proved that there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother. But these are generally, if not always, found to be families which have not been welded in a strong and tender unity by sorrow. Let some great grief, or fear, or pain, or some shadow, such as poverty and outcastness can throw, visit a household, and their hearts become knit in unbreakable bonds. That is what God is doing here. He needs for his far-off purpose a family which will cleave to each other. He needs a passionate devotion to a common cause. He needs an intimate and self-sacrificing fellowship which neither Egypt's prosperity nor its long years of bondage can imperil. Here he is binding them, one to the other, with the iron bands of love.

The second truth is that we must all simply go on in faith amidst the bewildering tangle of life. The darkness of mind and the anxiety at the absolute inexplicability of all the events of this Egyptian experience on the part of these brethren seize upon our hearts as we read. We can hardly forbear to pity them. Yet, like the true and disciplined men they have become, they go on. They keep their hands clean, if they can not keep their hearts from fear. Only later afterward did they understand. That truth should be treasured by the young, as it is a constant source of comfort to the old. "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know afterward," is Christ's word to all his bewildered folk. The "afterward" may be here in time. It shall be, in some instances, only when the day breaks and the shadows flee away.

The third truth is that love is the supreme force in life. It was Joseph's love for Benjamin, his yearning to sit in his company and gladden himself with the sight of his face, which set all the events of the chapter in motion. But for Benjamin Joseph might not have wished to see his brethren again. So today, while men make much of the motives of gain, and of ambition, and of honor, let us not forget that love still rules the hearts of men. The merchant, who thought that his whole life was centered in the big business he had built up, was rudely undeceived. It was his secret pride, his spring of pleasure. Yet he could not see the figures in his ledger when his little daughter lay at the point of death. Love was still, even with him, the merciless and grasping schemer, the supreme force in life.

All this leads us to look up into the face of our brother and to rejoice that with him, too, love is the master passion of his spirit and the motive force of his life and death. As we consider Joseph, we remember him who yearns over us, who bids us welcome to the feast, who longs to see our face, to whom each one of us is a brother beloved.—W. M. Clow.

MEN AND WOMEN ARE EQUALS

When, according to scripture, the Lord created the human race, he created them male and female. "It was not good that man should be alone," so that he and his companion and "rib-mate" were two of a kind and therefore equals. After they had drifted from the counsel and the leading of the living God a change in the conditions was brought about, and work and weeds with pain and dishonor were necessary concomitants of the altered situation. It seems as though some people considered these conditions as a sort of divine law imposed on us that it would be sinful to resist, as that all labor-saving machinery, especially horse harrows for the destruction of weeds, all drugs and liniments for the soothing of pain, such as toothache drops and chloroform, are resistings of this supposed divine law; and that women particularly should be kept in their place of "subjection, with their husband to rule over them." This latter phase of the situation is particularly gratifying to certain members of the human species, especially those of the rude and most savage tribes and nations. There the female of the species is the slave, the underling, or the drudge. Even in some so-called Christian communities the idea is maintained, and abundance of scripture texts can be produced to sustain the situation. "Give not thy strength to women, nor thy ways to that that destroyeth kings." "Her ways lead to death, and her steps down to hell," and so forth and so on.

Even under the law of Moses, although in the history of the children of Israel there are many notable instances of female greatness, yet owing to "The hardness of their hearts," as Jesus explained in the matter of divorce, women were still held somewhat under the ban; and it remained for Christianity to give them—the half of the human race—the perfect liberty wherewith Christ hath made them and us, "male and female," free. And just in proportion as a person or an individual emerges out of barbarism into civilization, so the women of that state or family rise to take their place, the original place "at first," as the helpmeet and comforter of man.

One of the most wonderful changes that is now happening in the world is the general uprising of womankind, not only in so-called Christian lands, but in Asia, long the seat of heathenism and oppression of the women. High-caste women of India are breaking the barriers of the caste and leading the way to a better understanding of life. The same is happening in China and Japan. Even the women of Turkey came to the front in the late war. What does it all mean?

I hear some pessimistic brother exclaiming, "Worse and worse!" "The way leads down to hell!" "Destroyers of home," etc. I wonder what kind of a mother such men have had, and (hush!) what sort of a wife? Brethren, don't make any mistake. In some things the world is still bad and growing worse, maybe, but in the main you may safely say that the Lord God has still got a good grip on it, and it is going all right. The oxen that are hauling the ark of the covenant are bellowing a bit, and the wheels of the cart get tangled in the rut sometimes, but it will pull up to Bethshemish yet!

I pity the poor soul that does not enjoy God's world as it is, even it is inferior to that which is to come. Indeed, the world that now is is as much superior to that which we, as men can imagine. The poorest laborer who rides for a nickel in a trolley car has far superior traveling accommodation than Alexander "the Great" had, or Augustus Caesar, for instance. This land and country in which we live is infinitely more comfortable and safe a place in which to live for poor people than Europe was for kings two or three hundred years ago. When I was a boy I used to run around the beautiful where they used to chop people's heads off and burn them alive for their different opinions. If one wants to appreciate his country and the improved conditions of living, and the vastly more liberty that we enjoy, let him read the history of the long ages gone by; that is, if he is not afraid of losing his night's rest by dreaming of all kinds of horrible things. And a great deal of the improved conditions that we now enjoy have been the result of women's work. When men were fighting they (the women) were nursing the wounded; when men were quarreling they were courting the fellows over the back fence; when men were bursting things out they were trying in their equally blind way to draw things together; for "a virtuous woman is to be prized above rubies; her children rise up and call her blessed; her husband also he praiseth her." There are two kinds of women, just as there are two kinds of men: good and bad; but for decency, for morality and kindness, "the law of love," I'll take my chances with the women every time.

THE CHRISTIAN'S FOOD AND CLOTHING

There is one thing very encouraging to the Christian. It is this: God has never left him in want as to spiritual care and attention. His food has been abundantly supplied and his clothing amply provided. The Christian's spiritual bill of fare, as given by Paul in Phil. 4:8, is as follows: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." How does the world enjoy this spiritual bill of fare, given by the apostle of God?

Next comes his clothing. Although his apperel, described by Paul in Eph. 6:10-17, is not very attractive to many at the present time, yet it comes from God's hand and is the only full dress suit God has given to his children.

Let me call your attention to the different articles of this suit as described by Paul in Eph. 6: 10-17: "Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore (for this reason) take unto you the whole (not a part) armor of God (what for?), that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and, having done all, to stand. Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, have the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God." This is God's appointed way. Will we sit at the table God has spread for his children, and wear the uniform he has provided for the faithful Christian soldier? Having this food and raiment, let us therewith be content.

NATURE OF MAN

W. J. PECK

"What is man, that thou art mindful of him" (Heb. 2:26)? This brings us to the study of man. First, as we have said, man possesses a soul, a body, and a spirit. Now, in the absence of either one of these parts, have we a man? First, take away the body; can there be a man without a body? No. Well, can there be a man without a soul? No, as the soul is the life or the connecting link between the body and spirit. Webster says the soul is life. Webster says the spirit is vigor of the intellect, temper, disposition of mind. Gen. 2:7 says the Lord God formed man out of the dust of the ground.

Now, we will see what the brain is. Webster says the brain is the understanding, the affections. Now, has there ever been a sin committed without the action of the brain? If not, is it not a fact that the soul and spirit were both implicated in the sin, as the body commits no sin (1 Cor. 6: 18; Ezek. 18:4)? "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Then the soul can die. Yes, and the spirit shall fail, and Webster says the word "fail" means to die and become extinct, to cease, to perish. Is there no part of man that can not die? No, not of Adam; but the second man, Lord from heaven, after he rose the apostles said he can die no more, death has no more dominion over him, for he was then made a partaker of the divine nature (2 Pet. 1:4). And in 1 Pet. 1:3-4 he says: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to his abundant mercy, has begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you." First, here is begettal, a new seed planted. Where is it planted? In the heart (Matt. 13:19; Luke 8:11). What does this seed do if received in a good and honest heart? It changes our nature, and if cultivated by virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness and charity, it will give you entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior. Then you will be a partaker of the divine nature.

Adam and all his race were lost, and Christ died that we could have a chance for eternal life, but this life is yet in Christ, not in us. Col. 3:3-4: "You are dead, and your lives are hid with Christ in God." John 5:11: "And this is the record that God has given unto us eternal life, and this life is in his son," not in us. Talk about a man possessing immortality and not possessing eternal life! Can immortality die? No. Then it is eternal life. 2 Pet. 3:3 says: "Whose adorning, let it not be the outward adorning, but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even a meek and quiet spirit." We must remember that the heart is one thing; what the heart is adorned with is another. The Christian is supposed to have his heart adorned with the meek and quiet spirit of Christ. I am sure that all the murderers that fill our state prisons have not that meek and quiet spirit. If the world was in possession of it we would need no laws, no preachers, no jails and no prisons; this would be heaven itself. This inward man Paul says is Christ in you, the Christian, the hope of glory (Col. 1:27; Eph. 3:17). Christ dwells in our hearts by faith, not in person. Why do preachers say that the world has the inward man, the meek and quiet spirit of Christ, and yet go out and try to convert them? The word "convert" means to change.

DIVINE HEALING

CHAS. H. SHURTLEFF

"They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover" (Mark 16:18). Much has been said and written on the subject of "divine healing," both pro and con, that has not been friendly to the subject, nor profitable to the discussionists, but it has been very detrimental to the followers of each. The non-use of means has been urged to that extent that many have been led to abandon all remedies to the death of some loved relative or friend, when if God had been honored as he should have been, and the remedies that he has provided been utilized to curative ends, some very distressing consequences would not then have obtained. There are not less than 120,000 herbs known to medical science, each having in itself curative properties that meet disease and help the body to resist and overcome its maladies. God said of these: "And to every beast of the earth, and to every bird of the heavens, and to everything that creepeth on the earth, wherein there is life (margin, a living soul), I have given every green herb for food: and it was so." To man he said: "Behold, I have given you every herb yielding seed, which is upon all the face of the earth, and every tree, in which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed: to you it shall be for food." "And God say everything that he had made, and, behold, it was very good" (Gen. 1:29-31).

Is the use of these sinful? If so, is not fruit-eating sinful? "Food" is medicinal, especially of the vegetable kind, and one who would discard all medical aid should stop eating. "Food" is for tissue building, for repairing the waste caused by all the various ills that mortals are heir to. "To you they shall be for food." Thousands of "green herbs" that can not be eaten are "food," for they meet and feed the body demands, and they are God-given. "I have given you every herb." What kind of healing must we denominate it that obtains from this divine Materia Medica? Can it be less than divine healing? However, it is said, "But there are drugs in these herbs." Yes, but who put the drugs into them? God. We have instances in both Old and New Testaments where God ordered and blessed means to a cure. God "added to Hezekiah's life fifteen years." Hezekiah was "God's holy man." Isaiah said: "Take a lump of figs. And they took and laid it upon the boil, and he recovered" (2 Kings 20:6, 7). This ought to be conclusive. Why argue against using remedies, with this Old Testament fact in hand?

When Christ chose and sent out his disciples (Mark 6:7-12) he gave them power, not only to preach, but to heal, as it is written: "And they went out, and preached that men should repent. And they cast out many demons and anointed many with oil that were sick, and healed them" (Mark 6:13). This is the base of Jas. 5:13-15. Why use the "oil?" All know (who have used it) the "food" qualities and the medical properties of it. The medical use of olive oil in ancient times is thus given by William Smith: "As oil is in use in many cases in medicine, so it is not surprising that it should have been so much used among the Jews and other nations of antiquity for medical purposes. Celsus repeatedly speaks of the use of oil, especially old oil, applied externally with friction in fevers, and in many other cases. Josephus mentions that among the other remedies employed in the case of Herod, he was put into a sort of oil bath. The prophet Isaiah (1:6) alludes to the use of oil as an ointment treatment" (Bible Dict., page 649).

"Anointing with oil in the name of the Lord" is a part of the provision. This, with "the prayer of faith," is the human side. "And the Lord shall raise them up," is the divine side; and the recognition on the part of the Lord of the remedy provided by his direction is as much new modern truth, as in the case of Hezekiah. Hezekiah "prayed," and they applied "the lump of figs," and "the Lord raised him up," and "added fifteen years to his life." The cases are quite parallel. Another circumstance is here in point. "And when he passed by he saw a man blind from his birth." In reply to questions he said: "While I am in the world I am the light of the world. When he had thus spoken he spat on the ground and made clay of the spittle, and with the clay thereof he anointed his eyes, and said unto him, Go, wash in the pool of Siloam. He went away, therefore, and washed and came seeing" (John 9:1, 5, 6, 7). This was divine healing, with the use of remedies: "Clay, spittle, water," and the exercise of faith on the part of the healed in obeying the command of Jesus.—Exchange.

GRACE SUFFICIENT

One evening, says C. H. Spurgeon, I was riding home after a heavy day's work, weary and sore depressed, when, suddenly, as a lightning flash, came: "My grace is sufficient for thee." And I said: "I should think it is, Lord," and burst out laughing. It seemed to make unbelief so absurd.

It was if some little fish, being very thirsty, was troubled about drinking the river dry; and Father Thames said: "Drink away, little fish, my stream is sufficient for thee." Or it seemed like a little mouse in the granaries of Egypt, after seven years of plenty, fearing it might die of famine, and Joseph might say: "Cheer up, little mouse, my granaries are sufficient for thee." Again I imagined a man away up yonder on the mountain saying to himself: "I fear I shall exhaust all the oxygen in the atmosphere." But the earth might say: "Breathe away, O man, and fill they lungs ever; my atmosphere is sufficient for thee."

EDITORIAL

Bro. F. M. [illegible] of Plymouth, Ind., writes: "The Anti-Smoking [illegible] was a real heart-to-heart expression of good fellowship. With Bros. Reed and Wagoner of the old-time speakers present, and many brethren who have grown old along with Methodism, it was a love feast indeed. The weather was inclement, but could not cool the ardor of the brethren. However, it is fair to presume it is the last session ever to be held at this historic place because of the inconvenience of it."

Another interesting case of obedience to the faith is recorded in Cleveland June 15th. Miss Ruth Pennell, [illegible] Methodist, was the one whose name was enrolled in the book of life. When she sent her confession to her pastor he called upon her, and, in an endeavor to keep her in his fold, said: "We have never pointed your faith or teaching in our Church." To this Miss Bennet replied that that was just the trouble; his Church stood for nothing; there was nothing you could pin your faith to. This was a shock to her Methodist pastor who knew how futile it was in [illegible] letting its principles slip away in the days of Primal Christianity. There was a time [illegible] when the Methodist Church had to [illegible] mostly wrong, yet [illegible] believe anything in theory and practice [illegible], or he could not be a Methodist. But now, for the sake of members, they have forgotten what their Discipline—with its rules [illegible] were conducted in life has disappeared. Where Pennell could have remained [illegible] have believed the truth! Think you, when the Methodists would have retained this [illegible] economic and principle, our Lord "hath not cut from among them," as Paul declares, God bless her in her uncompromising stand for the truth of the gospel.

THE CHURCH A TEACHER

In a late sermon Dr. Brown took as his subject the relation of the Church to the child, from Psalm 34:11: "Come, ye children, hearken unto me; I will teach you the fear of the Lord." He confessed that in the past the church had failed in alluring the young life of the country. "It is only of recent years that the church has come to see the strategic value of the child. Now, at last, we have realized that the church is a mournful place unless the children are there."

Next Dr. Brown explained that, amidst all its ministries, the primary task of the church is that of teaching. "It must be a teaching institution, a center of light. There is no future for a church that does not teach. Have you ever noticed how much emphasis is laid on teaching throughout the Old Testament? Our Lord himself is a teacher or he is nothing. One of the greatest Resurrection gifts of Christ is that of teachers and light bringers. The call is not, 'Come, ye children, I will amuse, or I will entertain you; come and see the balloons or the fireworks go up; but come with reverent heart, and listen.'"

A PRAYER REMEMBERED

Dr. Campbell Morgan, in a recent sermon, had a text like "pleasant coolness in the heat," for it included the words of St. John 7:37, 38 - the promise of living waters. Near the end of an exposition which was followed with still and devout attention, he told of a conference he attended twenty years ago at Southport. "I don't remember a single address," he said, "but I do remember a prayer. The words were: 'O Lord, our God, in these days of conventions, fill us with the fullness of the Holy Spirit. None of us are great vessels; we can not hold very much, but we can overflow a great deal.' No vessels can overflow," added the preacher, "until they are filled. They must be filled with living water. 'This glass" (holding up the glass of water on the pulpit ledge) "contains good water, but not living water. It is the vessel that lives in the stream and is perpetually being refilled that overflows."

A GERMAN WEDDING TEXT

Rom. 8:28

The Berlin court minister, Dr. Dryander, at the wedding of Princess Victoria Louise, spoke (some say at the bride's request) from the words of Romans 8:28: "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God." The German Bible renders the words with a very slight difference: "Wir wissen aber dass denen, die Gott lieben, alle Dinge zum besten dienen."

A Promise for Young and Old

The text has been precious to the aged, as well as to the young. Carlyle wrote to his old mother after the departure of her son Alick for New York: "You have had much to suffer, dear mother, and are grown old in this valley of tears; but you say always, as all of us should say: 'Have we not many mercies, too?' Is there not above all, and in all, a Father watching over us, through whom all sorrows shall yet work together for good? Yes, it is even so. Let us try to hold by that as an anchor both sure and steadfast."

Sir Walter Scott's Faith

In Sir Walter Scott's diary for 1827 there is an allusion to the passage. Amid his terrible misfortunes, when he actually contemplated taking refuge in the Isle of Man or in the sanctuary of Holyrood to escape relentless creditors, he wrote: "But I will not let this unman me. Our hope, heavenly and earthly, is poorly anchored if the cable parts upon the stream. I believe in God, who can change evil into good, and I am confident that what befalls us is always ultimately for the best."

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brother in Christ: The annual June meeting at "Old Antioch" was fairly well attended and most thoroughly enjoyed, a real "reunion" of those of like precious faith. As there will doubtless be a report of the meeting sent you for publication, I shall not attempt a review of the excellent sermons except to call attention to an address on the subject of prophecy by Elder H. V. Reed, of Chicago. There is a fascination to the lover of God's truth in the sure prophetic word, and especially when it tells of coming events that we today are eyewitenesses of. We can exclaim with the Psalmist: "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." Yes, amid the startling scenes of the "time of the end," how comforting to be assured that the "wise shall understand" by heeding the sure prophetic word.

The address made such deep impressions that an earnest desire has been expressed that Bro. Reed will embody the subject in an article for the readers of The Restitution. Hoping that Bro. Reed will comply with the request, we shall look to see it in the near future.

As ever in the blessed hope, waiting, watching, praying for his coming, J. F. WAGONER.

THE JUDGMENT

I would like to ask, Don't you understand the judgment of the world as continuing from the time of Jesus' coming and sitting in judgment, as spoken of in Matt. 25:31, till he has put all his enemies under his feet (1 Cor. 15:25)? You will notice this belongs to the judgment of the end (verse 24). The judgment in Matt. 25:31 is a national affair, so also is the judgment of the world and the end spoken of in 1 Cor. 15:24. It seems to me, as Bro. Hogarth says, there should be no trouble along this line when we understand the two judgments: the righteous are judged in this life. All that die in the Lord (Rev. 14:13) come not into condemnation (Rom. 8:1). Note: They are in the Lord now.

S. C. LEHMAN.

God's promises are for the sinner as well as for the saint. The only one left out is he who persists in wrongdoing.

THE CREATION OF EVIL

E. B. ARNOLD

"I form the light, and create darkness. I make peace, and create evil; I the Lord do all these things" (Isa. 45:7).

Are we to understand that Jehovah is the creator of sin and the primal originator of evil? Many seem to believe and advocate such a theory. But is such an idea true? Let us find out what the above text and similar passages of God's word mean.

The word "evil," like many other words, has different shades of meaning. The passage in Isaiah 45:7 means, of course, just what it says, that God creates evil, yet not the evil of sin, but the evil of punishment, or the evil of temporary judgment.

In Judges 2:13-15 we read the following concerning Israel: "And they forsook the Lord, and served Baal and Ashtaroth. And the anger of the Lord was hot against Israel, and he delivered them into the hands of spoilers that spoiled them, and he sold them into the hands of their enemies roundabout, so they could not any longer stand before their enemies. Whithersoever they went out, the hand of the Lord was against them for EVIL, as the Lord had said (in Lev. 26:14-46), and as the Lord had sworn unto them; and they were greatly distressed."

In 2 Kings 22:16, 17 we also read: "Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the words of the book which the king of Judah hath read; because they have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands; therefore my wrath (or punishment) shall be kindled against this place, and shall not be quenched."

I believe the Bible teaches that God sends the evils of war, floods, famines, cyclones, etc., as punishments for sin. In this sense Jehovah creates evil, and I believe this to be the true meaning of the text of scripture at the commencement of this article.

Jehovah surely could not be the creator of moral sin, for that would be creating something against his own moral government and righteous laws. John says, "Sin is the transgression of the law" (1 John 3:4). God would not institute holy commandments and then create or cause men to violate those commands. Such a course of action would be contrary to the nature of God and out of harmony with a true conception of the Almighty. We read in James 1:13: "For God can not be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man." That is, God can not tempt any man to do evil. "But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed" (James 1:14). Jehovah is not the author or creator of moral evil, or sin. He could not be and remain the true God, the hater, forgiver and destroyer of sin. But he does create or send evil as a punishment upon individuals, cities and nations. God does not create the evil of sin, but he does create the evil of punishment for sin. God did not create evil or sin in Adam and Eve, but they became sinners by the willful violation of Jehovah's restrictive command found recorded in Gen. 2:17: "But of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it."

God's holy word harmonizes if rightly understood and interpreted. Let us ever strive to properly understand it so we can have the correct interpretation and veneration for its divine author, our Heavenly Father.—World's Crisis.

THIRTY REASONS WHY I DO NOT DANCE

1. I can not dance with a clear conscience before God, therefore I should abstain.

2. All branches of the church have condemned dancing as carnal and immoral, inconsistent with the Christian profession.

3. Even the sacred books of the Pagans declare it an immoral amusement.

4. Pagan moralists, like Cicero, call it indecent and voluptuous.

5. Dancing was one great means by which Nero corrupted Rome.

6. It has a bad name for professing Christians, and it dishonors the cause.

7. The best and most devout Christians do not want to dance.

8. None but backsliders and unconverted persons are found dancing.

9. It is not a favorite amusement even with conscientious worldlings.

10. It is one of the most favorite amusements with the vile everywhere.

11. The world has no confidence in the piety of church members who dance.

12. It is a distinctive badge everywhere of worldliness and worldly conformity.

13. It destroys a professing Christian's testimony, influence and usefulness everywhere.

14. The dancing of sexes together, as in modern times, was never practiced by the virtuous in Bible times.

15. Dancing grieves and offends all faithful pastors and devout Christians.

16. It is a companion vice with drinking and many other sins.

17. It dissipates the mind, corrupts the heart and sears the conscience.

18. The decollete dress of the dance is an immoral invention of harlots.

19. The "german" and other round dances are favorites in brothels.

20. The liberties indulged in dancing are nowhere else allowed in decent society, and under other circumstances they furnish ground for divorce.

21. It brings virtue into close connection with vice at late hours, and under excitement in which virtue is well-nigh powerless.

22. Men do not choose to dance with themselves, nor even with their wives and sisters.

23. Beyond thrill of music and poetry of motion, it seems to have a sex reference.

24. Indeed, it is so allied to licentiousness that the vilest places in our cities are called "dance houses."

25. The police reports show that a very large proportion of abandoned women are ruined in connection with the dance.

26. I can not dance in modern society to the glory of God, nor can anyone.

27. If Jesus Christ were here I am sure he would not go with me to a dancing party, and I can not ask or obtain his blessing upon it.

28. I would not like to meet death at a dance and in a ball dress.

29. I would not like to be found in a ballroom when the Lord comes.

30. And finally: I have no desire to dance, because my soul is filled with the joy of God's salvation and my life with the privileges of his service. —J. S. MARVIN.

INDIANA BIBLE SCHOOL REPORT

To the Brethren of the Church of God Scattered Abroad:

I have the pleasure of reporting at the close of the seventh annual session of the Indiana Bible School, held at Plymouth, that it was satisfactory in every respect, success being written on every page. The attendance reached the very satisfactory number of seventy, and each one attending gave evidence of an eager desire for a knowledge of the grand truths of God's word. Bros. Robison and Williams, the teachers of the adult class, gave instructions during a period of ninety minutes, from 10 and 2 o'clock daily. Bro. Robison teaching the following subjects: The Only True God; Gospel; Kingdom and the Kingdom's Restoration to Israel, closing Friday with Planting and Growth. Bro. Williams gave lessons on Forgiveness of Sin; Imputed Righteousness; Saved From Sin; Reconciliation; The Son of Man; and the Unsearchable Riches of Christ. These masterpiece subjects, in the hands of such able instructors, could not but be productive of interest and good results to those privileged to be present.

The Junior Class was made up of Sunday-school pupils, and were given instruction by Sister Robison forenoon and afternoon, and their action gave evidence of their belief that they were indeed a part thereof. Let us trust and pray the Father that the seed planted in these young hearts may grow to ripening and harvest in due season.

Each evening sermons by Bro. and Sister Robison and Bro. Williams were given to fair-sized audiences. However, a street carnival in progress had the effect of drawing some, evidencing the scriptural statement that "in the last days some will be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," and also that "they will be drawn away of their own lusts and enticed." We are sorry to be obliged to state that the four largest congregations in the state sent but four representatives, three from one, one from another, and the other two sent none. Contributions were made sufficient to meet expenses, lacking fifteen cents, leaving a balance in the treasury for next year. I am neglecting to note that the first fifteen minutes of each lesson period was given to a review of the previous lesson, the importance and worth of which will be recognized by all who are or have been teachers, and the readiness of proper answers to questions was the best evidence to be had of what had been gleaned. That the Bible School is a step in the right direction goes without saying, and the session just closed we feel to be another round in this monument to our lamented

Bro. Wince, whose love for his fellow-man unwittingly prompted the laying, with his own hands, of its foundation stones.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES

C. C. MAPLE

We have, since last report, been elected the Conference Evangelist for Michigan. Our duties began with the annual conference at Dutton.

Our conference was one of special interest, and the churches of the state were well represented. From Dutton we went to Grand Rapids and preached three evenings in the Fairmount Avenue Mission. Friday, Saturday and Sunday we were at Adrian in the interest of establishing our work in that city. We also spent Sunday morning at the Little Hope Church.

We are now at Delta, O., in a very interesting series of meetings. At this point several were baptized last year, and a good class has been kept up under the local leadership of Bro. S. J. Elton.

Brethren who write us concerning meetings may address us at our old address, Box 72, North Ridgeville, O., or Box 21, Dutton, Mich. All calls will be answered as soon as possible.

Yours in the Blessed hope. C. C. MAPLE.

GOOD THINGS

"For the Lord God is a sun and shield; the Lord will give grace and glory; no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly" (Psa. 84:11). "The young lions do lack, and suffer hunger: but they that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing" (Psa. 34:10).

It isn't everybody who knows what a good thing is when he or she sees it, especially in a divine sense. The average child, if promised a good thing, immediately concludes, of course, that it must be something sweet, and anything in the candy line will hit about the right spot. In fact, if no good thing were withheld from the children, as they understand what good things are, and all restraints and embargoes were declared off, and they had the freedom of the market, there would be such a raid on confectionery shops and toy shops as you never heard of, until they were loaded down with brandy drops and other sweet things painted red, and toy pistols, and cannon crackers. And medical practice and the undertaking business would take on a sudden boom in that town where such a proclamation was in force.

But most parents also have ideas as to what good things are for their children, though some doubt. Of course a little sweet and some playthings the children must have, and there will be no lack of these good things, I will warrant, in most households, unless the father or mother is addicted to drink, and spends every cent for it, even to pawning the little ones' shoes.

But I have seen some households where a certain good thing were lacking, though there may be abundance of it in others. And do you know what that is, children? Well, my father, now sleeping (bless his memory), and some of my old schoolmates used to call it "the oil of birch." It was applied in "the raw material" by cutting the fresh, green, birch twig, and browsing the lower limbs well with it when a child's mind and feet seemed to get turned in the wrong direction. It works like magic. It is "a good thing."

And then children may be ever so upright and need no rod of correction, but there are many good things which they do need that are considered by them as very commonplace, but which, however, cost the parents' hard-earned money, such as good wholesome food and plenty of it, and durable shoes and clothes, though they may not be the most fashionable or attractive to look at, and good papers and books to read. And right on this last thought let me say a word. Children of a larger growth, getting along well in their teens, are apt to think that is a good thing in the reading line which their parents, if they are Christians or persons of sense, would not have in the house under any circumstances. And these same children, when thus well brought up, will think the same toward their children too. All the child in infancy wants is something good to the taste, a little further on something to play with, and next, as the mind grows, that must also be fed. Now, parents, look out! All the grass that grows next a juniper bush is soured by contact so that cattle won't touch it. Take heed that the sweet girls or boys entrusted to your care do not get their minds soured or poisoned by contact with what is worse than juniper in a pasture, the deadly Upas of the flashy, poisonous fiction that is current today.

Now, you older folks, you Christians, are you gloomy because you do not have everything that the heart can wish? The best way to rectify this trouble is to fix the heart so that its wishes and wants will run right along in the sweet will of your heavenly Father without chafing. And I do not know of any better way than to have the heart or affections cleansed and rectified, so that the things you formerly loved and longed for you will now hate and abhor, and the things you once despised you will now highly esteem and seek after and strive for, so that it can be emphatically said that they shall not want any good thing which the Lord will withhold. It is easy enough for the Lord to give the desires of their hearts to those who delight themselves in him, because their heart are all attuned to his will. There is nothing in their hearts' desire that he needs to withhold. When we are in this blessed place there will be no "wonderful answers to prayers," but it will be wonderful if all prayers are not answered.

David said, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted." Then affliction is a good thing, and surely some seem to have a plenty of it while others lack. "It is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting." That is, it is if you are crucified with Christ, with the affections and lusts. But you will not think so if your mind runs in the course of this world. "And ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children, My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him; for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. If ye endue chastening, God dealth with you as with sons. For what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons" (Heb. 12:58).

Some children, it is true, differ from others and are dutiful. But I never saw a child yet (and I have a half dozen) that was anything excepting a dolt or dunce but that he will get bent wrong and need straightening if you do not want him to grow up crooked. And if there are any goody-goody children of the Lord who have got beyond chastisement or correction it is high time that the Lord gave them their time and a corner in paradise all to themselves, to farm it on their own hook. But I am thinking that they would make a bad mess of it. "For without me ye can do nothing." Let us be good, get good by knowing what is for our good, and endure unto the end, for these are they who will be saved from sin here and glorified hereafter. "The Lord will give grace and glory;" grace here and glory hereafter. Grace is the best thing he can give anybody in this world, and the most needed. Without it we never can endure unto the end and partake of the glory that shall be revealed. -Messiah's Advocate.

PRAYER

O Lord, we pray that thou wouldst strengthen and comfort us all, according to our different necessities. Hearts before thee that may be solitary and sad do thou strengthen and comfort, and help us all to follow the faith of thy servants whom thou hast taken to thyself, considering the outcome of their conversations here in the blessed light of thy presence now. Help us each to live as those who seek for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. And may we so order all our pursuits and desires here that our outward and inward lives on earth may prepare us for the rest and the service that remains to the people of God. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

LIMITATIONS OF CHILDHOOD

What a beautiful lesson and example of our own littleness when compared with our Elder Brother, Jesus Christ, is found in our little ones. As we study them, watch them, and see the look of wonder daily on their little faces when we try so hard to answer the many questions they ask, yet how often we have to give up and say: "Dear, you will have to wait until you get bigger, then you will know and understand." Sometimes they are puzzled and disappointed and wonder why. Time and again my little ones come to me with questions about something I can not make them fully understand; then, when I fail, this thought comes to me: How like our Heavenly Father plans we study. Some of us are rather wise in these things, we think; yet, brother, sister, we are simply like these little ones in comparison with what we shall be and what we shall understand. So why should we, because we can not understand it all now, say, like some do: "Well, I can't believe it all." Thousands of God's creatures have become just as puzzled as these children, and also lots of them refuse to search or ask or get knowledge. Instead they have turned away in unbelief. No wonder our Savior tells us we must become as little children. No wonder he says a little child shall lead them. Oh, for the simple faith of a little child, just to be able, when we have done all we can, to understand why our Father plans this or that, why he leads us here or there, just to be able to say: "Well, I will understand when I get bigger." When Jesus comes, and we are made like him, then, and not until then, will we be grown up and understand it all. Let us strive to grow in knowledge and grace until he comes to lift the curtain, and then our faith will be rewarded.

MRS. CHAS. H. THOMAS.

TOMORROW AND TODAY

Tomorrow, ah! tomorrow,
The good we think to do,
The hearts we'll rob of sorrow,
The ro es we shall strew!
And while we wait and contemplate
Our brood of golden plans,
The swift day dies and darkened skies
Reprove our idle hands.

Tomorrow, ah! tomorrow
O friend, be wise, I pray;
This world, so full of sorrow,
Needs all your lips can say
Of comfort sweet and actions meet
To help it on its way;
Speak, do, before a fast closed door
Shall mock you act today!

THOS. CURTIS CLARK

We are going to do a kindly deed
Sometime, perhaps but when?
Our sympathy give in a time of need,
Sometime, perhaps but when?
We will do so much in the coming years,
We will banish the heartaches and doubts and fear,
We will comfort the lonely and dry their tears,
Sometime, perhaps but when?

WHAT COUNTS

Selected by Chas. A. Goss

It isn't the money he makes that counts,
It isn't the money he gives;
The height he reaches to naught amounts
If false is the life he lives.

He may hoard up wealth and garner fame,
He may rule men with a nod;
But he is a failure, just the same,
If the path isn't straight he trod.

If his road isn't marked by kindly deeds,
If for self he has labored best,
And youth dare not follow where he leads
He has purchased but hollow cheer

If he hasn't helped when he could or should
If he's trampled the weaker down,
And lived to his self made code of good,
Then tawdry is his renown.

For it isn't results in gold that count
And it isn't the gifts he gives;
To nothing his world-wide fame amounts
If false is the life he lives

A FORTUNE IN YOURSELF

Every youth should be his own fortune. Wealth outside one's self is uncertain riches. The investment put into stocks and bonds may make you rich or leave you poor, but investments in character are never disappointing. The income that comes from training the brain to its highest efficiency, and cultivating the heart's responsiveness to whatever is good and beautiful, means wealth, for such investments bring happiness as well as abundance. No matter how large your outside wealth, you are poor unless you have a fortune in yourself.

Endeavor may not always bring happiness, but, there is no happiness without endeavor. -Disraeli.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-53); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John. 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

VOLUME 61. AKRON, O., JULY 8, 1913 NUMBER 27

CHRISTIAN WARFARE

Step by step we fight the conflict
Over a blood-stained battlefield;
To the hydra-headed monster,
Sin, we never more will yield;
He has slain his tens of thousands
Who in their own strength have gone,
But of those who trust in Jesus
He has overcome not one.

Martyrs faithful to their Master
Rest beneath the verdant sod,
Waiting till the mighty angel
Sounds for them the trump of God;
They are resting from their labor—
We must battle in their stead,
Or the enemy will conquer
And in vain their blood be shed.

Do you talk of Spartan courage?
Greater valor we must show;
We must wage a ceaseless warfare,
For we face a tireless foe.
He who conquers in this conflict
Must be like to Gideon's band;
He must watch his mighty leader
And obey his least command.

Do not fear to march straight forward,
Let the ranks no rupture show;
Let your shoulder press your brother's,
It will help him face the foe.
Leave no room for sin to enter,
He will rout you if you do;
Keep in step and do not falter,
Keep the vanguard brave and true.

And the victory is certain
With our Captain, Christ, to lead;
Naught can vanquish you or harm you,
Every effort shall succeed;
With the helmet of salvation,
And the shield of faith to guard,
And the sword of the spirit,
Which is God's own written word,

We can march beneath his banner,
On which truth is blazoned bright,
Knowing nothing can defeat us
In our struggle for the right;
On the field of Armageddon
Must be made the final stand,
And the blood of hosts shall redden
All that fair and beauteous land.

There the Prince of Peace shall conquer
And his standard be unfurled,
Then his reign be undisputed
Over all this sin-cursed world;
And the tree of life shall flourish,
And the wilderness shall bloom;
Sickness never more distress us,
And unknown shall be the tomb.

Soon we'll bivouac no longer,
And our warfare here will cease,
And we'll see the happy dawning
Of the reign of endless peace;
Soon for us will "taps" be sounded,
And we'll lay our armor down,
And to faithful overcomers
Christ will give a victor's crown.

ALICE B. CURTIS.

PRAYER

Help us, O Lord, day by day to draw nearer to thyself, to be more and more conformed "to the image of thy Son," to be "changed from glory into glory," as we look upon the face of thine anointed. We bless thee that transformation comes of vision, and we ask that our eyes may be cleared, and all our tendency to wander away in the contemplation of lesser beauties and good may be corrected, that we may more and more gaze upon Christ, in whom we see thee. And may the look change us into thy likeness. Amen.

THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS

M. JOBLIN

The duty of examining, each man for himself, the Old and New Testaments would seem to be demanded by the very title of our address. For if these documents contain covenants of anything, it may be well to ask, Covenants of what? If they speak to us of anything to be hoped for, of anything to be gained or won, common sense directs that we should inquire into the matter, lest things of the highest importance to us be missed and lost. Besides this, our experience teaches us that every good that can be named has natural conditions connected with it; that covenants carry with them provisions, so that every man should be anxious to know what these provisions are on which the covenanted good may be enjoyed.

As a people we are thoroughly persuaded that anyone of average capacity who can read his mother tongue may learn and know what the covenants of God contain. The only requirement is that we should be as earnest as we would be in looking into anything that reasonably promised to be of immense temporal interest to us. We are persuaded that any day laborer, man or woman, would show themselves quite equal to the task of mastering a long legal document, with all its technicalities and prolixity of composition, if by so doing, and fulfilling its provisions, they might secure an inheritance of some thousands a year. Both time and faculty would be forthcoming in such a case.

Friends, God is responsible for making himself intelligible. His providence over the Bible has led to this volume being given to us in our mother tongue. To us this is an indication that the English versions are sufficient to enable English readers to understand the truth of God. We hold, therefore, that though a knowledge of what was probably the language of the originals, and of early translations of these, is very helpful to the searcher, the teachings of the Bible may be learned in sufficient fullness and exactness from the English translations in use.

Concerning the vital parts of revelation, viz., the doctrines and precepts, every principal term used, we believe, may be well understood by a proper diligence in comparing scripture with scripture. God, eternity, life, death, sin, holiness, resurrection, redemption—these, and every truth in the heavenly volume may be sufficiently known by those who are simply honest and who are prepared to examine the matter as it ought to be studied.

To anyone who may be disposed to proceed further with us we would say: Let us approach the Bible as though we had never seen it before, read it carefully through. As this can not be done this evening, I will suppose that we have all done this. Then, remembering carefully what we have read, we go through it again, taking up the subjects in the order in which they present themselves, and putting together part with part, try to arrange in a system the truths which the book seems intended to teach. After this has been done we should take a few paces backward, like an artist viewing his fine picture, and consider the evidence, chiefly internal, of such teachings being true.

First, we shall ask what the book teaches, and then inquire whether it is credible or no. This seems the only natural course. Perhaps by the time we get to the end of the former inquiry we shall not need to go into the latter at all. God's truth should not need much besides its own round and lustrous beauty to convince our hearts that it is his. If I thought very much in the way of a historical argument for the Bible my trembling fingers would hardly write a line. As a basis of everything else we take the literal teaching of the Bible—judging of what is literal by that critical faculty, common sense, and so dealing also with parable, metaphor, symbol and poetic utterance, exactly as one would in dealing with any other book. We would not think of explaining a piece of prose teaching by a parable; we would do just the reverse of this. An brief statement or elliptical statement we would get unfold by the amplification of a longer one. We would assume nothing, and would respect the silence of the volume. What it does not say we would not worry about. What is not revealed belongs to God. The fault we find with most expositions is that they are wise above what is written. The scriptures accurately describe this as conceit. The only use for the reasoning faculty is in the important work of interpretation. We abjure speculation altogether.

After these preliminary remarks I ask your attention to some revelations concerning God. On opening the Bible and looking earnestly at its first words we feel like some watcher of the skies when a new planet swims into his ken. A cultivated mind meets there what it has long felt after, and a hopeful suspicion becomes a sweet certainty that some glorious and infinite personality is the author of the scheme of existence with which we are connected. Not that meeting with the word "God," in Gen. 1:1 alone, fills us with this emotion, but that perceiving what the Bible as a whole, together with what this first verse says of God, does so. Having read the volume through, we have been made familiar with what this first word means, and now, turning back to it, we feel its revealing power. The hopeful suspicion referred to arises from the cosmos or arrangement of things in which we are placed, particularly our own moral constitution as a part of it. Indeed, what is called "God" gives us more than a hint of God. That there is a partial revelation of God in nature is made quite certain in the Bible. Paul, writing to the Romans (1:19), says: "That which may be known of God is manifest to them (apostates), for God hath shown it unto them. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, his eternal power and Godhead, so that they are without excuse." The revelation may not be a perfect one, but it is clear as far as it goes, and it always has been so from the creation of the world. So Job, speaking of the creative acts, says: "Lo there are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard of him" (26:14). This is what is meant in Acts 14:16, 17, where it is said that God, "in times past, suffered all nations to walk in their own ways. Nevertheless, he left not himself without witness, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness." The testimony of nature in these facts was this, that if the Creator was thus good to his creatures, the creatures ought to be good to one another, which constitutes a moral law, good for this life, under which the unenlightened heathen have ever been placed. This law is what Paul refers to in Rom. 2:14, 15. Here the Gentiles, not having the law, but being a law unto themselves, are contemplated as possibly doing by nature the things contained in the law, their conscience also bearing witness.

These testimonies of the Bible are confirmed by the most obvious facts of human nature. In the rudest bosom, as in the most cultivated mind, there are certain moral instincts having the force of law which are good for this life, and which, where the spirit revelation has not reached, are the only guides (apart from the experience) of mankind. Where these instincts have been strengthened by reflection on the benevolence of creation the result has been to produce "the noble savage;" and where the instincts have been overpowered by the selfish propensities the product has been the degraded animalism found in uncivilized lands. Seldom is human nature become so brutal as to have lost the sense of the supernatural. Though worship may have run down to that of a mere fetish, yet some stock or stone has still been to the heathen the symbol of an unseen power. Whether any tribes do really exist who have lost all sense of the supernatural is a disputed point. The reports of travelers who have not lived long among the inhabitants of the places they describe are little to be relied upon, especially when they report what such people do not know or believe. And so it is that the skeptical Lubbock affirms, and the believing Lothardt and others deny, viz., that there are tribes of men who have no notion whatever of the supernatural. French tells us that the Australian aborigines had no word for love in their savage language, while their vocabulary was rich and elaborate with words to describe modes of murder. It may well be, then, that in the dark places of the earth, filled with the habitations of cruelty, man has sunk utterly into animalism, and has ceased even to wonder at the twinkling stars, or listen for the voices that cry in the rising wind.

In truth, all the faculties we possess must receive suitable culture or they will wither away, or run wild. The faculty of worship which perceives and adores God is no exception. If a spiritual worship is to be paid to him who is spirit the mind of man must be submitted to the influence of that truth which is spirit-taught. Then nature becomes more, far more, than a hint to us. To understand how significant nature is to the cultivated mind, just see how it appeared to David or Jesus. No one had such a perfect conception of it as Jesus of Nazareth. His parables were just the drawing out of these lines. He speaks in a language suited to all ages and all hearts. He breaks open the envelope of nature to us, and then we behold God's letter. He plucks a lilly, and in his fingers it takes on a spiritual form. So also in the Psalms we find a perfect revel in the spiritual import of nature; everything becomes vocal for God —day unto day uttereth speech, night unto night showeth knowledge. It is only with such aids that the devout Psalmist's heart can find expression for his top notes of faith and praise. There is a profound science in it all, as well as magnificent poetry. There is no kicking of the stars by him—he ascends on wings of reason to those sparkling lamps of night, and there in the highest heavens he sees that all material things are the alphabet of a divine love.

As soon as one's perception and understanding of the law of causality is pretty well developed it becomes an intellectual necessity to find, and rest in, a personal, conscious, intelligent being, who stands related as First Cause to the universe around us. Of his essence we may not profess to know anything whatever. We may not profess to comprehend his infinitude, or to fathom his eternity. To us it will sound very rational that "he dwelleth in light that no man can approach unto." That him "hath no man seen, nor can see." But faith advances from the visible to the invisible, and it is by its exercise that we come into the presence of the glorious fact of God. We believe that he is, because we must, or else suffer our highest reason to remain unsatisfied. It is a moral instinct in us which seeks this truth as its true rest. May I not say it is constitutional, and rest there? There is a conscious want, a craving appetite, just because man is a religiously organized animal, or breathing creature.

If we could believe in an eternal series, of an infinite chain of being stapled on nothing, that runs on, link after link, without any end, then God would not be an intellectual or moral necessity. But this is as surely impossible to us as the other is necessary. An eternal God may be a fact, but an eternal series of effects without a cause is not possible, even in thought. We must come to the first link by the mental process, and where can we staple it but in God? And the mind absolutely requires that God himself should be no part of a series—requires that he shall have life in himself, and be a perfect being in himself. Just as surely as the waves imply the ocean, and the undulations of light imply the sun, so surely do the series of phenomena called "nature" carry us back to the primal being in whom all things live and move.

But here, perhaps, some one may ask: "Why do you run back into the unseen, where the mind unconsciously creates its God, and calls him Maker?" A great deal could be said in reply—but we must content ourselves with a little at this time, but enough, I hope, to stimulate the inquiring mind. It must be admitted by those who deny or who doubt concerning God, and those who believe in him, that the cosmos is an arrangement proceeding to some end; whether personal wisdom presides over it, or it is its own wisdom, this is so. Every existing organism in this cosmos, and the laws under which it exists, prove that some result or other is aimed at, and the development which things have reached in intelligent and moral beings shows how high and grand this result must be. And the issue between faith and no faith is just this: Does this wonderful molecular power of arrangement, which results, it is said, in life and intelligence and the moral life of man, reside in the material atom? Or is this power a communicated thing from one whose being is necessarily higher than all these developments? If the former be true, then the material atom is GOD But, you, see, if that be true, there are as many gods as there are atoms. Or, if this power were supposed to reside in them collectively, then all the atoms taken together would be God. Now, in trying to get to the bottom of this question, which forms the issue between faith and no faith, important facts must be borne in mind.

First. The much talked of atom has only a hypothetical existence. Though Dr. Tyndall has minutely and curiously described it with all his gift of language and cunning illustration, just as though he had seen one and kept one in a little glass bottle for observation, in point of fact neither he nor anyone else has ever seen an atom, nor found it by any experiment whatever. He only gets it by what he calls the scientific use of the imagination, or, to speak like common, unscientific people, the existence of the material atom is by an act of faith. You are doubtless aware how often the believer is called upon to prove it, prove it, while all the time the scientist's creed says: "I believe in the material." This is exactly the same kind of faith as when a Christian says: "I believe in a personal God."

Second. But, supposing we had got the atoms, and that these contained within themselves the power of self-arrangement which results in conscious life and intellect, and moral feeling—in short, which at last brings forth humanity as we find it, with its Christ, its Pauls, and Peters, and Johns, all creatures of its own development—where is the sense of evolving lives like these? What is it all for? What a fool evolution makes of nature! To bring forth men whose hearts beat so grand and high as theirs, but beat on from day to day, from week to week, from month to month, from year to year, but beat, alas, in vain! Why did not development stop at the dog, instead of going foolishly forward unto men, who should begin to ask after God, if haply they might find him? Or, if development must go forward, why did not this atomic nature pursue it along some other than the moral route, so that man could miss that region whose light should make for darkness and where the perfecter the purity the more the pity?" If, in answer to this, we are told that religion is a childishness that man will get over in time, and that the weakness of worship will become a curious psychological study of olden times, I reply: Our experience in that direction does not raise our expectations very high. The few "advanced ones" whom we can inspect for ourselves are not encouraging specimens. "Man is what he eats," writes one of them, and you see for yourself that this reduces morality to a bill of fare. Whether this kind of thing is going to weave a moral crown for humanity, or the teaching of him who said "My meat and my drink is to do the will of him that sent me;" "that man does not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

My argument is that the material atom or atoms can not be the only God there is, because then nature would be guilty of an evolution in which it would prove itself a fad, by forming noble human characters and beautiful lives on principles that prove delusive; under this evolution men learn to pray, for example. What idiots the "atoms" must be to turn out men capable of prayer when there is no personal God to pray to! They are not all poor weak creatures who resort to prayer. Prof. Tyndall, even, says some of those who pray are the cream of the earth, and that prayer in its proper form hints at discipline which few of us can neglect without moral loss. This, to my mind, is one powerful reason why the material atom can not be the primal or highest being. For while everywhere the material universe shows marvellous wisdom and fitness, the chief creature —man—would then be the greatest and strangest of all evolved blunders.

Again, if there were no personal God, then the Bible, being false, no account could be given of the end for which the universe and man exist.

Granting for a moment the theory of La Place, that the world was once a mass of nebulous matter, a gaseous globe, we remark that a good deal has taken place since that. The gas has changed a good deal, in turning into men with brains and beating hearts, with the name of God on their lips and ideals of moral perfection before them. Though the result were only a joyous skylark winging its way upward that had to be explained, it would be difficult to say what the end was to which things moved; but when it is a moral being, capable of discussing his immortality, then it is we realize, not only how far we have got from the gas period (!), but also what a solemn question it becomes: "What is the end of all things?"

Science has not a word to say on this question, and as long as she retains this modesty we respect her; but when she puts on the airs of unbelief, and tells us that final causes can not be known, and that it is childish to be peeping into the end of things, we become indignant. We say it is the greatest of all inquiries, and has engaged the greatest of all minds. Scorn could no more put out this inquiring spirit than it could quench fire. The fact is, we can not help inquiring. Nature has gone far, developed us too highly for this. We are in for it now. Men will certainly search through the heavens and the earth, from the center of their own hearts to the circumference of the skies, to learn and know what it all means. They stumble across a book called the Bible. It talks about the fullness of time, the destruction of sin, the abolition of death, the filling of the earth with divine righteousness and glory, and all this by means of a heaven-created kingdom. It speaks of sin and evil as being a necessary expirement for mortals, and that it and redemption constitute a plan worked out from the beginning of time. That all things exist for God's pleasure (creation being the form in which he finds activity, and that at last he will be all in all). A righteous progeny of immortals form a family circle in which God is parent, and earth a delectable home. In the face of each child he sees his own image, the translation of his spirit. Not in hair and eyes, but in moral beauty and the affinities of eternal love, does the parent see himself reflected in these creations. He lives for them, and they for him, in the love-linked circle of a divine fellowship. They received their nature and gained their character from him, and are indissolubly united with his name.

Aside from this revelation, we are absolutely at sea. Science can suggest no end. With speechless lip and finger hardly steady, it can only point us to the grave, or tell us of a possible disaster which may destroy our planet. What a triumph of nature that would be, what a masterly result of atomic power and wisdom—a grave for each individual and a contingent smash-up for the world! Is there not more sense in the great form of Pagan superstition than in this naked folly of scientific unbelief? The former does try to reckon with the heart of man, and imagines an end in harmony with its own instincts; but the latter, in spite of its knowledge of nature's resources and means, sees nothing but death and the grave. Friends, do not the inward workings of thoughts like these in the deep recesses of our hearts create the impression that man is not the only conscious, personal intelligence in the universe of being, which makes us start with a quick response to the revelation of God, made to us in the Bible, where we find the spirituality, the unity and the perfection of a divine being, who is the Author, Ruler and End of all things?

"IN THE BEGINNING WAS THE WORD"

J. AUGUST SMITH

"In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God and the word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made," etc. (John 1:1-3). This is enough to quote for the present. We are sometimes told that the term "word" is a synonym for "Christ;" that it was Christ who created all things in heaven and in earth. Now the best way to test a synonym is to substitute it for the word it is synonymous with, and see what sense it makes.

Let us apply this rule. So we read: "In the beginning was the Christ, and the Christ was with God and the Christ was God. The same (God) was in the beginning with God." But who will stand by this rendering? Let those answer who believe it. For, first, their interpretation would give us a plurality of gods, and assert that both gods existed or were cotemporary in the beginning. Secondly, it conflicts with and contradicts the scriptures which declare that "Tthe Lord our God is one Lord;" "Thou shalt have no other gods before me;" "Beside me there is no Savior;" that God "alone stretched forth the heavens" and himself spread abroad the earth." Again: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth;" "God made the world and all things therein."

These quotations might be multiplied many times over, but they are sufficient to show that God, not Christ, is the creator.

Logos

Let us now turn our attention to this term here rendered "word," and we shall see that John does not contradict, but is in perfect accord with other scriptures upon this subject. Logos is defined by scholars to mean speech, reason, utterance, something said, that which is spoken. We will give a few instances where the term logos is found in the sacred text: "Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word (logos) of exhortation for the people, say on" (Acts 13:15). "What a word (logos) is this! for with authority and power he commandeth the unclean spirits and they come out" (Luke 4:36). "Their word (logos) will eat as doth a canker" (2 Tim. 2:17). "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word (logos) shall not pass away" (Matt. 24:35). "The seed is the word (logos) of God" (Luke 8:11). "Peter remembered the word (logos) of the Lord" (Luke 22:61). "He answered her not a word" (logos) (Matt. 15:29). "In the beginning was the word (logos), and the word (logos) was with God, and the word (logos) was God." "And the word (logos) was made flesh" (John 1:1, 14). "I have given them my word" (logos). "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word (logos) is truth" (John 17:14, 17).

This is sufficient to show that the Greek term logos signifies speech, word of communication, etc., and that it can not from any point of reasoning stand for another God, a personal God, other than the Almighty himself. To this agree the words of the Psalmist, who says: "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth" (Psa. 36:6). The word of God is all-powerful, omnipotent; all things were created by it. "He spake and it was done, he commanded and it stood fast" (Psa. 33:9). "And God said, Let there be light, and there was light" (Gen. 1:3). This same is repeated over and over again in Gen. 1, of all that God made.

God had pledged his word that the "seed of the woman" should "bruise the serpent's head," which promise was fulfilled when that word was made flesh and dwelt among us. The "Son of Man," when born, was the "word" of God personified and embodied. Therefore it is written of Jesus in Rev. 19:13 (and very properly, too) that he is "the word of God." This is appropriate. The word of God had been made flesh, and the time had, in the prophecy come, to execute judgment and to conquer. He was then entitled to execute the judgment and to conquer. He was then entitled to be spoken of as "the word of God," for he came to tread the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God.

renders this scripture under consideration thus: "In the beginning was the logos, and the logos was with God, and the logos was God. Through it everything was done; and without it not even one thing was done which had been done. It was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shone in the darkness, and the darkness apprehended it not. There was a man named John sent by God. He came for a witness, that he might testify concerning the light, that all might believe through him. He was not the light, but to testify concerning the light. The true light was that which, coming into the world, enlightens every man. He was in the world, and the world was (enlightened) through him; and yet the world knew him not; but to as many as received him he gave authority to become children of God, to those believing unto his name (John 1:1-12).

This rendering of the Emphatic Diaglott makes John harmonize with other writers upon this subject, namely: that Jehovah, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, created all things, by the word of his mouth, and that, when Mary conceived, "the word of God" was made flesh and lived among men as "the life" and the "light of the world."

And now, in closing this article, I wish to show that Jesus himself disclaims any part in the creation, and positively states that his Father, God, was the Creator. He says: "But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female. "What therefore God hath joined together let no man put asunder" (Mark 10:6,9). Also in Mark 13:19 Jesus says: "For in those days shall be affliction, such as was not from the beginning of the creation which God created unto this time, neither will be."—In Advocate.

THE COMMANDMENTS

Is it possible to literally fulfill the commands of Jesus and the apostles? I am sure in the affirmative. Jesus said: "My words shall judge you in the last day." Paul says in Heb. 5:9 that Jesus became the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him. "Obey him." remember. It is the doers of the word, not the mere hearers, who are to be saved (James 1:22-24).

In Matt. 19 we are told of one who came to Jesus and asked him what he should do to have eternal life. Jesus said to him: "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." Jesus also said: "Blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it" (Luke 11:21).

"That book," said Andrew Jackson, "is the rock on which our republic rests."

Several private members have sent us a list of new subscribers. We wish their example was as contagious as measles. If their letters would scatter the infection we would cut them into bits and have Bro. Nutt mail one to every delinquent subscriber, and extra scraps to some of our preachers, who want the paper for nothing, or at least at cheaper rates that private members, but they never send a new subscriber; indeed, we doubt if they ever recommend The Restitution to their Church.

We are not complaining. We have some as loyal ministers in the support of The Restitution as ever lived. Good brethren and sisters in different parts of the country have their lives bound up in the paper. But hot weather is here, and many will be away from home enjoying vacations. Under these conditions many forget their financial obligations to the paper; and contributors neglect to write. Will all such suffer this word of exhortation?

Many members of The Restitution family will be grieved to learn that Bro. T. J. Daniel, of Magazine, Ark., fell asleep June 4th. This sad announcement comes to us at the last moment. Sisters Daniels will doubtless see that a full obituary is sent for publication. Our sympathy and love go out to her and all the bereaved ones.

It is just as easy to form a good habit as a bad one, and it is just as hard to break a good habit as a bad one. So get a good habit and keep it.—William McKinley.

NUBBINS

The following story is going the rounds of the press.

Cain fell short, but Abel didn't. I can almost see how they acted and how they talked.

Being together one day, Cain said. "Brother Abel, come over next Sabbath and we will have sacrifice." "All right," said Abel, who always loved to go to meeting.

When Abel got there he found Cain had shucked his corn that week, and had piled the nubbins in one place near a big stump which might serve as an altar.

Abel felt mortified and said: "Why, Cain, I wouldn't do that. I would offer sound corn." "No," said Cain, "these nubbins will make a smoke all the same."

So saying, he laid fire on the stump and piled the nubbins thereon. There was a big smoke.

Before parting that day Abel invited Cain to visit him the next Sabbath, and join in worship over at his house.

When Cain arrived he found Abel near a new altar of stones, and close by was a magnificent steer worth a great deal. "Why, Abel," said he, "I wouldn't do that. This is the best steer in all the country. Offer up that little crumply-horned steer; it will make smoke all the same."

But Abel went ahead with the big fat steer. And when all the pieces were laid on the new stone altar a sudden bright blaze, self-kindled, consumed the offering.

Abel's joyful face shone like an angel's, but Cain slunk away and never said bood-by. God loveth a cheerful giver. He looketh at the heart, and not at the smoke. I hope none of you will be like Cain and put the Lord off with nubbins.

A GREAT THEOLOGIAN IN SOUL-SLEEPING PERPLEXITIES

J. L., of New South Wales, puts the following difficulty to David Smith, D.D., in The British Weekly:

"In 2 Cor. 5:1 we read: 'If the earthly house of our tabernacle be dissolved we have a building from God,' etc. One would presume this to imply that there is some environment for the believer's soul immediately on its departure from the body. Of course there is the resurrection body. But that is a matter of the future, whereas, according to the text, the house not made with hands is occupied at death."

Prof. Smith, one of the brightest stars in the English pulpit, solves this difficulty, not as he should, by abandoning the immortality of the soul, but by embracing soul-sleeping perplexities. "There is here," he says, "an argument for the necessity of a resurrection of the body in order to the conscious immortality of the soul." The soul, then, according to Prof. Smith, is unconscious in death, "asleep in the safekeeping of God," "asleep on the bosom of God," etc. To give his own words:

"This is a problem which it is impossible to solve with certainty on the existing data. The difficulty is that, so far at all events as the evidence goes, a physical organism is necessary to the conscious existence of the soul. This appears from the fact that the energies of the mind are diminished by the enfeeblement of the body, and, when the enfeeblement is extreme, entirely arrested. It by no means follows that the soul has no separate existence, since consciousness may return after a protracted cessation. But during the period of physical incapacity the mind is unconscious, and on the resumption of its energies can give no account of its experience; the interval remains blank. The inference seems to be that embodiment is a condition, not indeed of the soul's existence, but of its conscious existence; and the question is what its state may be on its dissolution from the body at death. There is here an argument for the necessity of a resurrection of the body in order to the conscious immortality of the soul; but the resurrection is a remote consummation, and what is the condition of the soul during the long interval? There is an ancient theory that betwixt death and the resurrection the soul is asleep in the safekeeping of God. The idea was defined by the poetical term psychopannychia, 'the soul's night-long sleep,' and it was falteringly expressed by some of the Christian fathers. It was revived at the time of the Reformation, and Calvin wrote against it in his earliest work, entitled 'De Psychopannychia.' He was only five and twenty years of age at the time, and there were others more experienced, if not more competent, who took a kindlier view of the theory. Luther, for example, at one period at least, accepted it; and, referring to the sudden death from apoplexy of the Elector of Saxony on his return from hunting, he said: 'Our good prince expired like an infant, without trouble or fear; and when he awakes at the last day he will imagine that he is just come from the forest.' In recent times it has been advocated by teachers of blameless orthodoxy, for instance by Dr. Gaussen, the Calvinistic Professor of Theology at Geneva, and author of a defense of Verbal Inspiration, entitled 'Theopnueustia.' 'My friend Gaussen,' wrote Erskine of Linlathen in a letter from Brigue in 1826, 'holds that the spirit is in a state of total insensibility from the instant of death until the instant of the general resurrection. The interval between death and judgment is in this way absolutely annihilated for them. Their last thought in this world will be instantaneously followed by the sound of the last trumpet. Their eye has just before death rested on the face of a friend on earth. The eye is closed, and instantaneously opened to behold the Savior descend from heaven with clouds and great glory." To my mind there is nothing in the New Testament which, rightly interpreted, precludes the theory; and there is much which seems to me agreeable with it. It is indeed dangerous to build upon a metaphor, yet it is significant that our Lord always spoke, not of 'death,' but of 'falling asleep,' and the apostles learned from him both the phrase and the idea. And there is the question which the story of Lazarus of Bethany raises, and which Tennyson expressed in familiar verses—why he brought back no tidings of his soul's experience during the four days when his body was lying in the sepulchre. The difficulty vanishes on the supposition that his soul was asleep on the bosom of God. And the theory would afford relief from the distressing idea that the departed are aware not only of the happiness, but of the sorrow of their beloved on earth—that a mother, for instance, knows the hardships which her orphan children are suffering. It would be a merciful dispensation that we should fall asleep and wake to see the blessed fulfillment of God's purposes without enduring the suspense of their long and painful development. The theory has its difficulties, and I have put it before you merely by way of suggesting possibilities. It were foolish to dogmatise on either side. The future is hidden from us, and it becomes us to leave it in God's hands with quiet hearts, confident that, whatever his appointment may be, it will be better than we can imagine."

From this the reader will perceive that Prof. Smith believes in the immortality and "separate existence" of the soul between death and resurrection. That part of man which is immortal does not die, but goes to sleep! Immortality in the slumbers of unconsciousness! Oh, the perplexities of immortal soulism! Lazarus "brought back no tidings of his soul's existence during the four days when his body was lying in the sepulchre;" and the explanation of this, as given by Prof. Smith is "that his soul was asleep on the bosom of God." But Prof. Smith, although a great theologian, is in utter confusion on the subject; for in The British Weekly of June 5th, page 248, he writes in forgetfulness and contradiction to this article, as follows:

"In my book, 'Man's Need of God' (pp. 81ff.), I have discussed the question of why Jesus wept at the grave of Lazarus, notwithstanding that he was about to restore his friend to life; and I have quoted the answer of St. Isidore of Pelusium, that it was precisely for that reason that he wept. He knew how much better it was for Lazarus to be at home with God, and it grieved him that he must summon him back to a world of suffering and sorrow. The mariner had reached the haven, and he must return to the tossing sea; the traveler had got home, and he must face once more the rough and weary road. If we be Christ's, death means going home and meeting again. And if we be Christ's, why should we sorrow as those that have no hope?"

In his first article Prof. Smith represents the soul disembodied as unconscious, "asleep," in "total insensibility;" that mothers know nothing of the hardships their "orphan children are suffering;" that the soul of Lazarus brought back no tidings from heaven because his soul was "asleep" while there! But in his second article he say that Christ "knew how much better it was for Lazarus to be at home with God; * * * it grieved him * * * to summon him back to a world of suffering and sorrow." As a mariner, he had "reached the haven;" a traveler, he had "got home." "Death means going home and meeting again." To raise Lazarus from the dead was to drive him out of his haven, to disturb his slumbers on the bosom of God, and deprive him of his "home!" Great preacher of the British Isles, study your Bible, gather up the fragments of your belief into a consistent system of truth. But to do this you will have to sacrifice the theory of the soul's immortality.

AMERICAN PRESIDENTS AND THE BIBLE

In taking the oath of office the American Presidents kiss the Bible, and they often press their lips to some selected passage. President Woodrow Wilson chose the sixth section of the 119th Psalm, beginning: "Let they mercies come also with me, O Lord, even thy salvation, according to thy word." The verses General Grant chose to kiss were Isaiah 10:2, 3: "To turn aside the needy from judgment and to take away the right from the poor of my people, that widows may be their prey, and that they may rob the fatherless! And what will ye do in the days of visitation, and in the day of desolation which shall come from far? to whom will ye flee for help? and where will ye leave your glory?" President McKinley selected at his first inauguration: "Give me new wisdom and knowledge, that I may go in and come out before this people; for who can judge this thy people that is so great?" (1 Chron. 1:10). For the second term of office he chose Prov. 16:20, 21: "He that handled a matter wisely shall find good; and whoso trusteth in the Lord, happy is he. The wise in heart shall be called prudent; and the sweetness of the lips increaseth learning."

The passages kissed by other Presidents have been: Hayes, Psa. 118:11-13: "They compassed me about; yea, they compassed me about; but in the name of the Lord I will destroy them. They compassed me about like bees; they are quenched as the fire of thorns; for in the name of the Lord I will destroy them. They hast thrust sore at me, that I might fall; but the Lord helped me." Garfield, Prov. 21:1: "The king's heart is in the hand of the Lord, as the rivers of water; he turneth in whithersoever he will." Arthur, Psa. 31:1-3: "In thee, O Lord, do I put my trust; let me never be assailed; deliver me in thy righteousness. Bow down thine ear to me; deliver me speedily; be thou my strong rock, an house of defense to have me. For thou art my rock and my fortress; therefore for thy name's sake lead me and guide me." Cleveland, Psa. 91:12-16: "They shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone. Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder; the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under foot. Because he hath set his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him; I will set him up on high, because he hath known my name. He shall call upon me and I will answer him; I will be with him in trouble, I will deliver him and honor him. With long life will I satisfy him, and show him my salvation." Roosevelt, James 1:22-25: "But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass; for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." Taft. 1 Kings 3:9-11: "Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad: for who is able to judge this thy so great a people? And the speech pleased the Lord, that Solomon had asked this thing. And God said unto him, Because thou hast asked this thing, and hast not asked for thyself long life; neither hast asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked the life of thine enemies; but hast asked for thyself understanding to discern judgment."

MEETING AT OLD RAKER

ELDER C. C. MAPLE

The meeting at Old Raker Church, near the city of Delta, closed on Sunday evening, June 22d. As a direct result of the effort two were baptized on Sunday afternoon into the name of the Lord Jesus.

Bro. Frank E. Siple, of Hamomnd, La., is with us at present as song leader and soloist, and his services were much appreciated at Raker. We feel that many more there will soon come into the family of God. We plan to hold a yearly meeting at Raker in the near future.

Our present meeting at that place was largely attended in view of the fact that the farmers were all very busy, and a road bridge was down, which made it necessary to drive several miles out of the way to reach the church. Our audiences did not number less than sixty at an average, and on Sunday evening the house was full. The meeting continued two weeks.

We are now at North Ridgeville for a few days. Our Bible School will be held at Adrian, Mich., August 4th-10th. Elder S. J. Lindsay, of Oregon, Ill., will be the instructor for this year. The meeting will be held in a hall in a central part of the town.

We plan for an advancement of our work during the year in Michigan. With Bro. Blakley as our conference president, and Sister Woodward as our field secretary, we are certain the work will be well looked after.

In the faith, C. C. MAPLE, Evangelist.

JOTTINGS BY THE WAY

On May 3rd we left our home, Salem, Ohio, for a trip through the West and South. It is not a pleasure trip, but to preach the gospel where we have a call. Our first stop was with Bro. and Sister Heacock, Canton, Ohio. We found them interested in the gospel of Christ. On Sunday morning we remembered the Lord's death and coming by breaking the loaf. We spoke on the importance of knowing the only true God, and Jesus the Christ whom he has sent. On Monday we continued our pilgrimage toward Mt. Vernon, Ohio, where our daughter, Sister Harker, lives. We found her rejoicing in the truth and looking for the Lord's coming.

We had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Harker, who lives near Mt. Vernon. Bro. Harker is firm in the truth. We also met Sister Darrah, who has withstood the efforts of the enemy in trying to get her to continue her fellowship with her former church. Her previous engagements prevented more than a brief visit with her. A call from the church at Hillsburg, Ind., required bidding all good bye on Friday morning, May 16th. After an all-day ride we were met at the railroad station and taken to the home of Bro. and Sister Wm. Huffer. Here we found rest. On Saturday evening we began a meeting which continued until Friday evening, May 23d.

On the Saturday following we continued our trip to Pleasant View, Warren County, O. Here we were met by Bro. Geo. Himmelright and daughter Verna. We were made welcome by Sister Himmelright and daughter Melva on reaching their home. On Sunday morning following we met a good audience in their church. We spoke on Christian Fellowship. We showed that social, religious and lodge fellowship is based upon certain principles. Those not eccepting this fellowship are excluded. This being true, how much more should Christian fellowship exclude those not in sympathy with the faith of Christ?

Our meeting continued over the second Sunday. The brothers and sisters rejoiced in the truths preached, and we feel that they were built up and strengthened in the gospel.

From here we went to Chicago. We were met at the station by Bro. W. H. Wilson and taken to his home, where we met Sister Wilson and daughter Jessie. Bro. and Sister Wilson have alike sacrificed a great deal for the gospel's sake. We were royally entertained while here. We had the pleasure of meeting a few of the brothers and sisters in the home of Bro. and Sister Wilson. We spent a very profitable evening with them.

Our next point was Plymouth, Ind., on Saturday and Sunday, June 7th and 8th. We attended the yearly meeting at Old Antioch. This church was erected and opened fifty years ago, Bro. H. V. Reed preaching the sermon in it. His services were secured to preach in this meeting. Bro. Reed spoke on Saturday evening, Sunday morning and Sunday evening. How our hearts did burn within us as he spoke of the blessed promises made by Jehovah to his children! Our pen is too weak to describe his oloquence. We had the pleasure of meeting Bro. and Sister Wagoner. On Saturday he spoke of "The Sure Foundation." The Indiana Bible School began June 9th. We had been previously engaged, with Bro. Williams, as one of the teachers. Mrs. Robison was given the children's class. The attendance was fairly good. Those who attended expressed thesmelves well repaid. While attending the Bible School we found a home with Bro. and Sister McCrory. Jehovah's messengers are made very welcome to all things that they possess.

Our pilgrimage was continued to Oregon, Ill., to attend their quarterly meeting. Here we met brothers and sisters from Lanark, Dixon, Aurora, Rochelle, and other places in the state. We were made very welcome. Your writer spoke Sunday morning and evening. Mrs. Robison spoke Sunday at 3 p. m. While in Oregon we were cared for in the family of Bro. and Sister S. J. Lindsay. We can truly say that our every wish was anticipated. Others extended invitations to visit in their families. We enjoyed a few hours on Sunday in the home of Bro. and Sister Knodle. We spent an afternoon with Bro. and Sister Cross and daughters and enjoyed their hospitality. Bro. Cross is county superintendent of schools, a very responsible position.

Previous engagements required our leaving Oregon and its enjoyments. Mrs. Robison shared with me the labors and enjoyments of our pilgrimage. We are now resting with Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Summers, of Oskaloosa, Ia. They are our nephew and niece. They are interested in the gospel and are intelligent people. We will assist them to put on the name of Christ.

As we journey we will send Jottings By The Way.

Your brother, D. C. ROBISON.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brother Huggins:

I have taken The Restitution for nearly nine years, and I am indebted to the many different writers for the excellent articles which have appeared in its columns from time to time. I will mention a few from which I have received real and lasting good: "The Law Question," by J. J. Heckman; "Immortality," by F. M. Howell; "Faith and Works," by Alta King; "Feeding on the Word," by Mrs. Chas. Thomas; "The Evolution of the Gospel," by D. C. Robison; "The Death of Christ," by the editor; "How Does the Lord Direct Us?" by Mrs. Ruth Whitehead. Besides these are many other good writers, such as C. C. Maple, T. J. Daniel, Mrs. S. R. Wince, and last, but not least, our esteemed Bro. W. H. Wilson. Now, brothers and sisters, don't think that I wish to place one writer above another; I do not. I appreciate all their articles. MRS. A. J. MARTIN.

Bro. Huggins: We rejoice to report the immersion into the name of the Lord Jesus Christ two worthy young people, Bro. and Sister Wm. Summers. Bro. Summers was formerly a member of the Presbyterian Church; Sister Summers of the Church of Christ (Campbellite). When they were married they decided not to dispute over their differences, but to examine the word and to abide by its teachings. The result was that both are intelligent believers of the gospel, and have obeyed the command to be buried with Christ in baptism. Our prayers are that they may remain faithful to the covenant they have made, and lead others into the light.

Your brother and sister,

D. C. AND N. B. ROBISON.

SOCIALISM

The Socialists are sending out envelopes on which is printed a card which reads as follows: "Socialism—the noblest thought, the divinest impulse, the supremest, the most thrilling and far-sounding battlecry of all history, whose rise has been the dream of all ages, and whose triumph will be the glory of all humanity" (Eugene V. Debs).

To which I reply: This utterance of Eugene V. Debs is the most infidelic, the most profound and unreasonable atheism, hence the most deceiving and falsifying statement ever made. Were it accomplished, which never will be, sickness, sorrow, pain and death would still exist.

Such is human Socialism. What a contrast with what will exist when a davine hand has readjusted human affairs in the golden age that's approaching, when the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and they shall be his people, and he shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more crying, sickness, sorrow, pain or death.

Such is divine Socialism, as set forth in the word of the ever-living God. Which will you choose. J. H. THOMAS.

REPORT OF MICHIGAN CONFERENCE

The annual Michigan conference for the year 1913 convened at Dutton, May 29th to June 1st, inclusive. It indeed proved a season of refreshing from the hand of the Lord. The rain of Thursday did not prevent the gathering of a godly number from all parts of the state and elsewhere for the opening session at 7:30. The song service was in charge of Bro. F. V. Blakely, of Grand Rapids. In the absence of Bro. B. W. Woodward, Bro. Blakely extended to all a very cordial welcome. Bro. L. D. Decker, President, responded with a few well chosen words, after which he introduced Bro. L. E. Conner as the speaker of the evening. His discourse on "Awake and Arise" proved a most fitting one for the opening sermon. It was full of encouraging and helpful thoughts.

On Friday the mists cleared away, and instead of showers of rain we received "showers of blessings." The brethren continued to come from the different parts of the state, Ohio and Indiana, until Sunday found more than a houseful of "those of like precious faith," eager to know more about Jesus and his coming kingdom. Many who could not be with us sent words of greeting and Christian love. Dear loved ones, this was indeed a token of your faithfulness to the Master, and gave inspiration to us all, and we pray that you, each one, may be blessed in return.

On Sunday our hearts were made to rejoice, when a young sister, Bernice Clark, daughter of Sister Clark, of Middleville, followed her Savior in the waters of baptism. Bro. Conner assisted her in putting on the all-saving name of Jesus.

The program was carried out as printed, with the addition of a Young People's Meeting Sunday at 6:30 p. m.

We were especially favored in having with us Sister Elizabeth Reed, of Chicago, who gave a paper on "The Symbology of the Skies," followed by an address on "The Star and Scepter," by Bro. H. V. Reed. It was indeed a rare privilege to listen to two so gifted and learned yet humble servants in the Master's vineyard.

Bros. C. C. Maple, T. V. Blakely, Bro. and Sister Woodward, with the before mentioned speakers, comprised the ministerial force, and it is to these able expounders of the truth that much of the credit is due for one of the most helpful, inspiring and successful conference meetings.

It was voted to employ Bro. C. C. Maple, formerly evangelist for Ohio, as our state evangelist for one year. The money necessary to carry on this work is being met by pledges. A paper was drawn up, stating amount needed, for the purpose of receiving pledges, payable to A. K. Richardson, weekly, bimonthly, or in such amounts or at such times during the year as will be most convenient. A copy of said paper will be sent to each church and isolated member by Sister M. A. Woodward, our field secretary.

Brethren, here is an opportunity to prove our loyalty to Christ. Let us not be found wanting in well doing, for we shall reap if we faint not.

Result of election of officers is as follows:

President—F. V. Blakely, 1037 S. Lafayette Street, Grand Rapids.

Vice-President—Frank Richardson.

Secretary—Emma Jackman, Burton Street, R. F. D. 11, Grand Rapids.

Treasurer—A. K. Richardson, Hastings, R. F. D. 2.

Field Secretary—M. A. Woodward, Dutton.

The work of the Field Secretary is to look after new fields of labor and the needs of the state, and thereby help direct and plan the evangelistic campaigns. It was voted to hold the next fall quarterly conference at Millbrook. Time and place of the Summer Bible School was left to the decision of the Executive Board, notice of which will appear later.

Report of sister's meeting will be given by its Secretary.

May God sustain his gospel workers till he comes.

ROSE MILLER, Secretary.

FIELD NOTES

June 17th we started from our Louisiana home to join Elder C. C. Maple in Delta, Ohio. We stopped over night in Chicago with Bro. W. H. Wilson and family, and were very kindly and pleasantly entertained by them. Leaving Chicago on Thursday morning, we joined Bro. Maple in the afternoon, and found him conducting a thriving series of meetings. As was proposed, we added our services as song leader, and the meetings continued throughout the week with large and attentive audiences. The people at Delta are very enthusiastic, and although we were entirely among strangers we were made to feel at home. It is our present intention to remain with Bro. Maple and aid him as Michigan evangelist.

Yours in the blessed hope,

FRANK E. SIPLE.

A SUGGESTION

Dear Borther Huggins:

I would like to ask a question through the paper, to be answered by one that believes he has an immortal, conscious entity that survives the body in death, and consequently believes that Luke 16:19-31 is a literal narrative. The account says (in verse 22) that "the rich man also died, and was buried;" and not one word is said of any part of him going some other place. I think all are agreed that his brain (organ of thought), eyes and tongue were buried with him. But if the imaginary immortal part (the supposed part of God) went into an eternal, literal, burning hell fire, and had a brain to produce thoughts, and a tongue to be cooled off with the wee particle of water that he (or it) requested, and eyes (better than those buried with the rich man) to see Abraham so far off, and Lazarus in his bosom (extremely keen eyesight, to see Abraham, who was buried in the piece of ground that he bought to bury himself and his wife on), (Gen. 23:16), the question arises: Will the rich man, when resurrected, have two sets of brains, two tongues, and four eyes, or will one set be discarded?

Please answer. We have no account of Jesus having two tongues and four eyes when his body (himself) was resurrected.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:16, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-53); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:15; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:28), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

PRAYER

O Lord our God! "Thy mercy endureth for ever," and they compassions fail not. We would come to thee to praise and bless thee, and beseech thee that all our hearts may unite to fear and magnify thy great name. Surely thy hand has been upon us for good all our days, and we have to bless thee for the whole crowd of benefits daily flocking in upon our lives. We have often forgotten thee; we have often taken thy good gifts, and never given a thought to the hand that gave. We have often misused thy benefits. We have made thee a screen to hide thee from us instead of a window to reveal thee to us. But we beseech thee to forgive all our misuse and misapprehension of thy great mercy, and to help us, with gladsome minds, to praise the Lord, and to be sure at all times, and whatever befalls, that he is kind, loving, and good. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A FEW QUESTIONS

I hope that each reader (after careful consideration) will properly answer for himself, all of these questions. Are you sure that your religion does you much good? If not, have you any good reason for believing that it will do you any good at Christ's second coming? Surely you believe in telling the truth, but are you telling the truth when you sing: "He leadeth me, he leadeth me, by his own hand he leadeth me;" or should you change the words, and say: "He would lead me, he would lead me, if only I would be led by him?" Jesus was very unpopular with the world, and can you believe that he leads you into any of the popular, worldly amusements and customs of the world, even beyond your means, and injurious to health?

A company of near friends, singing at my home recently, sang that song. I told them, if I believed that each one was telling the truth, in singing those words, I would surely be the most happy man in California, regardless of my sore affliction; for I know by faith, that one led by him, is sure to meet our Savior in peace, when he comes to raise the dead, and change the living.

Are you obeying the command in 1 Peter 3:15, to be ready always (at any time) to give an answer (Bible answer) to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and reverence? If not, are you ready for Christ to come? Do you prove to yourself and the world by your words and manner of life, that you believe Prov. 15:3, that the eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good? Do you think that you would sometimes act different, if you could see him looking at you? Do you sometimes say "no" to your child (that is from one to ten years old), and the child says "yes" (by word or act), and by persistence gets its way, teaching even the child to be more persistent the next time? Did you tell a lie in saying "no," or was you mistaken in saying "no," for the child knew better than you did the outcome of saying "yes" and staying with it? Do you think you had such staying qualities when you were a small child, as your child has? If so, it is a pitty that such qualities left you when raising a family. Do you act as though you believe Hosea 4:6, which says: "My people are destroyed (cut off) for lack of knowledge." Read Prov. 2:3-6; 4:7. 8:11; 16:16, which show the great importance of wisdom. Prov. 16:25: "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." Are you satisfied with ways that seem right to you, or are you searching earnestly for the wisdom which is from above. If the latter, you will know more than the little child, and know how to train it up in the way it should go, as the wise man said in Prov. 22:6, but if you neglect such an essential thing as gaining wisdom, can you reasonably think it possible for you to obey the greatest command which is loving God, as Jesus said in Matt. 22:37? Do you think it possible to love without some acquaintance? Have you a good reason for believing that you will be one of those that we read of in Rev. 20:6; Daniel 7:27, and 1 Thess. 4:13-18? If so, you should be happy, under most any circumstances, even though you do sometimes shed tears, seeing the indifference of your friends.

In Matt. 6:31-33, speaking of food, drink, and clothing, Jesus says: "But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Is this a stumbling block to you or have you learned by a faithful study of God's word, that your wants of perishable things have been greatly diminished; and do you often thing of the ignorant, hungry, starving people of India, and wonder why your lot was cast in this land of Bibles, freedom, and plenty? Are you, as said in Rom. 12:11, not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord? Do you do your own business, and work with your own hands, as commanded in 1 Thess. 4:11? If so, you can see how the necessary things are added.

Are you living so as to receive the promises to the rich in faith; and do you take and read The Restitution, and believe what it teaches? If so, are you selfish enough to barely pay your subscription (it may be), after the Business Manager sends a dun, that he hates so bad to do? Are you sacrificing (at least) the unnecessary pleasures of life, to help enlarge the paper, and increase its circulation? If not, are you obeying what Jesus said in Matt. 22:38-39? Were the two greatest comandments, which is to love God, with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all the mind, and love thy neighbor as thyself? Are you obeying either of the two greatest commands if you give but very little or none of your means to help rescue the perishing? Are you obeying the command in 1 Thess. 5:21, by proving all things (by Bible witnesses), and holding fast that which is good? Are you rich enough in faith, to often think of 1 Thess. 4:13-18, and Rev. 21:4; and does it give you much comfort every time you think of these verses? I would like to ask more questions that I think are important, were it not for intruding too much on our space. I close with lots of love for all.

THE DOCTRINE OF ETERNAL PUNISHMENT

[For review of this article, see editorial page, under heading of "Everlasting Punishment."—Editor.]

This is not a popular doctrine. There are many who want to get rid of the thought of hell, and applaud any teacher who denies the existence of such a place. This explains in part the popularity of Russellism and kindred cults. Once in a while a few men pass some resolutions to the effect that there is no hell. They say that the doctrine is a relic of the dark ages.

The people of Mediaeval times are blamed for many things for which they were not responsible. In spite of all resolutions and conventions, hell is a reality.

This is true, first of all, because the scriptures clearly teach that the righteous will dwell with Christ forever, and the wicked will be separated from him and be punished forever. In the picture of the judgment given in Matt. 25, is a description of the separation of the righteous and the wicked. "Then shall he say unto them on the left hand, 'Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels.'—And these shall go away into everlasting punishment but the righteous into everlasting life." "Everlasting," descriptive of punishment, is the same word as "everlasting," which is descriptive of life. If punishment is not everlasting, life is not everlasting. Moreover, the same word is used of God in Romans 16:26, "Everlasting God," and other passages. Punishment will continue as long as God exists. In Heb. 9:14, the same word is used of the Holy Spirit, "the eternal Spirit." In Rev. 20:10 the devil was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night, "forever and ever." The same words are used in the passage, "God who liveth forever and ever." As long as God liveth the devil will be in the lake of fire and brimstone.

Nor is this all, he will not be alone. In the closing verses of the same chapter it is said that whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire. That these will be in the same place of torment is evident from the words of Jesus himself: "Depart from me, ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." The ground of this separation is stated in 2 Thes. 1:7-9. "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengence on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord." Note that in these passages which we have quoted, "hell" is not mentioned. The idea of eternal punishment does not hinge at all on the translation of the word "hell." What makes hell so terrible is eternal punishment whatever name be given to the place. In the old Testament, "sheol" is the word used to describe the abiding place of the dead. In the King James' version it is translated "hell," but in the best revisions, is not translated. That it did not mean annihilation is evident for two reasons: (1) The scripture passage in which "sheol" is found. It is represented as a place of conscious existence after death. "Let them go down alive into sheol;" "Thou wilt not leave my soul in sheol, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy one to see corruption;" "Sheol from beneath is moved for thee to meet at thy coming." The Old Testament teaching is that "sheol" is the temporal abiding place of conscious spirits after death. (2) In translating the Hebrew word "sheol" into Greek, in the Septuagint, hades was used; and neither one of the two Greek words meaning "grave." With the Greeks "hades" was the abode of departed spirits who still lived and held converse with one another. The idea of annihilation was not remotely connected with it. This intermediate state, awaiting the general judgment from which all will go to their final estate, either heaven or hell (gehenna)—lake of fire—is one in which the righteous and unrighteous have some foretaste of "everlasting" punishment or everlasting life. Jesus said to the thief: "This day shall thou be with me in paradise." The angels left their first estate and were cast into "tararus," the intermediate state of the unrighteous. In hades, the abode of the departed spirits, are paradise and tararus. The one scripture passage which has given the Millenial Dawn people so much concern, is the picture of the rich man in hades, experiencing the tortures that will be his final estate in the hell of fire. It is written down so plain that the wayfaring man cannot mistake its meaning. By the most grotesque and farfetched allegorizing they have tried to explain it away by referring the rich man to the Jew and the poor man to the Gentile, and the sufferings of the Jews in modern times.

The use of the word "hades" instead of hell in the so called "Baptist Bible" for example, does not affect the doctrine of eternal punishment. It is a correct translation, placing more emphasis on the state of the intermediate dead, and does not touch the state of the righteous and unrighteous after the judgment. There is much foolish talk indulged in by men who don't want to believe in hell, and that is the principal reason why any scripture teaching is rejected, the indisposition to believe because of the discomfort produced by it, and the natural perversity of man. How often do we hear such talk as this: "I believe God is too good and loving to damn men in hell forever;" "I cannot believe that God is such a monster that he will take delight in torturing men in hell forever." The trouble is that these men have missed it all around. God does not damn any man in hell. He takes no delight in torturing any one. Such men wholly misrepresent scripture teaching, as well as the views of those who believe in hell. Hear the cry of God in the Old Testament: "Have I any pleasure in the death of the wicked?" "And not rather that he should turn from his way and live?" "I have no pleasure in the death of him who dies; wherefore turn and live." In the New Testament (2 Pet. 3:9) is this testimony: "The Lord is long suffering toward you, not wishing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." See also Rom. 2.4-9. Back of the doctrine of the love of God is the doctrine of the holiness of God. God is loving, but he is also just and holy. He is not an indulgent God who winks at our sins. Into his presence no unholy thing can come. Prof. Forsyth says truly: "Our religion harps on love till it reaches the condition of those decently demoralized people who read nothing but the literature of love, slacken every moral fibre by the submission to this of every other interest in life, and finally gravitate to a chief interest in its morbid, immoral forms."

There is a shallow sentimental teaching that God is too loving and merciful to punish his creatures for their sin. No penalty for sin, no place for Christ. The parents who follow such a policy, never exacting a penalty for a broken law, giving laws, but never punishing for their infraction, will send out children who will be anarchists in government. God, because he is just and holy, cannot overlook the transgression of law. Every transgression and disobedience must receive a just recompense of reward. Our conception of sin will depend on our conception of the holiness of God. The love of God is magnified by the holiness of God. If God were not holy and just, if men could be saved without the penalty consequent on a broken law, Christ would not have needed to die. It is only when we contemplate the holy God that we appreciate the love of God.

God does not damn men in hell. They go there of their own free will and accord. God has provided redemption for sinners and his spirit pleads with all who hear the story of his love. If men go to hell, it is because they deliberately reject the offer of God's salvation. No man who goes to hell can blame God for it.

It is our conviction that the preacher who does not believe in hell, has no business preaching. He does not have a full gospel, because the gospel involves salvation from hell as well as salvation to heaven. We need to preach hell more than we do. It is in the Bible. We must not make salvation any easier than the Bible makes it. Christians have nothing to fear in believing the existence of a hell. Sinners are to be warned to flee from the wrath to come.

We must swing the danger signal across the path of the ungodly. We must preach hell, but preach it with love and compassion for the lost. There will not be deep conviction for sin and due appreciation of the love of God so long as we shrink from preaching that whatsoever a man soweth that will he also reap.

COMMUNICATIONS

Editor The Restitution:

I am engaged in the business of growing apples, alfalfa, and some general farming, but owing to the difficulty of getting men to help I am thoroughly disgusted.

I would like to communicate with anyone in the truth who is striving to gain the kingdom of God who would like farm work. I want four or five good, trustworthy men, married or single.

Very truly yours,

CHAS. C. TALIAFERRO.

Orange, Orange County, Va

[We are not personally acquainted with Bro. Taliaferro, but his letter is accompanied by a letter of recommendation from Sister Gertrude Logan. From her letter it appears that Bro. Taliaferro is a novice in the faith, a man of education who is seeking to be relieved of the constant care of the farm so he can use his time in preaching the gospel of the kingdom. She adds: "If the Lord will, I hope you can help him, through The Restitution, to get men, with or without families, who are willing to come and work for him. It will be to their interest, as well as to further the cause of the blessed Master, as they would not need to be watched, and he could get out and preach. He has the gift, and I believe the Lord will open the way for him to preach in this way." The blessing of the Lord be with this new Brother.—Editor.]

CONFERENCE NOTICE

The Iowa Conference will convene as usual at Waterloo, Ia., August 23d-31st, inclusive.

It is none too early to begin to make your plans to attend. We would like to see every member of the Church of God present with their families and their friends. Especially do we insist upon isolated members making a special effort to attend. We need your presence to encourage us and help us. However, as much as we need you, it is'nt as much as you need to come. If you are a member of the Church of God, and interested in the things of the kingdom and hoping for the soon return of the Lord Jesus, it is your duty to meet with us and help to keep alive the interest in these Bible truths.

All of God's commands were given, not for God's benefit, but for the good of the people themselves, and when he told the Israelites to meet together at Jerusalem for their religious festivals there was an object in his doing so, and as long as they went and worshiped God in the right spirit many blessings come to them, which was but the natural result of their meeting together. It not only taught them about God and how to worship him, but in being together and worshiping him, and studying his word, and getting an interchange of thought and ideas, they received a strength and helpfulness that could not be attained in any other way. It also kept them alive as a nation, and made their religion the living, active force of their life. It also was conductive in harmonizing their differences and difficulties, and strengthened the friendship and relations of the different tribes in a way that could not have been done had it not been for these national religious feasts. This made them a strong nation and a power before other nations, even though they were few in numbers and their territory small. But as soon as they became careless and indifferent divisions arose and the blessings soon ceased.

The same object and results will be with us today if each one is willing to do his part in meeting together for this eight-day spiritual feast, even though it is at the sacrifice of some temporal pleasure or worldly gain.

We read (Heb. 10:25): "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another, and so much the more as you see the day approaching." "The day"—what day? The day when the Lord shall be revealed from heaven, the day when he will raise the dead and change th living saints to immortality, and reward everyone according to their work. What a glorious day it will be! How we should look, and watch, and prepare for it! Never before has the signs of the times been so ominous and so numerous. The night is far spent, the day is at hand. Soon we will see Jesus coming, and those that are ready will go into the marraige supper with the Lamb, and those that are not ready will have to go into the great tribulation, that great hour of trial that is to come upon all the earth. For this reason the apostle says, Don't forsake the assembling of yourselves together, but help and encourage and strengthen one another, that ye might be found faithful. The easiest way to keep faithful is to meet together at least once a year, if not oftener, with those of like precious faith, to hear good sermons, exhortations, with Bible lessons and songs of praise and psalms of thanksgiving.

Nearly everyone can come if they want to make the sacrifice; the expense is very small, and almost anyone can earn enough or save enough in a year's time to attend. The yearly conference ought to be the first object and consideration of every true disciple of Christ. It should be the one thing we look forward to through the year, as the happiest and most restful time we can have, whether we are business men, or farmers, or housewives, or young people. It is the one place where everybody can be happy, providing they come in the right spirit to give the best in themselves for others and to help in every way they can. If you do this you will get the best returns and most happiness for the money and energy expended of any investment you ever tried.

Our Day

Today is your day and mine—the only day we can have, the day in which we play our part. What our part may signify in the great whole we may not understand; but we are here to play it, and now is our time.

This we know: it is a part of action, not of whining. It is a part of love, not cynicism. It is for us to express love in terms of human helpfulness. This we know, for we have learned from sad experience that any other course of life leads toward decay and waste.—Selected.

FAITH

Now, faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen (Heb. 11:1). What doth it profit, my brethern, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? Even so, faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? (James 2: 14, 17, 20).

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned (Mark 16:16).

And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, and thy house (Acts 16:31).

If ye continue in the faith, grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature under heaven, whereof I, Paul, am made a minister (Col. 1:23).

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greeks (Roman 1:16).

If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved (Romans 10:9).

But we are not ofthem who draw back unto perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul (Heb. 10:39).

Knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience. Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him (Jas. 1:3, 12). Above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked (Eph. 6:16).

But let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet the hope of salvation (1 Thess. 5:8).

But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him (Heb. 11:6).

That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world, through him, might be saved (John 3:15, 16, 17).

How Justified

And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses (Acts 13:39).

Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come we are no longer under a schoolmaster. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized itno Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise (Gal. 3:24 to the end).

Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law (Romans 3:28).

Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ (Romans 5:1).

Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law; for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified (Gal. 2:16).

That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ (1 Peter 1:7).

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. J. E. HATCH.

HE IS COUNTING ON YOU

He is counting on you!
On a love that will share
In his burden of prayer,
For the souls he has bought
With his life-blood, and sought
Through his sorrow and pain
To win "home" yet again.
He is counting on you;
If you fail him
What then?

He is counting on you!
Oh, the wonder and grace
To look Christ in the face
And not be ashamed,
For you gave what he claimed,
And you laid down your all
For his sake—at his call.
He is counting on you;
And you failed not.
What then?

GEHENNA

Dear Bro. Schaumburg: Your exegesis of our Lord's words in Mark 9, "And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off; it is better for thee (the real man) to enter into life (be converted) maimed (the loss of one eye or arm) than to be cast into Gehenna," southeast of Jerusalem, for that was the penalty under the law. Offenders were stoned to death.

There is not even an inference that our Lord meant any future punishment, as there would not be either flesh or worms left for the worms to feed on in the future destruction; they are consumed entirely.

This whole narrative was a warning to the multitude. Jesus was addressing the Jews—he did not preach to Gentiles—and the Jews well knew if they were caught forcing another by laying on hands, lusting by looking with their eyes until they were tempted to commit the act, they would be stoned to death, and cast into Gehenna. It never occurred to them that Jesus referred to a future death, but the death they were all familiar with.

The entering into life referred to by our Lord was conversion, taking up their cross and following him. This would be a start to entering eternal life by faith in the Life Giver.

Now listen: What Jesus said to the one that asked him what he should do "to have eternal life." He said, "Keep the commandments." He said he had kept them all, but Jesus knew he did not keep them through love, or by the spirit, but by the letter. Jesus, to try this man's love, ordered him to sell all he had, and then what? Why, "come and follow me;" for the law can not give life.

Dear reader, I have become disgusted in hearing brethren figuring away from the Lord's literal words and making them have no meaning. When the wicked shall be cast into the lake of fire, after the great judgment day, there will not be anything left of them for the worms to feed on. God hath said he will make a quick work of it. We conclude our Lord had reference to temporal destruction in Gehenna fire, then at Jerusalem in the valley of Hinnom.

J. T. AULD.

PRAYER

O Lord, our God and Father, thou livest forever, and we thank thee that thou dost give to thy children blessed and immortal life in thee. We thank thee for the sure hope which we have by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, and for all the light which he shed on life and immortality. We bless thee that we sorrow not as those that have no hope. We thank thee for the glimpses of glory beyond which thou hast permitted us to receive. And we pray that, more and more, we may feel that life is solemn and great because of that other life to which it leads. O Lord, may every one of us be of Christ's flock, led by the Good Shepherd, and so sure to be led by him in the green pastures of the higher life. Amen.

When one is sad or out of sorts for any cause whatever there is no remedy so infallible as trying to make somebody else happy.—J. W. Carney.

EDITORIAL

Look ahead: the crop of tomorrow is sown today.

The two w's—waste and want—are near neighbors; so also are stinginess and stint. "The liberal soul shall be made fat."

Pride is always odious. If you are afflicted with it, throttle it by forcing it to do humbling things. You will take the backbone out of it at last, and reduce it to the useful condition of a mettlesome horse well broken.

The Ohio Conference convenes this year in Springfield, August 6th-10th. Speakers of unusual ability have been secured for the meeting, such as Brethren Almus Adams, J. H. Henderson, and George B. In the meantime plan to attend.

EVERLASTING PUNISHMENT

Part I.

Elsewhere in this number will be found an article entitled "The Doctrine of Eternal Punishment." A reader in Texas sent it to us for review. In the hope of clearing up some cloudy texts on the subject we now address ourselves to the task.

We are not concerned in the least about that part of the article which deals with Russellism, nor have we any sympathy with those who would vote hell out of existence, nor do we give a rap what hades meant to the Greeks. We are deeply interested, however, in teaching our readers correct views of hell, everlasting punishment, and other related subjects, for these are Bible themes, and hence are of vital interest to all mankind. God bless us as we now try to elucidate them to the glory of God and the good of our readers.

Eternal Punishment

"And these (the wicked) shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal." I will concede that the words "everlasting" and "eternal" in this passage have the same signification, as they are both from the same word in the original. I will also grant that, in the passage quoted, both words have the same meaning as to duration, namely, without end. So when Mr. Routh and other ministers make such strenuous efforts to prove that the word "everlasting," as applied to the wicked in this portion of scripture, covers the same ground as the word "eternal," applied to the "righteous," they are wasting valuable time, and besides this are "barking up the wrong tree," to use a homely expression; for those who hold the doctrine of "eternal torment" to be unscriptural and believe, in accordance with the Bible, that "the wages of sin is death," do not desire to do away with the import of the words "everlasting" and "eternal" as being unending in the passage under consideration. "Then," some may say, "your cause is certainly lost, for it is plainly evident that the passage is totally against your view of the doom of the wicked being death, as it is unending punishment they are to receive." Not "totally," in fact not in the least is the passage against our view, as I shall now proceed to show. But before doing so I will commit myself to this: That whatever punishment is inflicted on the wicked will last eternally.

An Antithesis

It will be noticed that the portion of scripture under consideration (Matt. xxv:46) contains an antithesis—the "everlasting punishment" which the wicked are to "go away into" is contrasted by our Lord with "eternal life," which the righteous are to go into. It is not a contrast of eternal "happiness," in the case of the righteous, with everlasting misery in the case of the wicked, as Mr. Routh and many other preachers often put it. These two phases are never found in the Bible at all, although they are quite common in the pulpit. So, dear readers, do not get deluded into a false position in this matter, for the contrast is one of "everlasting punishment" with "life"—not happiness. It is evident, then, from the wording of the text, that the wicked are not to receive that with which the righteous are to be rewarded. What then is this great boon the righteous are to receive as a reward? According to this passage, and many others in the Bible, it is "life eternal." Then, it is plain, if the antithesis is observed, as indicated by our Lord, that whatever the nature of the "punishment" may be that the wicked go into, there can be no "life eternal" connected with it. This is not the only evidence the great Prince of life has given us to this effect, for he said distinctly and pointedly on another occasion, "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life"—everlasting (John iii. 36). Besides this, there are many occurrences of language of similar import in the New Testament, which was spoken by the Giver of life, as well as by the Apostles also. So any teaching which says that the wicked go into everlasting suffering or misery, teaches that they receive "eternal life" as well as the righteous, and consequently involve the making of Christ a liar, as such teaching flatly contradicts his words on this subject, as we have seen. For if the wicked were to go into everlasting misery or torture they would necessarily have to receive "eternal life" as well as the righteous, and consequently the language of the text we are considering would be meaningless, as the antithesis would lose its force and be destroyed.

Nature of the Punishment

"Well, then," say you, "how can it be said that the wicked 'shall go into everlasting punishment' if they shall not, at the resurrection receive everlasting life?" In answering this query we will have to look briefly into the nature of the "punishment" the wicked are to receive, according to the Bible. Paul has something to say on this point. He says the wicked "shall be punished;" and he also says the punishment will be "everlasting," too. Notwithstanding the fact that Paul is dead, he yet speaketh. So, please, Brother Paul, tell us what the nature of this everlasting punishment of the wicked is to be? Hear him: "They shall be punished with everlasting DESTRUCTION from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of the power" (2 Thess. 1:9). David, also an inspired servant of the Lord, gives like testimony. He says: "The Lord preserveth (by giving eternal life) all them that love him, but all the wicked will he DESTROY (Psalm cxlv:20). These texts make Matt. xxv:46 plain—the "everlasting punishment" is to be "destruction" if we are to believe Paul, the apostle of the Gentiles, and David, the man after God's own heart. Will sinners have any life when destroyed? No, not any, for "the wages of sin is death," says Paul; and when an animal or a person is destroyed they are dead. Now God shows, by his Word, what he means by the word "die" or "death," to the sinner, in this wise: He said to Adam, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shald surely die," (margin, "dying, thou shalt die.") This was, and is, the penalty for transgressing God's law. Well, Adam transgressed, and was sentenced by God in accordance with the penalty, as follows: "And unto Adam he said * * * in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." To "surely die" had the meaning and result of returning again to dust of the whole being. Adam, then, was destroyed and dead. God also shows through Paul, that the penalty for sin is physical death, for it is the same kind of death, according to him, that overtakes "all men" on account of sin committed through Adam.—Rom. v. 12. So it cannot be what is called "spiritual death." This is made further evident from the fact that Paul shows, moreover, that this death has for its remedy the resurrection of the body—the person. "For since by man (Adam) came death, by man (Christ) came also the resurrection of the dead" (Cor. xv:21, 22). The resurrection of the physical man is not the remedy for moral or spiritual death, but it is for literal or physical death; and this is the only kind of death that God has ever pronounced as a penalty for sin. In the case of the final or future destiny of the wicked it is appropriately called the "second death," which of necessity must be of the same cahracter as the first, otherwise it could not be called "the second;" it might be called the first of another series, but not the "second" unless one of the same nature preceded it. If the whole or real man does not literally die, why the necessity of a resurrection? The Bible tells us that in death the being called "man" has neither "memory," nor "wisdom," nor "thought," and "knows not anything." So from this we must conclude there is no consciousness in the death state; it is a state of "silence" until the resurrection, according to the scriptures. See Eccl. ix:5, 10; Psa. vi:5; cxlvi:3, 4; cxv:17. But notwithstanding these plain declarations of man's unconsciousness after he dies, the "orthodox" objector will still insist that the "destruction" mentioned by Paul, and the death of Adam, apply only to the body, and that man has an immortal soul which neither destruction nor death can reach, and this soul or immortal part, it is claimed, is the real man and the body only the house he lives in while on this mundane sphere. Well, when God created Adam he called that which was made of the dust, "Man," and after he breathed in to the nostrils of this man, made from dust, "the breath of life" (not an immortal soul, please observe) "the man became a living (not immortal) soul;" consequently just previous to receiving the breath of life, Adam must have been a lifeless soul. That which became a living soul was made from the dust of the ground if we are to believe God. And, moreover, God spake to that which was made of the dust as being the responsible ego, when he said: "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return;" but the breath of life or spirit (not immortal spirit) would "return to God who gave it." "Thou" here, as elsewhere in the Bible, represents whatever is the responsible individual, man, who we have seen is of dust composition. It will be noticed that God did not threaten Adam with eternal torment as the penalty for sin, as is done now by our modern would-be guides to holiness. No, he did nothing of the kind, for the reason that such was not the truth, and we are told in the scriptures that "God cannot lie" (Titus i. 2). But, if ever there was an occasion which was particularly opportune for God to make the doctrine of eternal torment authoritatively known to mankind, when dealing with Adam, the federal head of the human family, was in my humble opinion a peculiarly fit time. But God was silent then and has been ever since as far as that God-dishonoring doctrine is concerned. We should conclude, then, that the doctrine is false. The objector is also astray when he claims that "the soul is immortal and therefore cannot either die or be destroyed," for God's Word says distinctly: "The soul that sinneth it shall die" (Ezek. xviii:4, 20), and that God "is able to destroy both soul (or 'life,' which is the correct rendering according to Dean Alford and others) and the body in Gehenna" (Matt. x. 28). The "life" spoken of here cannot be destroyed by man, as it is, evidently, the life beyond the resurrection to which Christ refers. Men can destroy the present life by killing the body ("man"), but "after that have no more that they can do" (Luke xii. 4). They cannot reach the future life. God can destroy that; and in the case of sinners will "destroy both life and body in gehenna" fire. The same word, "destroy," in Matt. x. 28, is applied to the "soul" equally with the "body," and consequently if it means literal destruction in the case of the body, it must have the same signification for the soul. The Bible teaches that eternal life is a conditional gift (Rom. vi:20-23), and immortality a thing we must "seek for" by continual "well-doing" (Rom. ii:7); a thing which the "mortal" bodies of the righteous "put on," and are "clothed with" at the resurrection (1 Cor. xv:42 to 54; 2 Cor. v:2-4). Such being the case, how can we actually possess immortality now, inherently, by way of an immortal soul? It was only the serpent who said, "Ye shall not surely die." Shall we believe the serpent in preference to God? Of course there is a sense in which the beliver "hath everlasting life" even now (John v:24), but he hath it not in actual possession at the present time, for it "is hid with Christ in God" (Col. iii:3, 4). "And this is the record, that God hath given to us (believers), eternal life, and this life is in the Son." Therefore "He that hath the Son hath (this) life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not (this) life" (eternal) (1 John v. 11, 12). By having the Son of God, through faith and immersion, we have this life, for this life is in possession of the son.

Result of the Punishment Eternal, Not the Process

But the objector is not yet satisfied, for he wants to know how there can be any everlsating punishment in "destruction" resulting in cessation of life. In reply to this I must say that Paul is considered by all genuine Bible students and commentators to be among the very best of Bible authorities in matters of christian doctrine, and he calls "everlasting destruction" punishment. He says they "shall be punished with everlasting destruction." Please bear in mind that the text we are discussing does not read that they (the wicked) "shall go away into everlasting" punishing, but punishment—in the sense of completion. If "everlasting punishment" signifies an everlasting process of infliction, or punishing, then we can as reasonably urge that when we read of "eternal judgment" (Heb. vi:12) we must understand it to mean an everlasting process of judging, or when we read of "eternal redemption" (Heb. ix:12) and "eternal salvation" (Heb. v:9) we must understand these to indicate an eternal process of redeeming and saving men. which would be equivalent to teaching that the process of judging, redeeming and saving men will never end—never be finished or completed. It is plain to be seen that in these instances the result is what is everlasting, not the process. Why not understand "everlasting punishment" in the same way, the style of phraseology in each case being the same. Seeing that the punishment of the wicked is "destruction" resulting in "death," it lasts for ever—hence, "everlasting punishment."

Comparisons and Emblems.

When we consider the fact that the Bible compares, and uses as emblems of the wicked such combustible articles as "the fat of lambs," "withered branches," "tares," "chaff," and "stubble fully dry," we need not be surprised when we read in God's Word that the wicked "shall perish," become "ashes," be destroyed and "shall consume into smoke," etc., etc. The application of such terms to the wicked teach in thunder tones that there can be no lasting qualities, in the shape of life, in connection with their future destiny. Peter says they are "as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed * * * ; and shall UTTERLY PERISH in their own corruption" (2 Peter ii. 12). And Obadiah says, "They shall be as though they had not been" (Ver. 16). These expressions are so very pointed and conclusive that comment would seem to be superfluous, as everyone knows that brute beasts can have no life when destroyed, and that "corruption" is not consistent with immortality; and if God's enemies are to be consumed into smoke and ashes, like chaff, stubble, and the fat of lambs, and in this way become "as though they had not been," they cannot long hold on to life in any sense, and consequently are destroyed in the same sense as natural brute beasts.

Meaning of Kolazoo and Kolasin

Notwithstanding that I think I have now shown, conclusively, the inconsistency of the popular exposition of Matt. xxv. 46, I wish to call the reader's attention to another important point in connection with the passage. I have reference to the signification of the Greek word kolasin translated "punishment" in this verse. Its primary signification, according to some, if not all, of the widest known and most eminent lexicographers, among whom are Liddle and Scott, is to cut off, or prune, or lop off. Robert Young, LL. D., a Presbyterian, and author of Young's Analytical Concordance gives "pruning" (which literally means cutting off), restraining, restraint,' as the meanings of the word. See Young's Anaylt. Concordance, student's edition, page 995, under head "torment," in 1 John iv:18, and under head "punishment," page 784, in Matt. xxv:46. These two places are the only ones where the word kolasis occurs in this form, in the New Testament. and it is evidently wrongly translated in 1 John iv:18; as the word for "torment" is basinos, and is in no way related to kolasin. The Emphatic Diaglott, a critical translation of the N. T., gives the following version of Matt. xxv:46: "And these" (the wicked) "shall go forth to aionian" (age—lasting) "cutting off; but the righteous to aionian life." In a foot-note on this verse, in the Diaglott, we find the following: "Kolasin in its various forms only occurs in three other places in the New Testament, Acts iv:21; 2 Peter 2:19; 1 John iv. 18). It is derived from kolazoo which signifies, 1. To cut off; as lopping off branches of trees, to prune. To restrain, to repress. 3. To chastise, to punish. To cut off an individual from life, or society, or even to restrain, is esteemed as punishment; hence has arisen this third metaphorical use of the word."

Now, if we apply the primary meaning of kolasin, as given above, which no doubt is correct, to Matt. xxv:46, in the part of that verse referring to the destiny of the wicked, we find that this portion of scripture with the above primary meaning of kolasin substituted for punishment, is in strict harmony with the teaching of the scriptures elsewhere on this subject of the doom of the wicked. For instance: we read, "Evildoers shall be cut off" (Psa. xxxvii:9, 22, 28, 34, 38; Prov. ii. 22). Cut off from what? Cut off from life eternal, judging from what the connection says in these portions of scripture and in many others in the Bible. Matt. xxv:46 would then teach as if it read thus: These (the wicked) shall go away to be everlastingly cut off (from life), but the righteous into life eternal. The wicked are restrained by death from partaking of the life the righteous receive or go into. This cutting off, resulting in death as a punishment which lasts for ever, for the result is everlasting death. And, according to the Bible, the instrument of destruction, which is to "cut off" the wicked from life, will be fire, notwithstanding the fact that some do not believe in material fire as a place of eternal punishment.

The Instrument of Infliction—Fire.

In the very same chapter which contains the text we have been enquiring into (Matt. xxv. 46), this language is found: "Then shall he (Christ) say unto them on his left hand (the wicked), Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire (everlasting in its effect) prepared for the devil and his angels" (ver. 41). It is quite evident, from the reading of the chapter, that these two verses have direct connection one with the other, and that those "on hte left hand" who "depart into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels," of verse 41, are the same individuals who shall go away into everlasting punishment (cutting off), mentionel in verse 46. Notwithstanding this some have overlooked the fire mentioned in verse 41. Well, let that be as it may, this passage speaks plainly of the wicked departing "into fire." I now respectfully invite your attention to a few other pasages wherein fire is shown to be the instrument of infliction; and in these we shall also see the effect the "everlasting fire" has on those who are inflicted or punished with it: "Behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be (as) stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name (the righteous) shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his beams; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked (how so?); for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts" (Mal. iv:1-3). There must be literal fire in this instance, else how are we to account for the ashes? Another passage says: "The wicked shall perish and the eneimes of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; (in what respect?) they shall CONSUME; into smoke shall they consume away" (Psalm xxxvii:9, 10, 20). This passage must also have reference to real fire, otherwise how do you account for the "smoke" and consuming of the wicked the same as the fat of lambs consumes in fire? We read again: "He will burn UP the chaff (the wicked) with unquenchable fire" (Matt. iii:12). This not only speaks of "fire" being the means of infliction, but it also shows that the fire cannot be quenched before the wicked are "burned up" like chaff, or consumed.

"WHAT DO YE MORE THAN OTHERS?"

"Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy. But I (Christ) say unto you, Love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you (why?), that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven. For he maketh his sun to rise on the just and the unjust, and sendeth rain on the evil and the good." "For if you love them which love you, what reward have you? Do not even the publicans and sinners the same? And if you salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others?"

In the above language of scripture there appears to be in the mind of Christ the thought that in his followers there should be a higher degree of character and living than that which was shown in the lives and walk of the publicans and sinners. If not, why claim any distinction of character and manner of living, is the thought Christ has in mind. "What do ye more than others?" If the Christian's daily walk and conversation exactly correspond with that of the world; if what the worldly people all love and enjoy, and we practice the same; if what they hate we despise and have no heart to enjoy, what better are we than they? "What do we more than others?" It is declared in Titus 2:14: "Christ gave himself for us, that he might redeem us (take us away from where he found us in the world), from all iniquity (sin), and purify us unto himself a peculiar people" from that of the world. Where would the peculiarity of such a class come in if they are so much alike no one "could tell the two apart," let me ask.

To illustrate my thought, let me draw before your mind a true picture. A very devoutly religious lady, whose husband had never made any religious profession, approached him during a religious meeting and tried to persuade him to join the church. He said to her: "My dear, of what benefit would that be to the church, to you, or to myself? As matters now stand with us, I accompany you to all the church services when you go, you know; I pay my full church assessment, as you know; I sing with you in the church choir when you are there; I attend the Wednesday evening prayer meeting when you go; I care for the children and get supper as best I can, that you may be able to attend the 'euchre party,' and if possible win the prize; I often go with you to some 'hairpin' social,' a 'charity ball;' we share equally in the profits from our dance hall and picture show. Now, my dear, how could our lives be more congenial and happy than they are should I put my name on the church book with yours?" The wife, with a crimson flush mantling her cheek, dropped her head and was speechless under his mild reproof of the inconsistent life she was leading as a professed Christian, knowing his criticism was well founded.

What is it that causes the peculiarity that should exist among Christians in contrast to that of the world? One condition, at least, is spoken of in Titus 2:14. Let us now quote the rest of this verse. Because they are "zealous of good works." God's children, as has been stated, are a peculiar people because of their "good works." Inspired by love, "fervent in spirit," earnest in their effort for good, and eager to accomplish something for others. As was said of Christ: "He went about doing good."

Let us see to it that our peculiarity is ever found on God's side. L. S. BRONSON.

GLADNESS IN RELIGION

Psa. 97

1. The New Testament is the Official Guide to the happy life; all of it written by experts, under the influence of that spirit, one of whose fruits is joy (Gal. 5:22). Though Jesus is rightly called the Man of Sorrows, he is also the Man of Joy. The sorrows that weighed upon him he bore for others, while the effect of his life and ministry was to disseminate happiness. A chief contrast between Jesus and John the Baptist lies in this, that John was a gloomy prophet whose words froze laughter in men's hearts and brought the cloud of terror to their brows, whereas the disciples of Jesus were so merry that, when people complained of them, Jesus likened them to a wedding party (Mark 2:19). Renan is not far wrong in his description of the earlier ministry of Jesus when he says: "He thus traversed Galilee in the midst of a continual feast. When he entered a house it was considered a joy and a blessing. He halted in the villages and at the large farms, where he received open hospitality."

2. But the joy of the New Testament, the joy of Jesus, is what we may call a supernatural joy. It is a joy which can not be gained in the ordinary ways to which men instinctively turn when they seek happiness. The worldly prescription for happiness is made up largely of such ingredients as "money," "pride," "power," "popularity," "triumph." The Great Physician, however, tells us that these things will not give us the highest joy, and can not cure us of the ills of sorrow. People who are poor, hungry, sorrowful, hated and persecuted may nevertheless be happy (blessed), whereas the rich and the full and the popular are to be pitied (Luke 6:20-26). There is indeed a supernatural joy which can override all those conditions which tend to prevent it; it is independent of them.

3. But being in the Church is not a passive state. No one can keep his place in the Church without being active, zealous, continually serving God. No Christian has a right to say even concerning his spiritual treasures, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years: take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry." The joy of the Lord is the reward of service rendered, and the highest joy referred to in the New Testament is the joy which Jesus himself experienced, and which he desired his followers to share—the joy of obedience. "These things have I spoken unto you," said Jesus, "that my joy may be in you." What were "these things" that would give to us his joy? Bearing fruit, keeping his commandments (John 15:1-11).

4. One of Tolstoy's short stories admirably illustrates the connection between Christlike service and joy. It is called, "Where love is, there is God also," and tells of a shoemaker, Martuin by name, who, during a long life, suffered so many misfortunes as to wish that he might die. Bereft of wife and children, he was alone in the world, when an old friend told him to get a New Testament, and read in that how he should live for God henceforth. Martuin took this advice, and read the New Testament until it became clear to him what God wanted of him. He gave up the public house and other evil things, and became, as he still read eagerly, brighter and happier every day. Once, when he had been reading late into the night, and had been pondering and praying over what he read, he had a vision. It was that the Savior spoke to him and said: "Martuin! ah, Martuin! look tomorrow on the street. I am coming." Next morning the poor shoemaker hardly knew what to believe. One moment he called himself crazy, the next he was watching the passers-by to see if he could see Jesus coming. But Jesus did not come. During the day, however, he had three adventures. First, he saw an old snow-sweeper, who had not strength to work. Him he called in, and gave refreshment and a seat by the fire. Then he saw a poor, homeless woman with a little child, wearing old summer clothing in the bitter winter. Her also he succored, giving his old great coat and a little money and some food. Afterward he made peace between an old apple woman and a young urchin who had stolen an apple—taught the boy to ask forgiveness, and the woman to pardon, and saw the two walk on good friends, the boy carrying his late enemy's basket. Martuin went to bed that night, and before he slept he heard the Savior say: "Martuin! ah, Martuin! did you not recognize me?" And Tolstoy finishes his story thus: "Martuin's soul rejoiced. * * * On the upper part of the page he read: 'For I was in hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and yet gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in.' And on the lower part of the page he read this: 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'"

Do not be troubled because you have not great virtues. God made a million spears of grass where he made one tree. The earth is fringed and carpeted with grasses. Only have enough of little virtues and common fidelities, and you need not mourn because you are neither a hero nor a saint. - Henry Ward Beecher.

You never get to the end of Christ's words. There is something in them always behind. They pass into proverbs, they pass into laws, they pass into doctrines, they pass into consolations, but they never pass away, and, after all the use that is made of them, they are still not exhausted.—Dean Stanley.

Blessed are they who have the gift of making friends, for it is one of God's best gifts. It involves many things, but, above all, the power of going out of one's self and appreciating whatever is noble and loving in another.—Thomas Hughes.

The misfortune most to be dreaded is that which absorbs us so that we have no sympathy or pity to spare for those about us. Joseph's lot was not so hard that he did not have eyes to see the shadows in other faces and a heart to feel the suffering of his fellow-prisoners.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

CALLED

"Partakers of the heavenly calling" (Heb. 3:1).

Holy brethren, called and chosen by the sovereign voice of might,
See your high and holy calling out of darkness into light!
Called according to his purpose and the riches of his love;
Won to listen by the leading of the gentle heavenly dove!

Called to suffer with our Master, patiently to run his race;
Called a blessing to inherit, called to holiness and grace;
Called to follow on with Jesus, by the ever faithful one;
Called to his eternal glory, to the kingdom of his Son.

Whom he calleth he preserveth, and his glory they shall see;
He is faithful that hath called you, he will do it, fear not ye!
Therefore, holy brethren, onward, thus ye make your calling sure;
For the prize of this high calling bravely to the end endure.

PRAYER

Grant us thy gracious help now, O Lord, that our time of worship may avail to strengthen any good in us and to weaken the evil, and to bring us into more assured possession of thyself, revealed to us in thy strength and grace in Jesus Christ our Lord. We thank thee for every good gift from thine hand; humbly we acknowledge before thee how little we have been worthy of the least of thy mercies, and we pray that more and more the greatness of thy revelation of thyself which floods the world may fill and illuminate our hearts and minds, and that in all we may have thee with us, in thy light seeing light, drinking of the river of thy pleasures, and drawing life from the fountain of life with thee. Hear us, we beseech thee, in our prayer, and in thy mercy forgive and answer us, through Christ our Savior. Amen.

THE LAW OF LOVE

There is no subject that is left in the background quite as much by God's people as the Sabbath question. There is no other subject which causes so much hostility and indifference toward the truth as this same subject. For example: In our community more folks hold aloof from us and refuse to come to our Bible class and refuse to give us the chance to explain why we differ from them, because the report has gone out that we are Sabbath breakers; don't believe in a sabbath. They decide therefore we must not even believe in the Bible, and while this is only one of several more important questions, yet it is the little thing that offends and keeps us from reaching those whom we would like to reach. Lots of people will accept other truths until you explain that the sabbath law is not binding, and then immediately are offended. Having been a member of an orthodox church until lately, I know this to be a fact.

Let us go back to our Savior's time: Was there any question that caused so much offense as the Sabbath? Yet our Savior, if you will notice, was not preaching on the Sabbath question at all, but they, like us, had been taught from childhood that it was necessary to be a good sabbath-keeper in order to be saved. Therefore, Jesus was deemed by some as all wrong because he did not keep the Sabbath day. "Did not keep the Sabbath day?" we hear our orthodox friends say. No; those Jews were partly right in accusing our Savior of not living up to the old Jewish laws. He did not come to keep them, but to fulfill and do away with them.

Let us first examine the Sabbath law. It reads: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." What is meant by keeping it holy? In it thou shalt not do any work." It does not read: "Do only what is positively necessary. They were commanded to not do any work. "Thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy strangers that is within thy gates." If we read further we will find that they who were under the law were given more light, yet they were positively not to even gather manna to eat, or sticks to burn, and some were stoned to death by God's command because they did these things. Now who gave us any right to change that Sabbath law? Follow the law as given to the children of Israel, and see if in any case God told them to not keep it in the same way first laid down. That law is still binding, it is binding in the one and only way given. We clean our homes, prepare our meals, or have it done; we drive our horses and cattle; we walk out in the garden and pick fruit and prepare it, etc., etc., and then claim we are keeping the Sabboth law! What does God say about changing his law? "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, is guilty of all." So we find by reading the law and commands as laid down by God, that our orthodox churches are not themsleves keeping the sabbath law; also you will find on careful study, that there is no place where our Master says to keep the day to suit ourselves.

I have heard folks say: Oh well, we are not supposed to keep the Sabbath like the Jews; times have changed." Yes, there is a difference, and let us see in what way. The ten commandments were only the beginning of hundreds of laws that were given and enforced; yes, hundreds, and my friend, if you, as you claim, are by adoption brought under the Jewish laws, you are under them all. There is no getting around that fact. You claim that by our Savior's example or teaching, he intends us to keep the Sabbath. True, our Savior met at places of worship on the Sabbath, so also did the disciples, and so also do God's people meet together on the Sabbath, or some day in the week for worship, which is a good and beautiful thing; for if we do not pause some time in the week to think and study, we are liable to let the cares of life choke out the truth.

But the question we are dealing with is this: Is the Sabbath law still binding, or are we now under the law of liberty? What do we find in the New Testament about it? First, Jesus in no case commands anyone to keep the Sabbath. While the other nine commandments are repeated in the New Testament, the one about the Sabboth is left out! Jesus plucked corn and ate and did several other things which were in accordance with the Jewish law. When they accused him he said that the Son of Man was Lord of the Sabbath day. The Jews were to be saved according to the keeping of the laws, and the burden of those hundreds of laws were more than they could bear. Their burnt offerings, sacrifices, etc., were to be kept throughout their generation, but not throughout the generation of the Gentiles. Why? Because Christ says he would establish a new law (a law of liberty). So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham. For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse, for it is written, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them." But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident; for the just shall live by faith. And the law is not of faith, but the man that doeth them shall live in them. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us, for it is written, Cursed is everyone that hangeth on a tree" (Gal. 3:9-13).

Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgression till when? Till the seed should come, to whom the promise was made, and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator (Gal. 3:19).

What took place when the promised seed come? He came to not destroy the law but to fulfill. But before he came, or before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up into faith which should afterwards be revealed. Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster, to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster (Gal 3:23-25).

Notice this carefully; we are no longer under a schoolmaster, no longer under the law. How plain and yet how we cling to these things, and judge each other in the keeping of days, etc. We are made free from such by Christ, yet these Galatians, like us, still tried to carry the burden of those laws. Paul rebukes them for this very thing. "But now after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage. Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years: I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain" (Gal. 4:9 1-1). Again, in speaking to the Corinthians he says: "Who also hath made us able ministers of the New Testament, not of the letter (or old Jewish law), but of the spirit, for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life. But if the ministration of death (the law), written and engraven in stones was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses, which glory was to be done away (in Christ); how shall not the ministration of the spirit be rather glorious? For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious. Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech. And not as Moses, which put a vail over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that which is abolished. But their minds were blinded. For until this day remaineth the same vail untaken away in reading of the Old Testament, which vail is done away in Christ. But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the vail is upon their heart" (2 Cor. 3:6-15).

After reading these texts carefully, we can plainly see we are not to turn again and try to bear these burdensome laws, but we are under a new testament, a new law of liberty or love. Christ's life, teaching and death were all of the law of love. He repeatedly tells those questioning him what law they must keep. A lawyer asked Jesus which was the great commandment! He replied: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with thy soul. This is the first and great commandment; and the second is life unto it, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thy self." On these two commands hang all the law and the prophets. So we shall find if we try to measure up to these two commands. We will find them without end, including all other commands. God is Love.

BIBLE KNOWLEDGE AND ITS VALUE

"Watch therefore for ye know not the hour your Lord has come. But of the day and hour knoweth no man, no not the angels of heaven, but my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 24:26).

Many times, when speaking of the near return of Christ, the above text is very fluently quoted to discourage us in our knowledge and hope of Christ's second coming in the near future. Well, now we never have attempted to set the hour, day or year for his return. But if there is no way for God's children to know anything of the future from the scriptures and from the events transpiring around us daily pointed out by the scriptures, why is it stated, "The scriptures are written for our learing" (Rom. 15:1), if they are of no value to us in this important decision? Christ once said to the people: "Ye hypocrits, ye can decern the face of the sky and the earth." (He did not condemn them for that; people do the same today.) "But how is it that ye do not decern signs of the times" (Luke 12:56) in which ye live, which is of greater importance? They had no excuse for their ignorance, any more than we have today, for they had the Old Testament prophesies. We too are commanded to search the scriptures "for they are they that testify of me" (John 5:39). And Paul in 2 Tim. 3:15 declares these same Scriptures are "Able to make us wise (even) unto salvation."

We can learn many things from the Scriptures if we choose. We may be regarded as fools in the eyes of the worldly wise, but listen: If we are children of God we are "wise in Christ" (Cor. 4: 110). Listen again: "Many shall be purified and made white and tried, but the wicked (blind world) shall do wickedly (keep on sinning), and none of the wicked shall understand" (Dan. 12:10). Glorious thought. If we wish to know God and his purpose with man, earth and heaven, we have only to "do his will;" we shall then "know of the doctrine" whether it be of God or not (John 7:17). If we wish to know something of the near approach of the "day of the Lord" (not Sunday); if we desire to know why it is that in our day "men's hearts are beginning to fail them for fear of what is (or may be) coming on the earth," which they do not really see nor understand (Luke 21:26); if we wish to know why it is that we have reached a time when people love pleasure (far) more than they love their God (2 Tim. 2:2); if we wish to know why the time has come when the church or churches will no longer "endure sound doctrine, but will heap to themselves teachers having itching ears" (2 Tim 2:1); if we wish to know why the church buildings are becoming depopulated of everything but seats, the church members "luke warm" (Rom. 3:14-21); and the theatres and dance halls filled to the brim, let us be God's children "wise in Christ Jesus" that we may receive knowledge and understanding, that we may know that the time for God's kingdom is near at hand, "even at the door." May we study to show ourselves approved of God (not man), rightly dividing (or placing) the word of truth (2 Tim. 2:15), that we may then know in what dispensation of time we are now living (some do not), knowing and understanding in what age or dispensation the parable of wheat and chaff belongs: even if you find it was due at the close of the Jewish age, believe it. Study, if necessary, that you may see and know the harvest time of the wheat and tares is at the close of this or the gospel age or dispensation, and that the gathering of the tares into bundles, compacts, societies, clubs, fraternities, lodges, etc., to be burned and destroyed is now going on, and is nearly completed, judging from the small amount of material yet to be gathered in and bound together for destruction.

Brethren, strive to be faithful a little longer; stand on God's side; be "wise in Christ," for the promise is "they shall understand, but none of the wicked shall understand" (Dan. 12:10). Let us be careful and see to it that "we make our calling and election sure," "not forgetting the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching."

THE UNUSED TALENT

1. A talent was not a coin, but a weight. Precious metals were used as a means of exchange by being weighed out. A talent, therefore, might be of gold or of silver, and it varied somewhat from country to country according to the standards adopted. The Greek talent was much larger than the Syriac. In this parable probably the Syriac is meant. But, in any case, whether Greek or Syriac, gold or silver, a talent was of very considerable value--a heavy mass of metal, worth much at a time when a laborer received as wages a mere "penny" (denarius), and constituting a real danger to anyone who hoarded it, in a land where there were no strong-rooms but many thieves. It could not be hidden in a napkin, like the pound in a somewhat similar parable (Luke 19:20), but had to be buried in a pit.

2. In our language the word "talent" means neither a coin nor a weight. It has come to mean some endowment or faculty, generally speaking, of the mind, by which a person is distinguished. And this present usage of the word is to be traced directly to the New Testament. It is one of a multitude of instances in which the very structure of modern language has been determined by Jesus. Because he used certain words 1,900 years ago, all the world speaks in a special fashion today!

The parable implies that our talents, whatever they are, do not really belong to us, but have been lent to us by God. That this is so the briefest consideration will make clear. Just as a man does not make his own lungs--indeed, has but the dimmest notion of what his lungs are--so he has had no part in designing or selecting that original equipment of mental, moral and spiritual faculties with which he faces life. He finds himself possessed of a great mass of powers. He cannot estimate or explore them at once. Perhaps some of them may lie barely recognized for many years. But they are in his keeping, like a mass of precious metal. And to God each one must finally give an account of his talent.

3. The possession of a talent is a responsibility and a danger. It is a responsibility because it has a real value. That is, in the general life of society, it can render some service and do some good. It can stimulate, enrich, beautify, correct, ennoble the world. A man is no more entitled to a selfish use of his own powers than a cashier is entitled to the personal use of his firm's money. Nor is any man justified in neglecting his talents. Voice, temperament, organising gifts, skill, energy and all else that a man has, is given him for the service of others. Unless he so use it he robs them, and robs God. He is a trustee.

A talent involves danger as well as responsibility. The man in the parable hid the talent in the earth because he feared to keep it in his house. In the house it attracted thieves, who might do him an injury in trying to rob him. So he went (presumably at night) and dug a hole and hid the talent where no one could find it, and went home with an easier mind. He was a coward. That was a chief part of his wickedness. So every talent challenges its possessor to danger. All the heroes and martyrs have suffered because they used their talents instead of hiding them. If Galileo and Tyndale and John Wesley and Captain Scott had been cowards they would have hidden their talent and lived easy lives.

4. Failure to use a talent leads to its loss--to degradation of personality. The lover of art who flings himself so heartily into the pursuit of wealth as to have no leisure and energy left for the culture of his taste, in a few years finds that his capacity for joy in beautiful things has silently climbed from him. The man who quenches his nobler aspirations because they conflict with his material interests, degenerates steadily into a cynical and suspicious frame of mind. He who will not worship soon loses touch with God, and at last having no experience with which to combat sceptticism, becomes that sad thing, an atheist. The youth who cuts himself off from the society of Christians is by-and-by at home only with the lewd and ungodly.

It is here that we see the awful actuality of hell. Hell is the outer darkness—not so much suffering as degradation of spirit. The man who rejects God sinks to the level of beings with no talent for God—like the brutes and inanimate nature. These things have their place, but it is a lowe, place than that of man, who was made "a little lower than God." He who hides his talent gives up his opportunity of entering into "the joy of the Lord." NEWTON H. MARSHALL.

THAT BIG "I"

That Ego. A great amount of vanity is wrapped up in the little word "I," says M E., in Msesiah's Advocate. Everybody has the infection of it, more or less. In some degree it is necessary. A sense of personality comes of it. He who were destitute of it, and can not say "I," would be forever dreaming and questioning and doubting whether he were anybody or not, and would be vacillating between the pendulumic question, "Am I or am I not?" But while it is necessary in the sense of identity, it is not necessary to a sense of great personal importance—to extra superiority over everybody else. All the special importance there is in some people is in the sense of it they have themselves, for no one else apprehends it.

An excellent trait in one's character is modesty. True greatness is real worth, and it is best seen in modest garb. Young says: "High worth is elevated place, and place without worth has in it nothing but emptiness." If one assumes to importance it is sooner or later apparent whether he be important or not; for time and circumstances are tremendous tests of what is in a man, and sooner or later (sometimes sooner, sometimes later) the metal in him is tested, and if he is only gilded or nickel-plated it will soon wear through and show the brass inside. "All is not gold that glitters," nor is all precious stone that sparkles. The pretension of the false are greater than the claims of the true, for where there is nothing but pretension on the outside time and opportunity is only of its first exhibition, and when tested with the acid of time and circumstances its real character is seen, and then it woes (where all worthless goes) into the dump heap out of sight. "See how high I fly!" is a sure precursor that the string of ambition's kite is going to break and let it zigzag into the mud.

Egotism is a brainless folly, as many an egotist has proved. It sometimes elevates at first, but it does not wear well. He who is full of "I's" is full of nothing else. He who has not so many "I's" can see further than he who is full of them, for he sees that if he waits his time, though he may be slow coming to eminence, yet if he has real merit he will hold his position after attaining to it, if he be slower in the attaining; and better by far it is to be kept even below the place of ability's position rather than to go above it, and go down out of sight, uncared for forever, unless with the sense of disgust with which such an one is remembered clinging like an excrement to his memory.

Egotism is baneful everywhere, but never so much so nor so revolting anywhere else as in the Christian ministry. The vauting style with which some conduct themselves and speak of their sermons and prayers is very obnoxious. It may be thought to inspire awe and a sense of the importance of the speaker; but it somehow does not have that effect. It pushes to the front one who can not stay there, and he falls back into the shadows of the rear. Real merit is discovered by acquaintance, by its proving itself in its fitness in time of the need of it. Circumstances bring it out, and when it is out and discovered it shines like a starry-edged diamond amid surrounding sands.

The "I" as a personal pronoun must be used sometimes, but there is the charm of modesty in it when used by the unassuming speaker. A brother, a minister of Christ, once beautifullly illustrated this when, being called upon in conference to report his labors, and the excellent work which he had done, said, after speaking of the gracious work: "I do not say I did it. The Lord did it while I was there." It was grand in its modesty, and modest in its grandness, thus to lose sight of self; whereas some love fondly to tell what great meetings they are the means of. But when one goes to the scene of what its claimed to have transpired there is nothing of the sort there, and egotism or a fruitful imagination must bear the responsibility of the whole of it.

Real modesty magnifies the Lord, and all the glory belongs to him. Self, standing thus still, sees "the salvation of God." Prayers made by such men are prayers of power that lay hold of God; but prayers made to be egotistically spoken of are "made," as an aged minister once said, "to the congregation," and are not the outbursting, free-flowing of earnest, tender supplication, with "I" forgotten; and sermons preached to be self-extolled are but sounding brass.

"I," "I," "I,"—how sick one gets of hearing "I preached, I prayed, I wrote that article, I presided at that meeting, I made that speech." Yes, "I" did it, and a man of straw would have done as well. "I," said a minister a while ago, "am acting President of the S. W. College." A fine looking gentleman looked at him with an amused expression; as the "acting President" was a diminutive, deformed man, quite well educated to be sure, with an M. A. he boasted of. But the only acting President that he was consisted of the fact that the President had, because suffering with a throat trouble requested the little fellow to hear his Latin classes a few days, being the active President himself all the while.

Such people are evidently afraid that if they do not boast of their greatness it will never be known. Well, no matter if it is not, for the world can afford not to know it. "Let another praise thee, and not thine own mouth; a stranger, and not thine own lips. How beautiful is unassuming modesty! How fair is the spirit of him who is unconscious of self! How much appreciated is he who does not know himself what he is, but whom all others know and love. Such seek not place, but place seeks them; and the Hamans who love place are sometimes obliged to escort to honorable positions, which they covet but are unfit to fill, those who are more fit than they.

Then let us humble be,
Nor seek ourselves to praise;
Let none our boastful ego see Ourselves we can not raise.

PAGANISM AND ROMANISM COMPARED.

Romanism is simply old Roman paganism revived under Christian names. Romanism and Paganism bear to each other the most exact and extraordinary resemblance.

Had Paganism its temples and altars, its pictures and images? So has hopery. Had Paganism its use of holy water and its burning of incense? So has popery. Had Paganism its tonsured priests, presided over by a pontifex maximus, or sovereign pontiff? So has popery; and it stamps this very name, which is purely heathen in origin, upon the coins, medals, and documents of the arrogant priests by whom it is governed. Had Paganism its claim of sacerdotal infallibility? So has popery. Had Paganism its adoration of a visible representative of Diety carried in state on men's shoulders? So has popery. Had Paganism its ceremony of kissing the feet of the soverign pontiff? So has popery. Had Paganism its college of pontiffs? So has popery, in the college of cardinals. Had Paganism its religious orders? So has popery. Had Paganism its stately robes, its crowns, and crosiers of office? So has popery. Had Paganism adoration of idols, its worship of the queen of heaven, its votive offerings? So has popery. Had Paganism its rural shrines and processions? So has popery. Had Paganism its pretended miracles, its speaking images, and weeping images, and bleeding images? So has popery. Had Paganism its begging orders and fictitious saints? So has popery. Was Paganism satanically inspired? So is popery.—T. C. Walker.

A Preternatural Kind of a Girl

A pretty story is told in The Freeman of a "Protestant little girl's" sharp answers to a priest. The story is scarcely likely to be true, or else the girl was a precocious genius; at all events, the answers put into her mouth are good.

A priest asked her to attend his religious instruction. She said it was against her father's wishes. The priest said she should obey him, not her father.

"Oh, sir, we are taught in the Bible, 'Honor thy father and thy mother.'"

"You have no business to read the Bible," said the priest.

But, sir, our Savior said, in John 5:39: 'Search the scriptures.'"

"That was only to the Jews, and not to children, and you don't understand it," said the priest.

"But, sir, St. Paul said to Timothy: 'From a child thou hast known the holy scriptures'" (2 Tim. 3:15.)

"Oh," said the priest, "Timothy was then being trained to be a bishop, and taught by the authorities of the church."

"Oh no sir," said the child, "he was taught by his mother and his grandmother."

On this the priest turned away, saying she 'knew enough of the Bible to poison a whole parish."

"Life From Life"

The yeast ferment of today is the same identical plant from which the Egyptian brewed his ale three thousand years ago, and ages before that, and has come down to us through a regular line of descent from the same organism. If it were destroyed, today there would be no more yeast forever. We can destroy, but we can not create. For ages and ages the master minds of our race have sought in every conceivable way to create one single, simple organic cell. Those who have gone the deepest into the hidden mysteries of natural science in search of creative power, in this the most enlightened age of the world, have at last been compelled to exclaim with Huxley: "The doctrine of biogenesis, or life from life, is victorious all along the whole line at the present day;" or with Tyndall: "I wish the evidence were the other way, but am compelled to say that no shred of trustworthy experimental testimony exists to prove that life in our day has ever appeared independent of antecedent life.—Dr. Sims.

A Physician on Life's Origin

At a meeting of the Medical Society of the Tennessee State, the President, Dr. P. D. Sims, of Chattanooga, delivered himself thus: "If we have utterly failed to give life to the lowest, simplest form of organic existence, then what is life and whence came it? To this there can be but one answer by an investigating intelligence. It is a work of creative power, and that power is God. The man who starts out through the labyrintine toils of evolution to find in materialism the origin of life must come at last to the end of his path and find the hand of God. Whatever difference there may be in theories of revelation and religion, no enlightened intelligence can accept a theory short of Theism. Atheism at this day is an unwarranted stultification. Of all men claiming intelligence, the enlightened physician should be the last to accept a materialistic view of creation. The central figure of the universe is the creative power, and that power is God, the self-existent source of all life."

EDITORIAL

Language is good, if used sparingly toward both God and man. Rich in meaning, stingy in words—this is the rule of acceptable speech.

Liberality makes friends of enemies; meanness makes enemies of friends. Even the Lord, it is testified, "loveth a cheerful giver."

In the upshot it is what a man himself says, and not what others say about him, that determines the estimate in which he is held.

Formerly we published some prayers in The Restitution which were written by our deceased Bro. Joblin. This fact may lead some to think that the anonymous ones now being published are also his. This is a misapprehension which we now wish to correct. They are compiled and revised and written in part by us, so it is hard to decide to whom they should be credited. This is why they appear without name.

STONES INSTEAD OF BREAD.

In The Restitution of June 24th may be found an editorial entitled "An Orthodox Tangle." J. W. Denton had claimed it is alleged, that the spirit of man was deathless, consequently could not be raised from the dead; and that the body could not be subject to the resurrection because annihilated. This position involved Mr. Walker in a "tangle," he confessed, for if neither spirit nor body are raised from the dead; what can be raised? He called on Mr. Denton to explain. In the Firm Foundation of July 15. Mr. Denton proceeds to give a lucid explanation (?). He hits Mr Walker pretty hard; it is to be hoped that Walker after this will see the point and hold his peace. Mr. Denton says in part:

"I have received a clipping from The Restitution, a paper devoted to the teaching of the doctrine of modern Materialists. I quote: 'In the Firm Foundation of June 3, 1913, appears an article from G. T. Walker, who points out a tangle in which the old hobby of the resurrection of the body has involved his brethren and himself—all believers in the immortality of the soul.'

"I saw G. T. Walker's squib, but it was so foreign to the facts in the case that I did not deem it worthy of notice. A man who has not the ability to correctly state the position of his opponent ought not to try to write on any subject. Again, the man who has the ability to write, and then misrepresents an opponent, should not write, because of the low standard of his morals.

"The quotation by Walker and The Restitution, instead of being the positions held by Nichol and Denton, is argument made by them to show the consequences of the annihilation—no resurrection theory.

"The quotations given in The Restitution both from Nichol and me, and set forth as that which we believe and teach, is just the opposite of the facts. We are showing the consequence of the materialistic theory. I shall not enter into a wrangle with G. T. Walker. I got disgusted with his theories as published some time since."

This is a pretty hard stone to get for asking for a piece of bread (Matt. 7:9).

EDITOR PIPER AND UNION

Eld. Piper, editor of the World's Crisis, has been writing a series of editorials on the subject of union among the different bodies of Adventists. He laments that their organization is rent into six divisions. In the issue of July 16 he makes the following remarks:

"If our friends of "The Restitution" were to place the emphasis of teaching and work on the issues of the present, and wait, with us all, for the future to unfold what the details of the divine program is to be, would not the concerns of the present be sufficient to employ every energy we all have, and would not the issues of the future be equally safe?"

In reply to this we have to say that we were the first to call attention to the desirability of union among those who could unite without compromise of any fundamental principles. To the editor and others we have urged the matter by correspondence. They all ignored us entirely until Editor Schaumburg dared to make a few extracts from our paper, and to print some contributions from our pen. Now slowly the Adventists are waking up to the fact that we exist, and that we are sending out the glad news of the Lord's coming and kingdom. We are entirely concerned with the "issues of the present;" the "concerns of the present" engross our attention; for we realize that "now God accepts our work;" that now is the time to "make our calling and election sure." If you would let us tell you what we believe, instead of you telling us, much fog would be dissipated, and you would be amazed how you have misunderstood us. "If we only understood."

IGNORANCE

The want of knowledge is like a leak—a constant source of loss.

LONG SERMONS

Brevity and condensation are not attained without protracted effort, but they are worth the cost. A bungler always takes more time to do a thing than an expert, which fact accounts for the length of some men's prayers and sermons. An exchange quotes Mr. Spurgeon as saying that undue length of discourse is especially the fault of the aged, thus: "The peculiar danger of advancing years is length of discourse. Some honored brethren have lately fallen asleep whose later years were an infliction upon their friends. To describe one is to depict the other. He is so good and great, and has done such service, that you must ask him to speak. He expects you to do so. You make bold to propose that he will occupy only a few minutes. He will occupy those few minutes, and a great many more minutes, and your meeting will die out under his protracted periods. Your audience moves, all interest is gone, your meeting is a failure; and all through a dear old man whose very name is an inspiration. The difficulty is, not to start these grand old men, but to stop them when strated; they appear to be wound up like little clocks, and they must run down. This is a seductive habit to be guarded against when years increase; it may be wise to resolve upon being shorter as age inclines us to be longer. It would be a pity to shorten our congregation by lengthening our discourse."

Of course old age usually brings with it abundance of experience, and a fullness of information which may tempt the speaker to prolixity. But along with this we are persuaded that there are at times among the aged a disposition to claim privileges, and consume time, simply because old age has special claims to respect. It is a sad thing when people who should be respected in such assemblies presume upon the patience of hearers because they are old, and so injure their reputation, and make themselves a burden to be endured, rather than a blessing to be enjoyed.

The blessedness of the man who speaks short is that he is likely to be asked to speak again. The trouble with the long-winded man is that nobody wants to hear him a second time, and so he speedily finds himself laid up on a shelf so high that he is never taken down. Brevity is the soul of wit. No soup is made better by thinning it down to resemble dish-water.

PREEXISTENCE OF CHRIST IN THE CRUCIBLE

The Adventist body has never been free from some of the popular errors of apostate Christendom. They have been content to have the second coming of Christ made emphatic and public; all other questions, however important, have been thrown into the shade by the brilliant sunlight of this one topic. The result is unity on the advent of the Redeemer, but Babylon in everything else. Immortal soulism, even, in the modified form of the "Germ Theory," is tolerated in fellowship; and the preexistence of Christ as a spiritual being, who created all things, who was endowed with divine perfections and who became "incarnate" in a body of flesh in the child born of Mary (the old heathen doctrine of the transmigration of souls), is not only tolerated but warmly defended. The preachers and editors have protected this doctrine with jealous care; while there has been a small element which refused to accept the dogma, they were an oppressed minority, and their voice was silenced by the editorial blue pencil. However, this small element has been growing in recent years, growing among those who have minds to think; and now the protestants of the body have become so influential in ministers and editors that they have thrown open the columns of the papers to hear, for the first time, their pleas for the truth. The ugly doctrine of Christ's preexistence is getting shown up in all its deformity, along with the immortal soul, which is euphoniously but deceptively called a "germ." In the Day Dawn for June the Editor, Eld. Jas. A. Patrick, with his usual force and clearness, thus delivers himself on the subject:

"John 1:1 'In the beginning.' What beginning? Let John answer. Read 1 John 1:1: 'That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life.' Was John at the beginning of creation? Did he see and handle the pre-existent Christ? Read verse 13: 'I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him from the beginning.' We have left out the italicized words 'that is,' because the fact that they are italicised shows that they were put there by the translators and are not original. Read verse 24: 'Let that therefore abide in you, which ye have heard from the beginning.' From whom did they hear it? From Christ. At the beginning of creation? Now let Christ speak on this point: 'And these things I said unto you at the beginning, because I was with you.' If 'the beginning' spoken of by John refers to the beginning in Gen. 1:1, then man had a pre-existence as well as Christ. There are other scriptures used to prove Christ's pre-existence that prove man's as well. Read John 8:23: 'And he said unto them, Ye are from beneath; I am from above.' If he pre-existed above, why not they from beneath?

"What beginning is meant if not the beginning spoken of in Gen. 1:1? What beginning is there in which John could hear and touch Christ? In what beginning was he with them? The beginning of the gospel dispensation, and no other.

"If the Word was a pre-existent Christ, then Christ and God are one person, for 'THE WORD WAS GOD.' Are Christ and God one person? You answer, 'No.' 'And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us' (verse 14). What was the Word before it became flesh? Simply the power or fiat of God. By that word he made the world.

"Were the worlds made by a personal pre-existent Christ? 'In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.' Then it wasn't Christ that did it. But some argue that Christ was the agent and did the creating through delegated power from the Father, and thus it could be said that God did the work. The following illustration is often used: A man lets a contract to have a house built for himself. He furnishes the plans and material and pays for the work. Afterward if some one should ask him who built the house he could answer 'I built it' and be telling the truth. But suppose the interrogator should ask 'Did you build it yourself?' Could he say that he did and tell the truth? No, he must say that he hired the work done if he wanted to be truthful. Well, God has said that he alone made all things. Thus saith the Lord, thy redeemer, ... I am the Lord that maketh all things, that stretcheth forth the heavens alone; that spreadeth abroad the earth by myself' (Isa. 44:24). It might be argued that the Lord (Yehovah), in this case is the pre-existent Christ. In that case Gen. 1:1 is contradicted. Besides, there are some New Testament scriptures that confirm us in our contention. Read Matt. 11:25: 'At that time Jesus answered and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth.' Just notice that Jesus said the Father is Lord of heaven and earth. Now let us read Acts 17:24: 'God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands.' Christ said that the Father was Lord of heaven and earth, and Paul said that God who made the world and all things therein is Lord of heaven and earth. This same Jehovah God said by the mouth of Isaiah that he did all these thing by himself. Is any further proof needed that God alone created the world by His Word?

"Now then the foregoing is proof positive that God is the Jehovah of the Old Testament and not a pre-existent Christ. Christ said that the Father is Lord of heaven and earth, and Paul said that it was God, the Lord of heaven and earth, that created the world and all things in it. Gen. 1:1 says that 'God created the heavens and the earth,' and Isaiah tells us that the Creator did the work by himself so that there is no argument for the idea that Christ is the Jehovah of the Old Testament."

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Restitution:

Few things have surprised me more than conclusions reached by writer of "An Open Letter" in recent issue. Passing over much that seems irrelevant to the question, may I ask if obedience to the command, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thy self," does not imply the duty of making conditions of life for the tempted such as will make it easy as possible to do right and hard to do wrong? Now government in our country is supposed to be for the people by the people, and present writer is of the opinion that nothing would please the devil more than to have "the saints" take no part in effort to write good laws in our statute books. We read that "When the righteous are in authority the people rejoice, but when the wicked bear rule, the people mourn." In "reaching out a hand to fallen men and women," not only should they be pointed to the Lamb of God but life for them should be made so they will fall no more.

During Nebraska's campaign against the legalized liquor traffic some years ago, a man given to strong drink gave a quarter to the fund being raised for the cause, and mournfully said: "My only hope is that the saloons will be shut up."

A word as to women voting. People as well as trees are known by their fruits. Prior to last November election, governors of the 5 equal suffrage states publicly declared that the ballot in woman's hand had been a moral uplift to their respective states. Eastern men, strongly opposed to equal suffrage, going to these states have been converted to it by seeing its good results. Frankly, I cannot see what right men or women have to life in our land who are empowered with the ballot, and who neglect their civic duties. (The government does not require us to vote, but it does require us to pay our taxes. This we willingly do. We do all that is required of us.—Editor.)

During first meeting of California legislature, after granting woman suffrage, more laws were passed desired by women than in last 25 years. Here are a few of those measures:

The minimum wage law, creating a commission to investigate the conditions of industry of women and children, with power to invoke a minimum wage in industries paying less than a living wage.

The Joint Guardianship Law, giving mothers equal guardianship over their minor children. Massachusetts worked more than forty years to secure such a law.

The Age of Consent Law, raising the age from 16 to 21.

The State Training School for Girls, providing a separate institution for girls, with the most approved correctional methods and thorough vocational training.

A law requiring fathers to help support illegitimate children.

The amendment to the Child Labor Law, raising the limit of child workers from 12 to 15 years.

The teachers' Pension Law, granting pensions of $500 a year to all teachers who have been in service thirty years.

The White Slave Law, prohibiting traffic in women between countries.

It is difficult to make a selection from the eighty laws referred to, but will conclude with brief mention of women's work under California's law of referendum and recall in putting out of office Police Judge Wellar for shamefully discriminating in favor of a man who criminally assaulted a girl, deposing him from office. The Evening Press of Grand Rapids, Mich., concludes an account of the affair with: "All's well that ends Wellar."

In conclusion, I would express pleasure that men of O. J. Allard's type are still sounding out the cry, "Behold, he cometh," and joining in the prayer of the blessed disciple, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

I am sincerely,

MRS. M. STILES NICHOLS.

Dear Brothers and Sisters of Like Precious Faith: I have thought for some time I would write a few words to you all; but this is a very busy world, and it seemed like I could never find time. Every week when I get The Restitution I look it through immediately to see if there is any letters from any of the brothers or sisters in Nebraska, but very seldom do we see one. How I would enjoy seeing a letter once in a while from someone at home. Husband and I, with our little family, left Moorefield, Neb., April 3, 1912, for Sunnyside, Wash. We have now been living here a little over one year. We like it very well. The climate is very nice, as we have no bad storms in summer, and the winters are mild to what they are in Nebraska. We have not fully decided yet whether we will make this our home or not. If there was only a church here of our faith I think we would be contented to stay. There is not a very good chance of ever having one here, as there are ten churches now, and they are all very religiously against those of the faith.

Bro. Almus Adams was with us a couple of weeks last spring. How we did enjoy seeing and hearing him once more. I tried to get several of my neighbors to go to hear him. Some said they would go, but "went not," while others always had some kind of an excuse. I just wonder what kind of an excuse they will fix up when Jesus comes.

How I wish there were a few families of the faith here.

We raise all kinds of fruit and vegetables, timothy, clover, alfalfa, blue grass and corn, as well. The most beautiful roses grown. Often when I see the little streams of water running I think of the words in the Bible: "In the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert." This was surely a sandy desert until they got irrigation, but it is certainly fine now.

Before I close I wish to say a few words about J. T. Auld's article in the April number. I do not believe in women voting, either; but there are lots of good women in the world yet. He seems to think because the Bible says Adam was not deceived, "but the woman, being deceived, was in the transgression," that the man was all right, and did not do anything wrong. Let us see about this. The woman was deceived and ate of the fruit, but the man was not deceived, so he ate it and knew he was doing wrong. He committed a wilfull sin, so he was worse than the woman.

"Remember Lot's wife." Now I always did have a warm spot in my heart for Lot's wife; but no one can sympathize with her but a mother. She had to leave some daughters in Sodom, and I believe her great love for them was what caused her to look back.

Dear Sisters, let us not be discouraged, even if we don't know enough to run the government. We can be patient with our children, and I for one am glad I am a woman, for I have never seen many men who have any patience with children. They were never little themselves; but at the same time they will do things they would not allow their children to do. The majority of them provoke their children to wrath, instead of bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

From your sister in the faith,

LUCY LAPP.

SELF-EDIFICATION

The best part of every man's education is that which he gives himself. The most valuable feature of success is the struggle that precedes it.

Power dwells with cheerfulness. Hope puts in working mood, whilst despair is no muse and untunes the active powers.—Emerson.

POWER

A man can do what he ought to do, and when he says he can not it is because he will not.

Young men should remember that a lot of things are worked up, but few things are followed up.

IMMANUEL, SON OF THE VIRGIN

"Behold, a virgin (almah) shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name "God with us" (Immanuel) (Is. 7:14).

What are we to understand by the word "virgin?" The Hebrew word "almah," here translated "virgin," occurs in six places in the Old Testament scriptures. It is used of Rebekah (Gen. 24:43) and of Miriam (Ex. 2:8). The only other places where it occurs are Ps. 68:25; Song of Sol., 1:3; 6:8; Prov. 30:19. In each of these passages the word undoubtedly signifies a young unmarried woman. Let modern critics dispute if they will the significance of Isaiah's words, it is beyond dispute that Matthew and Luke alike assert that Mary, the mother of Jesus, was a virgin, an unwedded damsel. So certain was Luther of the correctness of the interpretation that he issued a characteristic challenge: "If a Jew or a Christian can prove to me that in any passage of scripture 'almah' means a 'married woman,' I will give him a hundred florins, although God alone knows where I may find them." The translations of the Hebrew Bible into the Greek version, which we call the Septuagint (translated three centuries before the birth of Jesus) rendered the word as virgin. The Syriac version gives the word as "virgo," and in the same way the Latin Vulgate reproduces the original.

We must not forget the circumstances under which this prophecy was introduced. King Ahaz had rejected the offer of any sign of his own choosing out of the whole compass of nature, and so God himself selected and gave a sign which should in its fulfillment prove his good will to Israel and to the house of David, and as an assurance that he would not cast them off. It was a miracle that was predicted, a future event which might seem utterly impossible—the birth of a divine person from a human virgin. There must be a new commencement of royalty in the family of David, for the old line, by reason of human infirmity and sin, would become extinct. Creative power, therefore, must interpose, and a supernatural birth take place. And God chose the virgin Mary, of the house and lineage of David, to be the mother of "David's greatest son." It was a sign that could not be mistaken, it was a thing that never had been nor ever should be again. Seven hundred years were yet to pass before it should be given, but its promise was to all who feared the Lord, a pledge that neither traitors from within nor enemies from without should succeed in blighting or destroying the hopes of David's house and of Jerusalem. No enemies, no power of man or of satan, should prevail so as to prevent the birth of Immanuel into the house of David.

What is the special feature in the revelation conveyed to us in this word "Immanuel"—God with us? Man's happiness in paradise consisted in the fact that he dwelt in the presence of God, and that God conversed with him; but the fall intercepted this communion, and man was driven from his presence. But happiness can not be the portion of mankind without the restoration of the divine presence; hence the promise of One who shall establish this lost relationship, who in his own sacred person should be the God-man, the Immanuel, the "God with us." In a prophetic message delivered a little later than the one we have been considering, Isaiah (9:6) makes solemn announcement that one of the names of this son of virgin birth shall be "Mighty God." This is in harmony with what has gone before. Immanuel and the Mighty God are one (John x:30). If the need of the earth is to be adequately met, if its wound is to be healed, if righteous government is to prevail, nothing less than an Almighty power must be put forth. It requires might as well as wisdom and holiness to govern this world. And until the might of God shall make itself felt the misery of earth will deepen day by day, and the gulf become wider that separates man from God. See this dignity of Immanuel confessed by Paul when he calls Jesus "the great God" (Titus 2:3), and "God over all, blessed forever" (Rom. 9:5). And did not Thomas the apostle address him as "My God" (John 20:28)? Stupendous truth. This union of the human with the divine is beyond finite grasp.

Another prophet has made reference in similar terms to the same event. Micah was a contemporary of Isaiah, and there is a strong resemblance between the prophecies and teachings of these two men. In Micah 5:2 we read, "Thou Bethlehem, out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." This obviously and plainly refers to the same prophecy concerning a woman to bring forth a child, and seems properly applicable to Mary. Matthew, in his opening chapter, applies these two prophecies to the birth of Jesus, naming Bethlehem as the birthplace, and Mary as the mother, using the words which are in the strictest, clearest and most literal sense in harmony with the original and evident intention of the prophets.

The terms of the ancient promise that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head suggests some special feature in the parentage of the Great Deliverer else why the emphasis on the "woman?" And to the same effect are the the words of the Apostle Paul. After emphasizing the fact that it was Eve (not Adam) who was beguiled into sin, he adds: "But she shall be saved through [or, child-bearing" (the presence of the article signifies the child)—1 Tim. 2:15—a sentence which unmistakably refers to the promise that salvation was to come through the bearing of the child for it was to be her seed (not man's) who should be the Savior. The woman should be one fixed upon in the counsels of God, the virgin to whom the message should come, "That holy thing that shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."

The Jews who lived in the earliest part of the Christian era held that the virgin here spoken of was the wife of Ahaz, and Immanuel was Hezekiah, the son of Ahaz. But is is now generally conceded that Hezekiah was about nine years old when this prophecy was given (compare (2 Kings 16:2 with 18:2). Some adopted the hypothesis that the Almah was a second wife of Ahaz. But today the Jews teach that the Almah was the young wife of the prophet himself, and that the birth of Maher-shalal-hash-baz (8:3) was the fulfilment of the prophecy. We repeat that no instance of scripture exists of Almah being used to signify a married woman, and here we are coolly asked to assign the name to one who already had given birth to Shearjashub (7:3). To such miserable trifling and the most discordant conclusions are men brought who shut their eyes to the truth. Even in the Christian church are men who hold that the prophecy had an immediate fulfillment which was partial in extent and typical in character. Alas! that the Jew should not bow to the plain testimony of scripture, and that in the Church of Christ men betray their faith by aiding and abetting the arguments of those who rejected the Lord and betrayed him to be crucified.

Thus have we briefly glanced at these striking passages—verses round which the loving arms of faith and hope have been entwined, and the rough, rude hands of controversy have battled. These ancient promises are indeed gems in the ring of truth, and to be prized as such. We do not refuse our credence to a miracle, even a miracle of a virgin birth, as though anything were too hard for the God of Israel. We have need of a Savior, Prophet, Priest and King such as is our Immanuel.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-53); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism nto the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

THE PATH OF LIFE

"I cannot always see the way
Which thou, dear Lord, art leading me;"
But step by step I follow on,
No matter where that way may be.

Sometimes it is a thorny path,
With furrows deep and hard to tread;
And oft' we hear the thunder roll,
And clouds are gathering overhead.

Yea, clouds that darken, deep and low,
I look about me tearfully;
I scarce can see which way to go,
And yet I know thou leadest me.

Thy word, the lamp that guides my feet,
Speaks to me with a still small voice;
Here is the light upon thy path,
Walk in it; thou shalt soon rejoice.

Thou leadest me, I follow on Content to know that thou art near,
And even in the stormy night,
Canst make the darkness disappear.

Thou leadest me, I follow on,
'Tis sweet to hear thy welcome voice;
That scatters all my doubts and fears,
And bids me evermore rejoice.

Thy way, O Lord, is in the sea,
Thy path is in the water deep.
Thy footsetps are not known to me,
But angel guards their watches keep.

I journey on, and soon the clouds
That threatened o'er my path are gone,
A gleam of brightness shines ahead,
And shows me I am not alone.

Where ere the voice of duty calls,
'Tis safe to go and trust in thee.
No harm nor danger e'er befalls
To those who to thy refuge flee.

And when at last the night is o'er,
And we shall rise to perfect day,
We shall rejoice for evermore
Because we've walked in God's own way.

PRAYER

Our Father, we come to thee with humble petitions that thou wouldst help each of us in our several ways, and according to our different obligations and circumstances, to bear the good fruit that comes from a good tree, and to make the tree good, because it is grafted into the true vine. We bless thee that in Jesus Christ the most barren may bear fruit. We bless thee that in him all our evil may be taken away, and a new life, which knows nothing of sin, be begun in us, and gradually come to dominion over us. And we beseech thee that all of us, with such different histories, with such difference circumstances, with such different characters, may receive, by the act of faith, the blessing of eternal life which shall fit all our needs and purify all our characters, and make us more than conquerors over all circumstances. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

WHAT WE BELIEVE AND WHY WE BELIEVE IT

W. N. Pile. Revised by the Editor

We accept the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as inspired of God, and make our appeal to them in support of our faith.

We interpret the Scriptures literally, except where there is plain evidence of figure or symbol; and we believe that a departure from this rule has been one of the leading causes of the divisions of Christendom. Luther says: "That which I have so often insisted on elsewhere, I here once more repeat, viz., that the Christian should direct his first efforts toward understanding the literall sense (as it is called) of Scripture, which alone is the substance of faith and of Christian theology." Alford says: "A canon of interpretation which should be constantly borne in mind is, that a figurative sense of words is never damissible, except when required by the context."

1. We believe that man by nature is wholly mortal.

"Shall mortal man be more just than God?" (Job 4:17). The terms "immortal soul," "never dying soul," "immortal spirit," "never dying spirit," which are so often heard in sermons, are not once found in the Scriptures. Should not this fact suggest to thinking people that the doctrine which they express is not true? What right have we as Christians to use terms which the Holy Spirit has never used? The word "immortal" is found but once in the Bible, where it is applied to God. "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, the only wise God, be honor and glory forever and ever" (1 Tim. 1:17). The word "immortality" occurs but five times, and is never applied to man before the resurrection. See 1 Cor. 15:53, 54. Paul says that God "only hath immortality," that is, inherent in his nature (1 Tim. 6:16). The doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul is of heathen origin. Herodotus and Bunsen both tell us that it was first taught by the Egyptians. From thence it spread to Babylon, where Gibbon tells us some of the Jews received it while in captivity. Shall we follow the traditions of Egypt and Babylon, or shall we accept the teachings of the inspired Scriptures? It is not possible that "the word of God" is now in some respects being "made void by tradition," as in Christ's day? See Matt. 15: 1-6. The doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul was brought into the Christian church by converts from heathenism; and the term "immortal soul" does not occur in any Christian writing till near the middle of the second century.

Man has "soul," or life; but so have all other living creatures. "And God said, "Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life" (Hebrew, soul; see margin) (Gen. 1:20; see also verse 30). What right have we to say that "soul" means an immortal entity in man, and only life, or an element of life, in all other creatures? "Soul" also means a person, a creature, and is frequently so used; hence in this sense man is a "soul" (see Acts 11:41; 27:37); but so are all other creatures. "And man a living soul" (Gen. 11:7). "And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature (Hebrew, living soul) after his kind, cattle and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after his kind" (Gen. 1:25). See also Rev. 16:13. After God had formed Adam of "the dust of the ground," he added nothing but "the breath of life." "And breathed into his nostrils the breath of life" (Gen. 11:7). But this he also gave to all other creatures. "All in whose nostrils was the breath of life (or breath of the spirit of life; see margin and R. V.), of all that was in the dry land, died" (Gen. 7:22). What right have we to say that the breath or "spirit of life" in man is immortal, and only an element of life in all other creatures? If there is such a vast difference between them, why did the Holy Spirit use the same terms to describe them?

Adam was a candidate for immortality in Eden, but failed to attain it because of disobedience. "Of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Gen. 2:17). The Hebrew (see margin) is "dying thou shalt die"—meaning that from day of disobedience he should be shut away from "the tree of life," and the process of decay begin in his system in consequence. Dr. Adam Clarke says on this verse: "From that moment thou shalt become mortal, and shalt continue in a dying state till thou die." The sequel proves this view correct. "And now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever; therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken" (Gen. 3:22, 23). If Adam had been immortal, he would have lived forever without access to the tree of life. But he was mortal; hence exclusion from Eden made his death certain. "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years; and he died" (Gen. 5:5). Adam's children are like himself, mortal. "Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not" (Job 14:1, 2).

But to Adam's mortal race immortality is once more offered, but conditionally, as before. It is promised in the gospel to those who believe in Jesus Christ and conform their lives to his teaching. "I am come that they might have life" (John 10:10). "Who will render to every man according to his deeds; to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life" (Rom. 2:6, 7). Why should we seek for immortality if we already have it? The same eternal life which Adam lost by disobedience, we may gain by faith in Christ and "patient continuance in well doing." Adam was shut away from the "tree of life," lest he should "live forever." But Jesus says: "I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever" (John 6:51). "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 6:23; see also 1 Cor. 15: 53-54).

2. We believe that the dead are unconscious.

"The living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything" (Eccl. 9:5). "In death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" (Psa. 6:5). "His breath goeth forth (the breath or "spirit of life" which man received at his creation); in that very day his thoughts perish" (Psa. 146:4). See also Psa. 88: 12; 115:17; Eccl. 9:10; Isa. 38:18, 19. How can there be consciousness when all thought has perished? The belief that the dead are conscious is responsible for Spiritualism (the ancient necromancy so much condemned in the Bible; see Deut. 18:9-12); for if they still know and love those in life, why should they not seek to commune with them; and how do we know that they can not? The belief that the dead are conscious is also responsible for the hero worship of the Pagans, the saint worship and purgatory of the Catholics, and many other dangerous errors.

The righteous do not go to heaven when they die, but "sleep" until the resurrection. Of Lazarus Jesus said: "I go, that I may awake him out of sleep" (John 11:11). See also 1 Cor. 15, 6, 18; 1 Thess. 4, 13. After Jesus had been dead "three days and three nights," and had risen again, he said to Mary: "I am not yet ascended to my Father" (John 20:17). Peter says: "David is not ascended into the heavens" (Acts 2:34). Yet David had been dead over a thousand years. See Acts 2, 29. There is not a declaration in the Bible that any one can go to heaven by death.

The wicked do not go to a burning hell when they die, but to the silence and unconsciousness of the grave. "Let the wicked be ashamed, and let them be silent in the grave" (Psa. 31:17). "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest" (Eccl. 9:10). If the righteous go to a heaven of joy at death, and the wicked to a hell of suffering, what need is there of a future judgment? Have any been sent to the wrong place? If not, why should they be judged after thousands of years of reward or punishment? Can any one tell?

3. We believe that a future life is to be attained only by a resurrection from the dead, or a translation from among the living, at the last day.

"This is the will of him that sent me, that everyone which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6:40). "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed" (1 Cor. 15:51, 52). Christ entered into eternal life by the resurrrection. "Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more" (Rom. 6:9). See also John 20:26, 27; Rev. 1:18. His people will enter eternal life in the same way. "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more" (Luke 20:35, 36). See also 1 Cor. 15: 42-44; Phil. 3:20, 21; 1 Thess. 4:16, 17. "When this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory" (1 Cor. 15:54). If death were "a friend that Jesus sends to take us to his arms," he would not be called "the last enemy," nor sentenced to destruction (1 Cor. 15:26). When death enters our homes and bears loved ones away our hearts speak the truth of scripture. If our beloved dead are not in their graves, why do we plant flowers upon them? Why should we "go to weep" where they are not? Jesus, Martha and Mary went to the grave of Lazarus to weep, when he had inquired, "Where have ye laid him?" And why did Jesus say, "Lazarus, come forth?" If Lazarus had gone to heaven, why did he not say, "Come down?" The record says, "He that was dead came forth" (John 11:31-44).

4. We believe that the saints' inheritance will be in the earth renewed.

"Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5:5). "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Pet. 3: 13). See also Ps. 37:9, 11, 22. 29; Rev. 5:9, 10; 21:1-4. God promised "the land" to Abraham and his "seed for an everlasting possession" (Gen. 13: 14, 15; 17:8). The "seed" of Abraham, through whom the promise was to be fulfilled, was Christ (Rom. 4:13, 14; Gal. 3:16). This promise was not fulfilled to Abraham in his lifetime; he was "buried in a good old age," without having received "so much as to set his foot on" (Gen. 15:15; Acts 7: 1-5). It has not yet been fulfilled, and will not be until Christ, "Abraham's seed," returns from heaven. Then Abraham and all other believers will enter together into "the promised land" (Gal. 3:20).

The earth renewed will be "the kingdom of God" and "of Christ." "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High" (Dan. 7:27). "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven" (Matt. 6:10; see also Dan. 2:44; Matt. 13:38, 43; Rev. 11:15).

5. We believe that the wicked will utterly perish.

"The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away" (Ps. 37:20). They "shall utterly perish in their own corruption" (2 Pet. 2-12). "They shall be as though they had not been" (Obad. 16). "The day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch" (Mal. 4:1). The doctrine of eternal suffering is contrary to the scriptures. The few passages from which it is inferred are easily harmonized with the great mass of testimony to the fact that even men will then cease to exist. The doctrine of eternal suffering is contrary to the revealed character of God. "God is love" (1 John 4:8). Love can permit temporary suffering, which may be overruled for good; but it could not permit eternal suffering, because no possible good could come of it; it would be hopeless, and therefore it would be abhorrent to love and mercy. When it is impossible for love to save, it must destroy. "The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will he destroy" (Ps. 145:20). The wicked "shall go away into everlasting punishment" (Matt. 25:46). But "everlasting punishment" is not everlasting torment, but everlasting death. "The wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6:23). The fact that "everlasting punishment" is contrasted with "everlasting life" proves that it is an everlasting cutting off from life; and that is the literal meaning of the Greek original. Hence Paul says the wicked "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord" (2 Thess. 1:9). As God is everywhere, to be destroyed from his presence is to cease to exist (Ps. 139:7-12). "Yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be" (Ps. 37:10). If it be said that the soul can not die, Ezekiel replies: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" (18:4, 20).

"The "hell fire" of the New Testament is not a fire in which beings are preserved, but a fire in which God will "destroy both soul and body" (Matt. 10:28). "Hell," in this and kindred passages, is translated from gehenna, which means "the valley of Himmon," just south of Jerusalem, into which the refuse of the city was cast, and where it was destroyed by fire or worms (Isa. 66: 24). Hence it became the figure of the destruction of the wicked, and is so used by our Lord. "If thy right eye offend thee (or cause thee to offend), pluck it out, and cast it from thee; for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell" (gehenna) (Matt. 5:29, 30). The "whole body" of the wicked (or "soul and body," as in Matt. 10:28) will perish as certainly and as fully as "one" member that is severed and cast away. "Eternal" or "everlasting fire" is not an eternally burning fire, but a fire that destroys forever, or for eternity. Sodom "suffered the vengeance of eternal fire" (Jude 7). But it is not now burning; it burned until it had totally "destroyed" the city and its inhabitants (Luke 17:20). "Unquenchable fire" means the same thing. It is not a fire that burns forever, but a fire that burns in spite of all efforts to quench it until it has consumed that upon which it feeds (Jer. 7:20; 17:27). Christ "will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire" (Matt. 3:12). "Chaff" will not exist long in a fire that cannot be put out. It is an utter perversion of the figure of gehenna to make it mean eternal suffering; it is an image of certain and total destruction.

6. We believe that the second coming of our Lord will be personal and visible.

"This same Jesus, which is taken up from you in heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven (Acts 1:2). "They shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory" (Matt. 24:30). The descent of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost was in no sense the second coming of Christ. The Spirit was "another Comforter" "sent" to testify of Christ during his absence (John 14:16; 16:7). The coming of the Spirit was to assure the disciples that Jesus had been received and glorified in heaven (Acts 2:33). Long after Pentecost Paul said "Unto them that look for him shall he (Christ) appear the second time without sin unto salvation" (Heb. 9:28). Christ did not come the second time at the destruction of Jerusalem. Long after that event John wrote his epistles and the book of Revelation, in which he repeatedly speaks of the coming of Christ as still future (1 John 2:28; 3:2, Rev. 1:7; 16:15; 22:12, 20). Death is in no sense the second coming of Christ. Death takes Chris's people to the grave; Christ is coming to take them out of it. Death is the "enemy" of the church: Christ is her everlasting friend. Death is to be destroyed when our Divine friend returns (1 Cor. 15:26, 54-57). The second coming of Christ is not by proxy—not a manifestation in a man like Swedenborg, or any other. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout" (1 Thess. 1:16).

At his second coming our Lord will gather all his saints unto himself. "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other" (Matt. 24:31). "I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also" (John 14:3). The Lord will then destroy the wicked. "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints" (2 Thess. 1:9, 10). He will then establish His kingdom in the earth, and reign therein with his saints forever. "Then shall the King say, Come ye, blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (Matt. 25:34; see also Dan. 7:13, 14; Rev. 11:15).

7. We believe that the second coming of our Lord is near.

We do not believe that any one knows definitely when he will come (Matt. 24:42; 25:13), but that it is the privilege and duty of all Christians to "know," from the fulfillment of prophecy and the signs of the times, when he is "near, even at the doors" (Matt. 24:32, 33). We are living in the divided state of the Roman empire, the fourth and last of the prophetic series before the kingdom of God (Dan 2:36-44; 7:17-27). The gospel dispensation is the "last" dispensation of mercy and grace (Joel 2:28-32; Acts 2:14-21). We are living in the "last days" of the gospel dispensation. The perdicted persecution of the church by the Papal powers is past (Dan. 7:24-26; 2 Thess. 2:1-8; Rev. 13:1-8). The Roman secular powers that once supported the Papal church have turned against her, and have taken away her temporal power, which is regarded by some of the best expositors as a sign of the approaching advent (Dan. 7:26; 2 Thess. 2:8; Rev. 17:16, 17). The nations upon the field of prophecy are in a state of unrest, and are supporting millions of men in arms, in anticipation of a vast conflict in the near future; and such was to be the state of the nations at Christ's coming (Dan. 12:1, 2; Luke 21:25-28; Rev. 11:18; 16:13-15). Atheism, infidelity, anarchism, and socialism are increasing and attacking the very foundations of our religious, political and social life. The world presents conditions like those before the flood and the destruction of Sodom, devoting itself to the gratification of the senses, and forgetful of God and coming judgment (Matt. 24:37-41; Luke 17:26-37). Most professed Christians have "a form of godliness" without "the power thereof;" they are "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God;" comparatively few are living "separate from the world" (2 Tim. 3:1-5; 4:1-4).

The doctrine of the world's conversion before the coming of Christ is a modern and very dangerous error. The righteous and wicked, represented in Christ's parable of the sower as "wheat" and "tares," will be "together" in the world at the "harvest," which is the "end of the world" (Matt. 13:24-30; 36-43). "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived" (2 Tim 3:13). "In the last days perilous times shall come" (2 Tim. 3:1-5). These conditions could not exist if all were converted. In the "last days" men were to "depart from the faith" (1 Tim. 4:1). They were to scoff at the thought of Christ's return, and say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" (2 Pet. 3:3-10). The "man of sin," the very head and representative of apostasy, is to remain and oppose the truth until Christ's coming, and then be destroyed (2 Thess. 2:8). The church of Chrsit, instead of looking for the conversion of the world, or a fabled millennium, which can never be, should "look" and "wait" for the coming of her Lord as the consumation of her hope (Rom. 8:23; 1 Cor. 1:7; Phil. 3:20; 1 Thess. 1:9, 10; Heb, 9:28; 2 Pet. 3:12).

8. We believe that repentance, faith in Christ, and a life consistent therewith, are essential to salvation.

God "commandeth all men everywhere to repent" (Acts 17:30). "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish" (Luke 13:3, 5). "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out" (Acts 3:19). "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 18:3). "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom. 5:1). "But without faith it is impossible to please him" (Heb. 11:6). But "faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone" (James 2:17). We "must be born again," or we "cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3:3, 5, 7). We must become "new creatures" in Christ, and have his Spirit in our hearts, or we are "none of his" (Rom. 86; 2 Cor. 5:17). We must seek by prayer, watchfulness, and the diligent use of all the means of grace, to overcome the evil in our nature, to resist the temptations of "he world," and so develop the "mind" which was "in Christ Jesus," that we may be fitted for the holy associations of his kingdom (Phil. 2:5; 1 Thess. 5:6; Heb. 4:16). "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord" (Heb. 12:14).

9. We believe in the ordinances of the Lord's Supper and Baptism.

Once a week we "eat of that bread and drink of that cup" which are designed to "show the Lord's death until he come" (Luke 22:19, 20;

We believe that immersion is the only Scripture mode of baptism. Our Lord instituted baptism as a figure and confession of his burial and resurrection; and neither sprinkling nor pouring will answer that end (Matt. 3:16; John 3:23; Acts 8:38, 39; Rom. 6:3, 4; Col. 2:12). Only those old enough to understand and believe the gospel should be baptized (Mark 14:15, 16; Acts 2:38). Baptism is a condition of the remission of sins (Acts 2:38).

10. We believe that it is the duty of every Christian to give in proportion to his income to the support of the church.

"Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver" (2 Cor. 9:7; Mal. 3:8-10; Luke 6:38; 1 Cor. 16:1, 2). We believe that pew-renting, fairs, festivals, lotteries, theatricals and other entertainments for the raising of money to support the church are a dishonor to the cause of Christ, and an injury to his people (Matt. 21:12, 13; Luke 19:41-46). The church should in no way discriminate against the poor, but her doors should be open and her seats free to all alike (Matt. 11:5; James 2:1-5).

In this outline nothing more than a brief synopsis of our leading views could be given. But few passages of Scriptures could be quoted in full. We trust, however, that the reader will find and read for himself the many others to which reference is made. Remember the command of Jesus: "Search the Scriptures" (John 5:30). And remember, also, the example of the Bereans, so highly commended by the apostle: "These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so" (Acts 17:2).

OUTLINE OF BIBLE STUDY

The only way to study the Bible intelligently is by ages or dispensations, and the following outline is prepared with that object in mind.

There are four rules that the student should consider when reading the word of God. They are as follows:

I. Who is the speaker?
II. To whom is the message addressed?
III. What is the purpose or object.
IV. Under what age was it spoken?

The Divisions of the Word

There are seven divisions of the Bible:

I. In the Old Testament Scriptures:
(1). The Law of Moses (Historical).
(2) The Prophets (Prophetical).
(3). The Psalms (Poetical). See Luke 24:44.

II. In the New Testament Scriptures:
(1). The Gospel (Biographical).
(2). The Acts (Historical).
(3). The Epistles (Doctrinal).
(4). The Revelation (Prophetical). Deut. 29:20; John 5:39; Isa. 8:20; 2 Tim. 2:15.

The Ages or Dispensations

Paul gives us the key to the study of the Bible in Eph. 3:5; 2:7, speaking of ages past and also yet to come.

I. The Adamic Age.

Dates from the beginning (Gen. 1:1) to the fall of man (Gen. 3:24).

Just how long Adam remained in paradise is unknown.

The period closes with judgment upon man.

II. The Antideluvian Age.

Dates from the banishment from the garden (Gen. 3:24) to the flood (Gen. 6:7).

The dates for this period given by Bishop Usher are B. C. 4004 to B. C. 2340.

We sometimes speak of this period as the period of the early people.

Some of the age were men of renown (Gen. 6:4); yet the age was godless (Gen. 5-7). See also Matt. 24:37-39. This period ends with judgment on the world.

Days are full of types and shadows.

III. The Patriarchal Age.

Dates—2348 B. C. to 1491 B. C. Dates from the flood (Gen. 8:1) to the Exodus from Egypt. Exodus 13:18.)

The family of Abraham called; covenants of promise made unto him and his seed; the gospel preached (See Gen. 12:1; 13:14-18; 17:7-8; Gal. 3:8).

Period closes with judgment on Egypt.

IV. The Jewish Age.

Dates—1491 B. C. to 33 A. D. This period extends from the giving of the law (Ex. 20) to the cross of Christ, when the law ended (Col. 2:14).

To whom was the law given? (Ex. 20:1-3; Deut. 5:3-15). Why given? (Gal. 3:19). Its purpose (Gal. 3:24). How long was it to continue? (Gal. 3:19).

This period ends with the judgment upon the Jews (A. D. 70. See Matt. [illegible]

V. The Gentile Age.

Began A. D. 33. Dates from Pentecost (Acts 2) to the second coming of Christ (Matt. 24).

We know this also as the Holy Spirit or Christian age. It may also be called the church age. The gospel is preached in its fulness during this age (Mark 16:15-16), and goes to the Gentile (Rom. 1:16; Acts 15:14). It is necessary for our salvation during this age that we understand, believe, and obey the gospel.

Period ends with judgment on the Gentile world (Matt. 25).

VI. The Kingdom Age.

The Millennium. This age will last 1,000 years Rev. 20:4), beginning at Christ's second coming will come "a little period;" following this is the reign.

The age of restitution (Acts 3:20-21). The saints take the kingdom and reign (Rev. 3:21: 5:10). See also Dan. 7:13, 18, 23, 27.

This period ends with the final judgment.

VII. The Eternal Age.

Christ delivers up the kingdom to the Father (1 Cor. 15:20).

As a result of the reign of Christ, all things spoken by the prophets are restored (Num. 14:21; Psa. 72:1-8; Isa. 11:9; Luke 23:43; 2 Peter 3:13; Rev. 21:1).

That which was lost has been restored. God's plan fails not. "He declares the end from the beginning" (Isa. 46:10).

EDITORIAL

As a mirror with a veil hung in front, so is the human mind shut off from knowledge—a useless thing. "With all thy getting, get understanding."

The shadows of apprehension—the bogies of imagination—give us more trouble than the realities of life; but perhaps they are part of the real ills. In the happy day to come, "thou shalt not fear."

IT is well to remember—1. That every promise is a debt. 2. That all are not saints that go to church. 3. That he is well paid who is well satisfied. 4. That there is no worse joke than a true one. 5. That it is easier to give advice than follow it. 6. That good fortune is hard to be borne unselfishly. 7. That it is better to be innocent than to be penitent. 8. That a little of every thing really amounts to nothing. 9. That it is much easier to be critical than correct. 10. That there would be no shadows if there were no sunshine.

During the week our church has been in mourning on account of the death of Sister Ellen Gibbs. Our sister was born in Croydon, England, in 1846. She came to this country in 1873. She obeyed the truth with her husband thirty-five years ago. The mother of ten children, seven are living. It is a tribute to her christian deportment of the highest kind that all her children are in the faith of the gospel.

Her long life of service in the truth came to a sudden end by a stroke of apoplexy. She was at the Lord's table on the Sunday preceeding her death, in usual health. On the night of her death she retired in common health The "sting" of the enemy must have occurred soon after she went to sleep. We thank the Lord that her quiet life was ended by an alangesia death. When the resurrection comes she will awake from her slumbers refreshed with the vigor of the morning, and will think she has just waked up from a night's rest. She will not realize that she has died.

Her funeral was conducted in the church on July 19, after which we sorrowfully wended our way to the cemetery, where we laid her to rest in flowers and tears until the voice of our returned Lord shall raise the dead, to transfuse into them that are worthy, "the powers of an endless life." Let those of her relatives that are out of Christ, resolve here and now to run into the name of the Lord, as into a tower, that they may be safe in the "great and terrible day of the Lord" that is coming. Sister Gibb's race is finished; she is in the safe keeping of God. But we that are among the living have need to take heed that we do not depart from the living God because of an evil heart of unbelief. The Lord bless us and keep us from falling until the end.

EDITORIAL QUALMS

The controversy on the pre-existence of Christ continues to rage in our Adventists exchanges. The cross currents in their ecclesiastical waters are strong. Since 1344 they have been repeating that Christ "is coming personally, visibly and gloriously." Another generation is now on the scene, tired of this repetition, and are asking, Who is this Jesus that is coming again? They are ruthlessly thrusting aside stereotyped ideas and phraseology, much to the distress of some of the editors. Having thrown overboard the immortality of the soul, and logically its pre-existence, the "adorable Trinity," and logically Christ's pre-existence, the editors have unconsciously surrendered all their ammunition to the enemy. Those who deny the pre-existence of Christ are shooting real lead, while the editors and their helpers are trying to hold the citadel by firing wind rifles. Bootless effort. While the editor of The Hope writes apologetics for the theory of "incarnation," and talks about Justin Martyr, Mrs. John Brown, and Libby Prison, strong articles, like the following from Elder L. G. Dix, are causing editorial qualms:

The Pre-Existence Question

"There seems to be a persistent effort on the part of a few people to Romanize the Adventist Church on the doctrine of the nature of Christ; and, as it was in the days of Arius, those who believe in the immortal pre-existence of the Christ are always ready to anathematize those who can not see with them. This one spirit would brand the doctrine as not of God, even if the scriptures were not plain on the matter. That doctrine was responsible for the first blood shed by one body of professing Christians against another, and has ever been held and fostered by Rome from the council of Nice to the present moment. Brethren, the doctrine has a bad parentage.

"The question at issue is, Did the Christ exist in a literal, physical, personal form before he was conceived and born of the virgin? As one of the fledglings, I must say that I have read every argument, pro and con, and have failed to find a single case in point hat will convince me of a personal, physical existence for the Christ before his beget-tal and birth in Bethlehem. I would notice some of the test scriptures and see if they really teach such a doctrine.

"Heb. 1:1-3, 5, 6, 8, 10; 13:8. 'God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; who, being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high.' 'Unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son?' 'Let all the angels of God worship him.' 'Unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever.' 'And thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the work of thine hands.' 'Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and forever.'

"Now let us analyze this scripture and see if there is any eternal existence in it. First, when did he speak by his Son? In the last days. If that Son had an eternal existence with the Father, why had his voice never been heard before? 'By whom he made the worlds.' Was it necessary for Christ to have an eternal existence for Christ to make the worlds by him? John says (chapter 1:1): 'In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God.' This statement makes it plain to me that in the beginning it was by the word of his mouth that God formed the worlds, and David so testifies in Psa. 33:6: 'By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth.' Was that word a material, physical, eternal being, or just the word of God, and, as such, a part of him? I believe that it was his word.

"This settles Christ's creative work for the past, but not for the future. 'Upholding all things by the word of his power'. When did Christ begin to uphold all things by his word? 'When he had purged our sins.' When was that? When he had died and been raised to an endless life. Then he said: 'All power has been given unto me.' But nowhere in the book can you find such a statement prior to his resurrection.

"'Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.' When was he begotten? Was it away back yonder, in the dawn of eternity, if it ever had a dawn? Listen to the word (Luke 1:35): 'And the angel answered and said unto her, The holy spirit shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore all that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God.' Here we have the begettal of the Christ who died for us. Was there another Christ, that was begotten or came into existence some other way? Can anything have a physical existence before it is made?

"Gal. 4:4: 'But when the fulness of the time was come God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law.' If he was made of a woman he was not made before the woman; if he was made under the law he was not made before the law. Jehovah said it was the seed of the woman that should bruise the serpent's head; but if the Christ was there before the woman he was not her seed.

"Another scripture now claims our attention, John 5:20, 21, 23, 25: 'For the Father loveth the Son, and sheweth him all things that himself doeth. * * * For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will.' 'That all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father.' 'The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live.' I never heard an Adventist preacher deny that Jesus Christ was the divine Son of God, and 'the resurrection and the life;' but we do deny that he is as old as his Father, and that personally they are one. We do contend that there was a time when there was no begotten Son of God; that there never was a time when God was dead, but there was a time when Christ was dead; and if he died he was not eternal prior to his death, for the eternal or immortal can not die; but after his resurrection, or rather at his resurrection, he was made a quickening spirit (1 Cor. 15:45).

"Colossians 1:16: 'For by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities or powers: all things were created by him, and for him.' This is but a reiteration of the first of John, that it was by the word of God that all things were created, and Christ was that word made flesh and dwelt among men; but there is no evidence that while he was the word he had a separate personal existence apart from God.

"Micah 5:2: 'Whose goings forth have been been from of old, from everlasting.' The question here hinges on his 'goings forth.' Does it teach that the one that was to be born in Bethlehem had been going forth from everlasting or that his going forth had been decreed from everalsting, even from of old, by the Ancient of days? I cleave to the latter interpretation, because it answers to the general teaching of the Bible and to reason as well.

"Rev. 22:13, 16: 'I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star.' Brethren, I can't help but smile when I read this statement of Jesus himself. Surely if he was the root and offspring of David he didn't exist before David did. Can my offspring exist before me? Only as Levi paid tithes to Melchisedec when he was yet in the loins of his father (Heb. 7:9, 10). So Christ, while yet with the Father as his word, was God, Creator and man's Savior, because God had promised that the seed of the woman should undo the work of satan. This promise was confirmed to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; then made with an oath to David, and to Daniel the time was set when this word should be fulfilled, and then, when the time had come, God sent forth his Son at the appointed time, made of a woman and made under the law.

"Brethren, if this doctrine of the eternal personal existence of Christ is true of him it is also true of all of Adam's race, and the Mormons have the straight of it when they say we are all preexistent angels; for the letter to the Hebrews says (2:17): 'Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful priest in all things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people.' If he was made in all points like me, then I am in all points like him. Hence if he had an eternal existence before his birth, so did I, because in all points as to existence we are alike.

"Deut. 18:18: 'I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and I will put my words in his mouth.' 'I will' is future tense. Was that prophet already in existence, or was he to be raised up at a future time? Was he to be of 'their brthren,' or was he an eternal, unbegotten, unborn Son of God? Brethren, let us walk in the light of revelation and reason, for they both go together.

"I can but ask, if three was a physical being with an eternal existence back yonder, what became of that eternal body, when the so-called incarnation took place? For all we know, the human embryo at conception is so microscopic that it can not be seen with the human eye. Did that organism cease to exist? If it did it was not eternal, neither was it the only begotten Son of God. If that child that was born of Mary had an eternal existence, could it be truthfully said of him, 'when he was eight days old,' when he was really as old as eternity? Which was man's Savior, the preexistent body or the flesh and blood body? Hear him speak in John 6:50, 51: 'This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die. I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread he shall live forever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world.'

"This scripture settles it for me. The flesh of Christ had never been in heaven at the time he spoke, for he said at his resurrection that he had not yet ascended. Then how could he truly say he came down from heaven, only in the language of John, 'In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God.'

"Belitting Jesus Christ! To me the man who places Jesus on a pedestal so far above man as to call him the eternally existing Son of God is belittling his work of fighting sin and evil, and also his exaltation because of his victory; but when we put him where the Book does, on the same plane as his brethren, and see him tempted in all points like as they are, and yet without sin, then enduring the cross, despising the shame, and at last lying down in death; and then see the mighty power of God put forth in his awakening to an endless life, and his exaltation to the throne of the Majesty on high, and given a name that is above every name, his exaltation means something.

So, brethren, I must still believe that since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. I must believe that 'there is one God, and one mediator between God and man, the man Jesus Christ.' I must still believe that 'one like the Son of Man' is going to be brought to the 'Ancient of days,' and have the kingdom bestowed on him; I also believe that he is the divine Son of God, because he was begotten by his power hence he was the only begotten Son.

I may be a supercilious, chirping fledgling, but I have never been to the Roman 'dunghill of decretals' for my theology, and I propose to steer clear of anything that smells of Rome."

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Restitution:

I want some good brother to give an exposition of Matthew 27:52, 53. I want to know if the bodies of the saints did rise or not. I want to hear from some good brethern on this subject.

Your brother,

A. H. ELROD.

CHILDREN OF LIGHT

"Walk as children of light" (Eph. 5:8).

Paul is advising the Ephesians to walk in the righteoous way, forgetting sin and darkness. We should, likewise receive this advice and walk in the light. We are children of God. Since "God is light," if we walk as children of God we will walk as children of light.

If we would walk as children of God we must put our faith in him and trust in him even unto the end. We must try, and even if we fail we need not fear, for "the eternal God is thy refuge and underneath are the everlasting arms" (Dent. 33:27). Our steps of faith may fall on the seeming void, but will find the rock beneath. If we acknowledge him in all our walks of life, he will direct our paths. If we travel in the ways of darkness God is not with us, for "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all" (1 John 1:5). He is not to be found in dark places; "but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:7).

God is light in the sense of truth, and in him is no error. He is the source of all light and truth. He is light in the sense of purity; in him is no darkness of corruption or moral impurity. "The Lord is righteous in all his ways and holy in all his works. The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him; to all that call upon him in truth. He will fulfill the desire of them that fear him; he also will hear their cry, and will save them" (Psalm 145:17-19).

God is light in the sense of prosperity; in him is no darkness of adversity, disappointment, or defeat. He is light in the sense of happiness, and in him is no darkness of sorrow or misery. "In thy presence is fulness of joy; at they right hand there are pleasures forevermore" (Psalm 16:11).

We can see that God is light in every sense of the word, and in him exists no darkness at all. The ignorance, vice and sorrows of this present world flow not from God, but from sin, which is the source of all evil. God has tried to drive away sin, which entered the world through disobedience. People still cling to sin. They stay in darkness, for they know God's marvelous light will expose their iniquities. Just as the strong sunlight has a fatal effect upon bacterial disease germs, which work so much harm among people, so will God's light have a lasting effect upon those who work iniquity among his children.

We must turn wholly to God and become like unto him, and we will enjoy his light in the sense of moral perception, truth, purity, prosperity and joy. Then we will be so lost in his light that we will shine in his light and reflect his glory. God is like a central orb of light whose diminished rays fall fainter and fainter upon the path of him who travels away from God. As the sinner travels farther and farther away from God, who is light, the darkness gathers deeper on his path as he proceeds. Beloved, as we travel on in life, if we want to walk as children of life, we must bear in mind: "The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?" (Psalm 27:1).

Many times a Christian will slip down into the valley of shadow, but he must look beyond and keep in view that star of hope which appears so glorious on the horizon after a night of shadow. Let us, however, strive to keep out of the valley and be "hills of light," a glory to God and beacons of guidance to those who are groping about in darkness in the valley of death.

I pray, dearly beloved, that we who are walking as children of light will continue so till we reach the great city of light and life forever.

VIOLA GAZELEY.

NEBRASKA CONFERENCE NOTICE

The 28th annual conference of the churches of God in Nebraska will convene this year at Kennard, Neb., Aug. 16 to the 24th inclusive. This is an entirely new place; and those who come will have the pleasure of meeting the many new brethren baptized by Bro. Adams during the winter. From reports they are earnest, active and wide awake workers, and I am sure we will have a very interesting meeting if we come prepared to do our part. Let us make it a conference indeed, taking for our pattern the conference held in Jerusalem (Acts 15). Read about it carefully, and you will notice that the brethren and apostles met to confer or talk upon certain misunderstandings among themselves. With pure, unprejudiced minds they were seeking for the truth, and found it. Can we devise a better plan of dealing with our troubles than to follow their example—that is, meet in the same spirit and with the same spirit and with the same apostles, and listen personally to them? Would we not find the truth as they did? We surely would, or Christ did not tell the truth when he said: "Seek and ye shall find." If each is seeking for the truth, regardless of his own decisions, and with his mind pure and unprejudiced, the only possible result would be a unity of decisions and if we have the full, acting faith in God's promises that we should have, these words "Seek and ye shall find," will induce us to meet in this way.

Notice that the conference spoken of in Acts 15 is not an organization with officers, etc., but simply a meeting together of members of Christ's body. While our conference, which we have organized to carry on the business part of spreading the gospel, is all right and very necessary, it can not take the place of a heart to heart conferring together of brethren as brethren of Christ, and not as members of a man-made organization. It is this kind of a conference we have neglected. We meet and the things which are troubling our minds we keep quiet, and confer upon them with some one else when we go home. Let us forget we are members of any certain organization, forget the lines drawn by it, and meet on common ground as brothers of Christ, make known our troubles in the right spirit, realizing we are standing before him, and see how quickly all ill and harsh feelings will vanish. If each is directed by the same spirit or mind, all must come to the same conclusion. Have we faith enough to believe that and act upon it? But we must not start in with this thought: "Such and such a person will not allow himself to be directed by the spirit, and so there can be no unity." If we do this we ourselves are contrary to the spirit. Let each see that he himself is in submission to the leading mind, and leave the other brother and the result with God. Let us remember that each one of us is human and imperfect and, in general, subject to the some faults, and that these faults must be rooted out before we can stand accepted before Christ.

As usual, meals will be served at 10c, and the lodging furnished free. Brother Huggins of Cleveland, Ohio, and Brother Adams will be the speakers other brethren living in the state are expected to be present and give us sermons also. Brother Adams and Brother Huggins need no recommendation as speakers. Most of us have heard them.

Now we urge the brethren everywhere to come with nothing but love for Christ in their hearts and a desire to see this work prosper. Drop the lines which we have unconsciously drawn and meet as God would have his children meet.

ALTA KING, Secy.

JOTTINGS BY THE WAY

Since leaving Iowa, where we immersed Brother and Sister Wm. Summers, we have journeyed through Missouri and Kansas into Oklahoma. We have been holding meetings and Bible lessons each week. On our first Sunday in Kansas we met a few of our brothers and sisters in the home of Brother and Sister Reed of Arkansas City, Kansas. In the morning I spoke on the one gospel; in the afternoon Mrs. Robinson spoke on "The Messiah, which Being Interpreted Is the Christ." In the morning we had the pleasure of helping two very worthy young ladies to put on the Lord Jesus. We have the pleasure of introducing to those, of like precious faith with us, Sisters Dora Chaplin, of Chula Vista, California, and Gladus Reed, of Arkansas City, Kansas. These two young sisters came, as did the eunuch, saying, "What doth hinder me to be baptized?" In our examination we found they believed the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ. These two sisters have not entered the "trial period," and are now walking in the new life. Paul says (2 Tim. 2:5): "If a man strive for the masteries, yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully." We admonish them to study the word that they may be strengthened in the divine life.

We have also visited and preached in Newkirk, Oklahoma. This is the home of Brother and Sister Geo. Watters. He is a young brother, and is preaching the gospel of Christ. We also met Brother and Sister Hatfield with whom we made our home. We found enjoyment with these brothers and sisters in talking of the promises made to the fathers.

We journeyed from here to Burbank, Okla., which is the home of Sisters Chandler and McCurry. They are alone in defense of the gospel. Sister Chandler is a real "live wire," whose voice is always set for the defense of the gospel. We delivered six discourses and held three Bible studies. We left with the town talking the Scriptures and expressing a wish for our return. Brother W. H. Wilson of Chicago visited Burbank and Arkansas City last spring. There is a union church in Burbank open for all. We preached in it to good audiences, who gave the best attention. We have strong hopes of some additions at this place. May the Lord bless the two sisters in that part of his vineyard and strengthen them for the work before them, is our prayer.

Any one in Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas wanting our services, may address us at Geuda Springs, Kansas.

Your brother and sister awtiing for the coming of the Lord.

D. C. and N. B. ROBISON.

OBITUARY

We were startled the evening of July 5 when the phone came that Sister Melissa Elliott had just fallen asleep. An illness of seven days with pneumonia had so weakened her already frail body that she was unable to withstand the disease.

Melissa (Kelsoe) Elliott was born near Brownsville, Linn Co., Oregon, Sept. 15, 1854. Married in 1877 to our late and well known Brother Merritt Elliott, he having three motherless children. Mother she was to these children in the highest sense. Often have we heard their words of praise of her untiring efforts to direct them to true manhood and womanhood.

They made their home in Linn County for several years, moved to Kansas, where they lived for two years, thence to Texas. In 1888 they returned to Oregon and settled at Central Point.

Two daughters were born to this union. One died while the family lived in Texas; the other, Mildred, lived with her mother and has been her comfort ever since Brother Elliott's death in January, 1908.

Sister Elliott became a believer in the promises, the things concerning Christ, and was buried in baptism by our late Brother Skeals, in 1899.

We laid her away to rest beside her dear companion. Sadly we turned from the dusty bed, knowing the loved one is silent, the voice is quiet, and the hands, ever willing to serve others, are still. We shall see her no more until the trumpet shall sound; and the dead in Christ shall arise.

The home, where so often we met to study the word of truth, is now broken up, but it will always linger in our memory as the place where many pleasant hours have been spent with the brethren.

One by one the soldiers of the cross have been placed in the silent tomb, until few are left.

The children who morn a mother are J. P. Elliott, Butte, Mont.; Mrs. T. M. Jones, Corning, Calif.; Mrs. J. P. Hoagland and Mildred Elliott, of Central Point, Ore.; two brothers also mourn a sister.

INWARD LIGHT

Matt. 6:22, 23; Luke 11:24-36.

1. This saying of Jesus, variously reported by Luke and Matthew, was, of course, much fuller and more carefully worked out in the Savior's own talk than in the forms given it by the evangelists. These texts are mere compressed notes of what the Master said—a sort of shorthand. And it is for that reason that we find them rather obscure. But the obscurity is in the words rather than in the meaning. The meaning shines radiant enough.

Inward light is not a thing by itself. It is not the sole guide of life. It is not independent of any outward light. On the contrary, it is quite uncertain in itself. It may cease to be altogether, so that instead of inward light there is inward darkness. This is a most important thing to remember when we are called upon to expect illumination from within. "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord," said the apostle Paul. It is Christ Jesus who is our wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification and redemption (1 Cor. 1:30). He is the light of the world.

2. Whatever inward light we have, then, is derived from the outward light. This is obviously true in the natural world from which Jesus took this figure. All the light we know (except that from the fixed stars) comes from the sun. I strike a match and light my little candle, the policeman flashes his bull's-eye into the gloomy alley, the flame flickers from the coal in the grate, the clear moonlight streams over the country side—and, in every case, the light, by whatever roundabout route, comes from the sun. My study is flooded with light and though it be the dead of night, and thick curtains shut my windows from the outer world, the light that is here in my room, and by which I read, is sunlight.

So it is with all spiritual and moral light. The light of pity which shines from the teaching of Buddha, the queer and twisted goodness of the fetish worshipper, the warm glow of love in the heart of a heathen mother—all these things are true have their origin in God as does that cluster of moral stars that we call the Decalogue and the glorious white light of the gospel words of the New Testament.

3. That the light of the world may shine in the heart, that the outer glory may become inward light, some channel of communication is necessary. The sun may shine in the heavens, but he only sees it who has an eye. There are blind people all about us. Some are born blind. They have within them no faintest glimmer even of remembered light. The words "gold" and "blue" and "red" bring no sense of differing colours to their imagination at all. They are empty words, words of an unknown language, sounds indeed, but signifying nothing. Such blind folk stand in the full blaze of summer's splendid artistry, but have no inward light because they have no eyes. Others have lost their sight. Memory reminds them of past beauties, but now they see none. The optic nerve no longer responds to the play of colour. Their light has become darkness.

Now, what it is that corresponds in the spiritual world to the eye in the natural world? What is it that brings into the heart the beauty and brightness of God? The texts do not make that quite clear. But if we read through the whole passage in Matthew, the meaning emerges with some definiteness. The eye by which the light of God shines in to give us inward light is obedient faith. The one word "faith" is really enough, for faith that is not obedient is not true faith at all.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

VOLUME 61. AKRON, O., AUGUST 19, 1913 NUMBER 33

IN MEMORY

Of T. J. Daniel, Who Fell Asleep June 4, 1913

Another soldier of the cross,
Who has labored for years to save the lost,
Weary of the battle, has lain his armor down,
To await the Master and a crown.

He had fought life's battles for many years,
'Mid joy and grief, 'mid hope and tears;
Ever sowing the seed from the Master's bin,
That the angel reapers will soon gather in.

How earnestly he has labored, with voice and pen,
To teach the gospel to dying men;
To tell them of God's power to save,
And ransom them from the cold, cold grave.

Counting not the time or cost,
If he could but save the lost;
The sword of the spirit with power did he wield,
Ever keeping the light where it was ne'er concealed.

But thou art gone, thy work is done,
The battle is fought, and death hath won;
Fold his hands gently across his breast,
And lay him away quietly and sweetly to rest.

Sweet is his sleep, and calm and profound,
While gloom and sadness reign around:
Cruel death did at last his weary eyes close,
As shades of evening shuts the rose.

Sleep on, dear brother, and take thy rest,
With thy head pillowed on thy Savior's breast;
Thy friends all loved thee well,
But Jesus loved the best.

Only a few more days, or years at most,
And we shall reach fair Canaan's coast;
When in that holy, happy land,
With all the ransomed thou wilt stand.
Until then farewell. —MRS. DR. L. HICKLIN.

PRAYER

Our Father, Thou knowest each of us, help us day by day if we have any special difficulties or burdens to carry. Be thou near us in all our temptations. May we lay hold upon thine hand, by which alone our feet can stand in slippery places and our goings be established. If any of us have sad hearts, the Lord comfort and succor, soothe and calm, send his own gracious presence, which makes light in every darkness. Guide us all according to our different conditions and necessities. And may we all, in our several ways, live lives of obedient faith, and serve Jesus Christ for his dear love's sake. Amen.

THE ABSURDITIES OF MODERN THEOLOGY

M. JOBLIN

We have not invited you to listen to "The Absurdities of Modern Theology" for amusement, merely to pass away an hour that may hang heavily on our hands; neither do we wish to ridicule, although some things may appear ridiculous. But we wish to campare some of the tenets of modern theology with scripture and common sense. When we speak of the absurdities of modern theology we have reference to its inconsistencies—a want of harmony in its parts—not commending itself to reason, which is a faculty of the mind to argue or debate and draw inferences, so as to distinguish truth from falsehood, or good from evil.

The Soul

We first invite attention to some of the absurd positions taken in reference to the soul of man. In a work on "Spirit of Life," by Dr. Spicer, we find the following: "The soul exists wholly independent of the body which it inhabits, although there are certain actions it can not perform without using the body to which it belongs. It can neither see, hear, nor speak, without using the body."

Remember, he says the soul can "neither see, hear, nor speak" without the body. Every one of you that has one grain of reason or common sense must say at once that when this soul gets out of the body it must be deaf, dumb and blind. There is no straining needed to make this absurdity appear. We are driven to this conclusion if we reason from analogy at all, and we shall all reason thus if we are not idiots. If we are told that a person can not talk without a tongue we know that if one loses his tongue he can not talk; if a man sees by his eyes, he can not see without his eyes, and as Dr. Spicer says the soul can not see, hear nor speak without the body, of course after it leaves the body, as the common notion is, it must be blind, dumb and deaf.

Now use the faculty of reason that Deity has endowed you with a little further, and then what? Why, as this separate soul is carried off to heaven (as theology teaches) it can not see God, or the angels, or Jesus, or the glorious habitation of Jehovah. It is as black as pitch to him; one vast gloom curtain seems hung all around, and if the Creator of heaven and earth were to die it could not be draped in deeper mourning. But he is also deaf; the old ear is laid away to rot (a bad arrangement) in the ground; the silence of death reigns everywhere; there must be a great deal transacted at the tribunal in chief of all the universe, but all the souls are deaf and know nothing of it. Besides this, he can not say a word to his fellow, for his fellow is deaf; and, worse than all, his own speaking apparatus is rotting in the ground, along with his ears and eyes. We appeal to you all that we have strained no parts to make this appear, but these are the unavoidable conclusions from the Doctor's premises.

But let your mind act still further in this direction, and then what? Why, you wonder what so much fuss has been made about going to heaven for if all that be true. You wonder where the glory to God for their salvation comes in; they can neither see, hear nor speak, and hence can not know or enjoy anything. Man or woman who has never thought seriously of the rotten theories of men, but contemplate the purchase of the dear Redeemer's blood for a moment in the deaf, dumb and blind mutes that theology has placed around the throne of the Eternal. Think of Abraham, and Isaac, and all the martyrs, in that state of worse than nothingness.

A step further, and you hear another of these theological doctors telling of the soul going to heaven and becoming an angel messenger (blind, deaf and dumb messengers are not of much account in this world), and singing loud hallelujahs for ever and ever. Did you ever see such absurdities or such contradictions? When you look upon a person here who is deaf and dumb and blind, it is only to commiserate, and you would be likely to say it would be better for such an one to be dead than alive; but if the doctor be true, all souls are just like that. This leads us to contemplate the infernal regions, so called; all they can possibly thrown into them is fire and brimstone. Think again, and you decide with us that in that helpless and semi-insensible state life would be an awful burden, even in heaven.

But still again: If the soul is blind and deaf and dumb without the body, then it is the body that sees and hears and speaks after all, and when a man says "I want that," or "I have this," the "I" means the person who says it, not a little inside man, and hence this soul (we mean that which is claimed as an immaterial, self-existing thing) is of but little account after all.

In a work published by Mr. Lee on the soul (on page 33), he says: "The soul is without figure, form, color, impenetrability, extension, divisibility, gravity, attraction or repulsion." Mr. Lee is a great light in the Methodist church, and his work on the soul is looked up to as authority. But after what he has just said, do you think there can be any such thing as what he is claiming the soul to be? For our own part, we would ask no stronger proof that there is no such thing than these words of his: that it has "neither figure, form, color, impenetrability, extension, divisibility, gravitation, attraction or repulsion." Let us one and all admit what he says. I for one am ready, and where is the so-called soul then? If Mr. Lee had been a lexicographer, and this had been given as a definition of the word "nothing," it would have been excellent. Mr. Webster says "nothing" means not anything, nonentity, not at all, etc.; but Mr. Lee goes into the particulars in a scientific manner, and it is certainly a proper and true definition of that which it not at all, anywhere, or [illegible] would have "form, or figure, or color, or impenetrability, or divisibility," or all of these.

But this same gentleman believes that at death the righteous go to heaven and sing before the eternal throne: and we would like to know of him whether there would be any more reality about the music than there is about them? Now, the question of authority comes up: two great men differ: one says the soul is dumb and deaf and blind, and the other says he sings. We ought to be permitted to ask these men where they get their information; they must certainyl have different authority, or else they have no authority at all and are merely guessing at it, and putting it forth as gospel—which latter we believe to be the fact. But there are a few here who have made up their minds that these soul doctors shall not do guessing for us until they tell a straighter story.

Wicked Souls

To show the absurd notions that men have fallen into on subjects they know nothing about, because they throw aside or nullify the only book that can instruct them, the Bible, just apply this theological statement to a sinful soul, separated from the body, as they teach: what becomes of it? It is sent to hell fire, they tell us, the moment the body dies; keep this in memory. As Dr. Spicer says, it is "deaf and dumb and blind without the body," we ask how does it find its way to hell fire? It can not see. It can not inquire of anybody, for it is dumb, and besides this no one is able to tell him; and if anyone could tell him he could not hear, being deaf. Besides, he would not go there, if he knew the way, knowing a never-ending fire awaited him. But theology has a better way than this. It teaches that "devils drag the soul away," and to show another glaring absurdity, we ask how that which has no figure, or form, or substance, can be "dragged?" The devil may think he has the soul firmly in his grasp, and may fly off to the infernal gate, and think he cast it in, but in fact he had it not; but it were all the same to him, he thought he did; the soul, being so much like nothing, deceived him, and for all he knew he may have been deceived every time, and may not have any inhabitants in the doleful regions at all.

Fire and Brimstone

But supposing that theology may be correct, we point out another monstrous absurdity. Fire, literal fire and brimstone, could never affect an immaterial soul, could never affect that which occupies no space; it would be perfect nonsense to claim that it could. And for our part we would just as soon as not be cast into an immaterial fire, for immaterial soul, in plain English, is no soul at all, and an immaterial fire is not fire.

Popular Soul Beyond Control

Still another absurdity; It is is said: "The body is a tenement of clay for the soul to dwell in," and that the escape of the soul causes death, or is in fact death; but you all readily admit that a soul without figure, form or substance can not be affected or controlled or confined by a substance—clay, for instance! It may be in a man one minute; if he moved the width of his body he may leave it behind. In fact, when we see men of culture trying to force down such fooleries as gospel it fairly makes the flesh creep on our bones. If man has such a thing as an immortal immaterial soul, why not show us one single proof of it from the Bible to commence with, and not build such monstrosities on their own corrupt imeginations! The fact that between the lids of the Bible the words "immortal soul," or "immaterial soul," are not to be found ought to condemn the doctrine with everyone who pretends to believe the Bible at all. And as theologians go on and describe what the soul is, why do they not give us their authority? Ah, we know why: they would be ashamed to tell that they can give no proof except from heathen mythology!

A Plain Bible Story

Will you listen to a simple, plain, straightforward, commonplace Bible story that gives the lie to all these conflicting human systems? We know the more thoughtful of you have seen some of these glaring inconsistencies and sighed to know the truth. God help us to help you. We want to strip the mystical veil from your eyes the first thing, and let you see that God means what he says in his word, and at the same time says what he means when he calls things by their proper names. We have already stated that the terms "immortal" or "immaterial soul" can not be found within the word of God. We challenge all the doctors of divinity in the land to show to the contrary. We now further state that the Bible nowhere speaks of the soul of man as if it lived in a conscious state, but the very opposite! For instance, in Job 14:21, speaking of man after he has passed away it says: "His sons came to honor, and he knoweth it not; they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them." Then Ps. 115:17: "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Eccl. 9:5: "The dead (i. e., either righteous or wicked) know not anything." Also verse 10: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Why, Solomon? "For there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest." Now the question is, if a part of man survives the death of the body in a conscious state, how can this sweeping passage be applied to him? That he must work with all his might here, for he is going to the grave by and by and will neither know anything or do anything.

Take the case of David, said to be a man after God's own heart. In Peter's sermon on the Day of Pentecost he says David up to that time (1050 years after he died) had not ascended to heaven; and if theology be true there is no alternative but that David, when Peter spoke, had been in hell fire for a thousand years, notwithstanding he was a man after God's own heart. But theology is not true, and while David was not gone to heaven, it is equally true that he had not gone to hell fire, for the apostle tells us where he was in these words: "His grave is with us until this day" (Acts 2:20). Peter gives us the proof, too, that he was not alive and praising God. He says: "He is dead and buried." This agrees exactly with what David himself said just now in Ps. 115: "The dead praise not the Lord." From such plain testimonies as these we learn that theologians, having adopted the mystical principle of reading the scripture, have entirely mistaken the nature of man; and having made this mistake it upsets every other Bible doctrine, supposing that he was part mortal and part immortal have forced them to invent a heaven above for the good when they die; but this doctrine has no foundation in the Bible. Having a heaven above planned out for the righteous has driven them to twist a few figurative passages to make a burning lake for every sinner to be plunged into at death, forgetting that there is a judgment to come, even in their own system, when they are to be dragged forth to judgment after ages of hell torment. Oh, what glaring absurdities!

But the worst feature of all is that this great error regarding man's nature prevents him from appreciating God's great salvation. What is the great and glorious gift of God? Paul tells us: "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Now if eternal life be the greatest gift God has to bestow on man, depend upon it that what man wants —that's what man has not, that's what man can not obtain of himself, that's what man has no right to, or else he would have it already without taking it as a gift from God; that's what man failed to attain to by obedience in the first place, and hence is mortal, perishing, dying, for the wages of sin is death. That is what man has in store—death; he has earned this, he has served sin, and the wages of sin are death. Not death to a portion of him, but death to all that makes man what we see him. There was a time when the wicked man did not exist, and if he do not put away his sin in God's prescribed way there will be a time again when he will not exist, for he has been laboring for death in a course of sin, and death will be his, for that is the wages of sin. The nonsensical idea of being dead and alive at the same time is all of man's invention; it looks like man's bungling way of doing things; it looks unlike God's harmonious way of doing things. We see the account of Adam's sin, how he entered that road of death, and the penalty of the law was death—death unqualifiedly; that is, death of all that which had been made alive as Adam. If God does not say "Thy body shall die, Adam," then he meant the whole man Adam should die; and he moreover tells us that to die was to go back to dust, as he was before he was made.

Paul confirms the death penalty, but adds: "The gift of God is eternal life." Now we see some gospel; now we see that, although we in Adam are all mortal and must come down to death, and go to corruption, yet in spite of this eternal life can be obtained. God offers a recovery from this death in Adam, as a gift, on certain conditions. He offers us life just as long as he did to Adam, viz., to live forever, and the great question with every one of us should be, How can I avert the unending death that is the wages of sin? How can I attain to that which Deity has prepared in his purpose for Adam and his posterity if he had been obedient? Paul, in this same scripture, supplies the answer: "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus anointed."

No one has a right to be so modest concerning his own capacities as to believe himself unable to do anything worth while. God does not create useless creatures. But not infrequently it happens that the shirk borrows the garments of modesty to hide his defects.

CATECHISM ON THE SOUL

The soul, what is it? It is something that God created. When did he create it? In the beginning, after he had created the earth and the animals. How did he create it? God created man in his own image and likeness. He formed him of the dust of the grounds. What kind of a being was he? A lifeless being. How did he obtain life? God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and this man that God formed of the dust of the ground, in his own image and likeness, became a living soul.

Was this soul to live forever? No. Why? Because this soul disobeyed God and when God judged him he said to him: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Gen. 3:19). Did he ever return to dust? Yes. This living soul lived 930 years and he died (Gen. 5:5). Could he return to dust while living? No. Then to fulfill God's law he had to die. Do all living souls have to die? Yes. All go unto one place, all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again (Eccl. 3:20). Can anyone besides God, cause the soul to return to dust? Yes. Who is the first we have any record of? Cain, he slew his brother Abel (Gen. 4:8).

What is this breath of life? The air we breathe. Can anything live without it? No. Who does it belong to? There is no soul of man, or beast, or any plant, or any living thing, that God has created on this earth, that can exist without air. Is not anything that gives life, spirit? Yes. Then air, being spirit, returns to God at the death of the soul, does it not? Yes. It returns back to the atmosphere which is the air that surrounds the earth, and belongs to God. Have we any statement in the Bible, that a soul must breathe in order to live? Yes. "And they smote all the souls that were therein, with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them; there was not any left to breathe" (Josh. 11:11, 14). "Behold I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live. And the breath came unto them, and they lived" (Ezek. 37, 5-10). "All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils" (Job 27:3).

Is there any declaration that the soul shall die? Yes. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezk. 18:4, 20). Does the soul sin? Yes. "For all have sinned" (Rom. 3:23).

Is there any other kind of soul mentioned in the Bible? Yes, about 40 different kinds. Do any of them live forever? No. They all sin, and all die. Is there any other life than the present mentioned? Yes. The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life (Rom. 6:23). Has any one received this eternal life? Yes. Who? Jesus Christ our Lord. How did he receive it? By a resurrection from among the dead ones. Then if he has received eternal life, he can die no more. Now, what kind of a soul is he? An immortal soul. Are there any immortal souls on earth? There is not. Why? Because the only immortal soul that ever was on earth has gone to heaven. Is he going to stay there? No. Where is he going to stay? In due time he is coming to earth again. "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner, as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:11). What is he coming to earth for? To raise the worthy dead. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall be raised first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. And so shall we ever be with the Lord" (1st Thess. 4:13-18). Those that are raised at this time will be like Christ, will they not? Yes: "But we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is" (1st John 3:2). Then if Christ was raised an immortal being, we also will be raised immortal beings. How can we become immortal? By a resurrection. Who are raised? Those that are Christ's at his coming. Who are Christ's? All those that believe the gospel, and are baptized into Christ. "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ, and if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to promise" (Gal. 3:27, 29). No immortal soul out of Christ, and no living again without a resurrection.

EQUAL RIGHTS

It is significant since electricity was utilized as a power and illuminant in economics, "The above caption has been palpitant with remarkable energy and development in the popular mind, women's clubs, suffrage leagues and societies of like nature, have sprung up universally, so that women gain their inalienable and just rights—equal rights with the sterner sex.

Hence the issue of the hour along these lines is pertinently asked. By what right, divine or human, has masculinity acquired the exclusive title to purloin and hold in perpetual mortgage, equal rights, to the detriment of the gentler sex in the human family? Search the records, sacred and secular, and muteness prevails on this mooted question. Instead, the stigma of onesidedness hangs pall like over women since Edenic days. Despite the fact that God created the sexes, "Male and female created he them," the woman to be reciprocal helpmeet with man, no exemptions stipulated. In the scriptures God is credited with having made man upright, but man has sought out many inventions, and among inverse things deprived women of equal rights. The shame and falsity of such treatment did not emanate from God, as some would have us believe.

Equality is the keynote and goal of Christ's teaching, freely preached and bequeathed to men and women alike by the great emancipator, Jesus Christ. In every city and village, whither he went Illustrative are his words and actions; when addressing an open air meeting an auditor there informed Jesus his mother and other members of the family awaited his company, on the outer edge of the multitude. Instantly he motioned his hands around, betokening the human race in embrace and said, "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father in heaven, the same is my mother, sister and brother." The pronoun "whosoever" is the harmonizer here. Also consider his apt reply to an ambitious mother anxious her two sons be promoted to high positions in his rightful and regal kingdom. She was told: "The rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their great ones exercise authority over them, not so shall it be among you." Equal rights for one for all.

The volume of knowledge was to be vastly expanded at the nearing sunset of latter days, which are upon us. Peter in his famous address at Pentecost endorses Joel's prediction as a certified fact on the figtree of coming events. Because the time is near when the veriest drudge it may be, in the field, in the factory, or in household duties, would preach or prophesy. Events are moving rapidly to focus. Result: women have slipped a cog in conservatism and exclaim in scornful parody, "Christianity, Christianity, what indignities are perpetrated in thy name!" The gospel of the kingdom of God is negatived to one-half the human race through the overbearing and browbeating tactics of the biped man.

It is passing strange to note the repellant attitude of almost all shades and grades of Christianity toward equal rights, and also ninety-nine per cent. of so-called secret societies reject in their counsels and conclaves those by accident of birth of the feminine gender. Masonism, as a sample, boastingly proclaimed their propaganda is practical Christianity, practical Christianity forsooth, and women left out.

However, a brief glimpse at the other side cautions not to be over sanguine of results when women are in active possession of equal rights. They may or may not be, as some claim, a panacea for the world's woes. But in the light of voting, where equal rights prevail, drastic reforms were submitted and lost three to one. It is to be hoped, perhaps, when the fire edge of novelty wears off, women will cast their ballots more sanely.

Regarding voting by Christian professors in the affairs of worldly government, submit to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sade, "Ye are the light of the world;" "the salt of the earth," or at least ought to be. Therefore, let your light shine broadcast lest it become blurred, and see that your seasoning become not vapid and strengthless. Make for everything that is lawfully proper and right. So taught the christ. Also, as saith the apostle, "Let your moderation be known to all men; the Lord is at hand.

HIGHER CRITICISM GUESS WORK

Much of the so-called "higher criticism" of the present day is the merest guesswork. Much of it is worse—flippant and unwarrantable dogmatism, inspired by animosity against the Bible. None of it is of any great value except as illustrating the almost abnormal ingenuity with which idle intellects can spin far-fetched hypotheses from the flimsiest of materials, while manifesting an almost crass incapacity to discern the palpable indications of common sense. Its conclusions are being repeatedly falsified by fact,—vide, the recent discovery of tablets in Egypt proving the existence of writing as a means of correspondence at a time when, according to some phases of the "higher criticism," writing had not been invented. Elegant high-sounding twaddle is a correct description of much of its lucubrations. A descent of fog upon rocks is about the nature of its attacks on the Bible.

ANOTHER LETTER TO A CATHOLIC PRIEST

Dear Sir:

You and I had a friendly talk on the beach at Santa Cruz on the evening of Sunday, July 20, 1913. It was there I made a statement or two that you would under no conditions believe. Among the things I told you was this: That I could not see how God Almighty would be so unwise as to smile with approval on the Catholic Church putting a ten or twelve year old boy at the head of the church as the pope!

You immediately said this had never been done. I asserted that Catholic history said so. You denied that. So here I am with the proof. Turn to the book "History of the Middle Ages," by Rev. P. F. Gazeau, S. J. It is issued by the Catholic Publication Socety Co., 9 Barclay St., 1878, in New York. Will you have the effrontery in the face of this to deny the authority?

Well, that book says: "The Papacy was disgraced in the person of Benedict IX, who had been thrust into the chair of St. Peter by his relatives, the counts of Tusculum, when he was but ten or twelve years old."

What are we to do with this Catholic history? Accept it or reject it?

Again, I quote to show, as I told you on the beach, that popes were elected sometimes by politicians. This you denied. But here you are: "But the time was to come when in order to insure a Good choice all secular influence would have to be withdrawn from the election of the popes," etc.

The first quotation is from page 173 and the next one from page 174. Now was I trying to deceive you or was I telling the truth? Would you be so kind as to acknowledge that I was right, at least in this case? The history of the Catholic church is written in blood, and God has the record of it, and it is a fearful record, my dear sir. And I warn you to escape out of her (Rev. 18:4). You have but a short time in which to find peace. The Lord Jesus Christ is coming very soon and then it will be too late to fix up these things.

Her confessional has been the source of more sin and crime than one can dream of, if we take the statements for truth written by such priests as Chinoquy, Crowley and a host of others.

Right on the campground was a woman who had been a Catholic, who told me with her own mouth that her priest to whom she confessed asked her the most filthy and polluting questions in the confessional box. What do you think of this? This woman was then a young lady, pure and holy. She never knew of some filthy things till the priest suggested them to her. She was so shocked that it took her a long time to get over them. This is the rule and not the exception. But if a confessor makes a complaint of this to the bishop he gets no satisfaction, for the bishop does not want to reprove the priests for such a little thing as that. I tell you that you had better seek God Almighty and get your sinful heart clean upon the terms of the gospel. If not you are a lost man.

Yours, hoping to hear from you,

J. J. SCHAUMBURG.

If you see a fault in others, think of two of your own, and do not add a third one by your hasty judgment.—Flanner.

COMMUNICATIONIS

Brother Huggins:

I want to express my appreciation of Brother Gelletly's article in The Restitution of July 1. Men and women are equal.

I wish we could have more of Brother and Sister H. W. Reed's writings. I want to request that Sister Reed send the paper to The Restitution and have it published that she read at the Michigan conference. I know it would be appreciated by the readers of the paper. I am sure I, for one, would prize it.

Your sister, looking for the master,
MRS. DR. L. HICHLIN.

To the Brethren in Nebraska:

Eearly in the spring Brother Newell and Sister King published a notice in The Restitution asking all to send in their conference dues during May, if possible, so we would know how much we had to work upon. As treasurer of the conference, I wish to thank all the brethren for their prompt response.

We have never before had sa large a fund in the treasury at this time of year. This shows life in the cause. We hope and pray that the work at conference will merit your help, which has been so generous.

If there are any who have not paid their conference dues, please send them to me at Kennard, Nebr.

MRS. EMELINE E. DAVIS, Treasurer.

WHAT THE PEOPLE OUGHT TO KNOW ABOUT THE SOUL

1. That the Bible is the only source of information upon that subject.

2. That nothing can be learned about the soul except through the words employed by the spirit.

3. That the Hebrew word nephesh, is the only one in the Old Testament rendered soul, with two exceptions.

4. That the first use of nephesh is in Gen. 1:20, and is applied to beasts, as follows: "And God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the (nephesh chaiyah) moving creature that hath life."

5. That the second time nephesh occurrs is in the 21st verse: "And God created great whales and every (nephesh chaiyah) living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly." So that all the animals of the sea are living souls.

6. That the 3rd time nephesh occurs is in Gen. 1:24, thus: "And God said, Let the earth bring fourth the (nephesh chaiyah) living creature, after his kind, cattle and creping things, and beasts of the earth, after his kind." This proves that all the animals upon the earth are living souls.

7. That the fourth time nephesh occurs is in Gen. 1:30, "And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is life (nephesh chaiyah, margin, living soul), I have given every green herb for meat."

8. That the 5th use of nephesh is in Gen. 2:7, which is its first application to man, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a (nephesh chaiyah) living soul." Here we have precisely the same words applied to man that in the four preceding passages are applied to every living creature. Do the words nephesh chaiyah mean any more in Gen. 2:7 than in Gen. 1:20, 21, 24 and 30? If so, by what rule of exegesis? It is evident that the whole being, and not an immaterial, immortal, spiritual existence, separate from the physical organism is meant.

9. It should be known that the Greek word psuche rendered soul in the New Testament, means the same as nephesh in Hebrew, and is the only word thus rendered in the New Testament. It occurs 105 times, and expresses the whole being, or creature, or person, as for instance, "Three thousand (pusche) souls" (Acts 2:41); and "fear came upon every (pusche) soul," Acts 2:34, also Acts 3:23; Acts 7:14; Acts 27:37; and in Rev. 16:3, every living creature in the sea is called a pusche living soul.

The secondary use of pusche in the Scriptures is "life." Out of 105 times it is rendered life and "lives" 40 times, and this again harmonizes with nephesh in the Old Testament, and is applied indiscriminately to man and beast; but when rendered "life" it means the animating principle, as seen from its use in Matt. 2:20, "the young child's (pusche) life. Any one can see that an immortal, conscious entity, or being inside of the physical organism is not meant. Were there such an entity Herod's efforts to obtain it would be like running to catch lightning. And subsequently this wonderful child laid down his (pusche) life for the sheep. This explains everything.

The last use of the word pursche is to indicate a state of mind, "Faint in your (pusche) minds (Heb. 12:3); and doing the will of God from the (pusche) heart (Eph. 6:6) and "Whatsoever ye do, do it (pusche) heartily as to the Lord and not to men" (Col. 3:23).

It should be known on the authority of 20 lexicographers consulted, that the words rendered "soul" in the Scriptures, mean the natural life of man and beast.

As there are no words in the Bible which mean what is popularly meant by the soul, it is not a Bible doctrine! It is positively traced to Socrates, Plato and other heathen philosophers. Scriptures say God only hath immorality, but offers it to all who will seek for it by a patient continuance in well doing (1 Tim. 6:16; Romans 2:7); and 1 Cor. 15:50 says it is this mortal body that puts on immortality at the resurrection.

Let those who teach otherwise, explain how the Bible teches the immortality of the soul without words which imply it!—A Tract for sale by The Restitution.

CHARACTER OF THE "LORD GODS"

Take history from the time the first page was written down to the present day and you will find that opposition to liberty in all forms originated with Rome, and the popes of the Roman Catholic church, the vicegerents of Christ, the Lord Gods on earth, and the kings of earth, heaven and hell, are the individuals who have contended from time immemorial that the people were not fit to read or think for themselves, and that it was their duty to prescribe for the people in order that they might live the right kind of lives. But what of the lives of the popes themselves?

We want to give you a few historical facts about these Most Holy Fathers and Lord Gods:

Under Pope John the First it was declared that "all mankind must believe whatever the church decides or sanctions," as the means of gaining the ascendency over the human race. Every other pope has adhered to the same unjust and inhuman declarations with insistence unto murder and war.

The "most holy Catholic Christian emperor and pope, Constantine," drowned his wife, Fausta, in a bath of boiling water; beheaded his own son, Crispus, the same year he presided over the Council of Nice, 325; murdered the two husbands of his sister, Constantia; murdered his father-in-law, Maximian Herculius, and one of his nephews . . oy of twelve years.

Is that a fair sample of a "most holy Christian emperor and God?"

Pope Steven cut out the tongue of Bishop Theodorus and locked him in a dungeon to perish of hunger and thurst. Pope Paschal murdered two men in his palace The reign of Pope John XII was characterized by the most shocking immoralities, gambling, drunkenness, adulteries and incest, until his life was ended by the vengeance of a man whose wife he had seduced. Pope John XVI. had his eyes put out, his nose cut off, his tongue torn from his mouth, and he was sent through the streets on a donkey with his face toward its tail. Pope Victor III. declares that the life of Pope Benedict IX. was so shameful, so foul, so execrable that he shuddered to describe it. The people, unable to bear longer his adulteries, his homicides and abominations, rose against him and the papacy was bought by a man named John, who became Pope Gregory VI.

Pope Vigilus killed his secretary with a club, whipped his nephew to death, assisted in the assassination of Silverius, was a miser, a traitor and utterly without honor.

Pope Stephen, who succeeded Formosus, unearthed his body from the grave, placed the bloated corpse in its pontifical robes and ornaments on a chair, and, after the manner of a trial, asked the dead body many questions, declared the ordination and acts of Formosus invalid, as he had held and usurped the office of Pope John, then strippel the corpse, cut off the head, mutilated the nude form and cast it into the Tiber. But vengeance soon overtook Stephen. He was chained in a dungeon and strangled to death.

Pope Urban put seven of his cardinals, whom he suspected of a conspiracy against him, to the rack to extort confessions from them. The tortures they endured were beyond description, but no guilt was acknowledged. Yet he put five of them into sacks and cast them into the sea. Two of them were beheaded with an axe, and their bodies rendered into ashes, and kept in a bag to terrify others. He slew Aquilla, and threatened to excommunicate anyone who should consign his body to the grave.—The Menance.

ISAIAH 9:6

These words of wonderful enlightenment were uttered by the old prophet Isaiah at the time when Israel was in her darkest stage. When this blessed promise did come to pass the people who walked in darkness saw the great light, and they who dwelt in the land of the shadow of death, upon them the light shined. In this prophecy the child referred to is Christ, God's only Son, whose ministry began at the Jordan and culminated at Calvary. Upon his shoulders will fall the government of the earth during the millennial age. He shall have all authority and honor. In the eyes of all, including those who rejected him, his name shall be called "Wonderful," the most wonderful of all the heavenly Father's family. He shall be called counsellor, a guide, teacher. He shall also be called "the Mighty God," the ruler. "Arise, O God, judge of the earth." "Thy throne, O God, is forever and forever." "Able to save unto the uttermost all who come unto the Father through him." "Everlasting Father" will be another name given him. He gives everlasting life. Last but not least will be be heralded throughout the earth as the "Prince of Peace," the prince who establishes sure and lasting peace.

Through this blessed promise of Isaiah we can see a hope of deliverance; deliverance from a dark and corrupt world. The first faint ray of this deliverance is found in Gen. 3:15: "It (the seed of the woman) shall bruise thy head." Under the Abrahamic covenant appear more views of the hope of deliverance. "In thee and thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 12: 1-2). "Blindness in part is happened to Israel ... ...and so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, there shall come out of Zion the deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob" (Rom. 11:25-26).

Christ, who came as the great hope of deliverance, gave himself for us, as a ransom, that we might obtain deliverance from sin. He suffered for us, shed his blood for the remission of our sins, and bowed his head in sweet humility upon the cross of Calvary, in the face of the world. He came purposely to give himself as a ransom, and he is the propitiation for our sins, and for the sins of the world. His sacrifice was not by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood. "He poured out his soul unto death and bore the sin of many" (Isa. 53:12). Having done all in his power for the saving of his people, and seeing plainly their continuing gross darkness he rose above it, mounted the throne of glory and is now sitting beside his God.

Now, beloved, with our shepherd gone, are we like so many sheep gone astray. But our dear Redeemer says: "I know my sheep and they shall hear my voice." Oh, beloved, let us listen that we may not miss the call, but let us have the pleasure of hearing the words: "Ye were as sheep going astray, but are now returned unto the shepherd." Christ says "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Fathrer's good pleasure to give you the kingdom" (Luke 12:32).

Let us be faithful unto death and receive a crown of life. Let us also suffer with him, for if we do we shall also reign with him. Christ says: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne." What a glorious privilege that will be when he says: "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (Matt. 25:31-34). Then shall we sit upon the throne of which Isaiah of old caught a mere glimpse through the telescope of time. We will then, if faithful, sound abroad his fame, his honor and his glory, as Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the everlasting Father and the Prince of Peace. That will be the dawn of the eternal day. Though weeping may endure for the night, joy cometh in the morning. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Then shall the sun rise to set nor more, for "It shall come to pass in that day that the light shall not be clear, nor dark, but it shall be one day, which shall be known to the Lord, not day, nor night; but it shall come to pass that at evening time it shall be light. And it shall be in that day that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem. And the Lord shall be king over all the earth; in that day shall there be one Lord and his name one" (Zach. 14:6-9).

THE BOOK OF JOB

W. S. Bruce, D. D., Banff.

The story is well known. Job is a man of wealth and the father of a fine family of sons and daughters. He was to the ancient world what the great landowner is to our time. When the curtain is drawn, we see satan maligning the good man to his maker. Job only pretends to be righteous, says the arch-slanderer; but he does not serve God for nought. "Put forth thy hand and touch him, and he will curse thee to thy face."

Permission is given, and disasters hurl themselves on the patriarch. Cattle, servants and then children—all are overwhelmed in ruin. But the brave man does not sin with his lips. His response is grand: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

Again the curtain rises. Satan is now in the seat of the scorner. "Only touch his bone and his flesh, and he will curse thee to thy face." God permits the new testing. The poor sufferer is covered with a loathsome disease. But he stands the test. To his faithless wife he replies: "Shall we not receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?"

The scene changes: another trial comes. Job is seated with three friends at his table. In Oriental fashion they come to comfort him by the silent grip of the hand. After long silence come the dialogues which constitute the body of the poem, and which are as full of beautiful sentiments as they are of difficulties and obscurities.

The three friends remonstrate with Job, each in his own way. Eliphaz counsels his acceptance of the chastening. Bildad has some stinging words to say; he is sure the good succeed and only the wicked suffer. Zophar is less kind in his tone than either of the other two; the patriarch retaliates: "Ye are physicians of no value," and then he adds in one of the supreme sayings of Scripture: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

The curtain falls, and then rises on a second series of dialogues by the same friends, Job retorting, and at times speaking under deep resentment. Through it all, the author of the poem is skillful to make his purpose clear, and never loses the thread of the argument. To bring it to a point a new speaker is in chap. 32 introduced, Elihu, the Buzite, and new light is cast on the meaning of the mystery. Suffering has an educative value. It opens the eye of foolish man to see many things in a truer light. "God is mighty and despiseth not any ..Who teacheth like him?"

Then out of the whirlwind God speaks to Job. "Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? Declare if thou hast understanding. The final arbiter has spoken, and all is well. Job feels the Almighty is his friend, and that in his hands he is safe. Behind all the forces of nature he sees that God is working, and he need not fear.

The problem is not solved; there is no answer. But what is even more astonishing, there is no question. The personal revelation of Jehovah has hushed Job's complaint.

The epilogue is in keeping with the poem. The author, with his dim knowledge of the future, still unrevealed in Christ, could not say that Job was carried into paradise. So he assures us that the good do not always suffer. The afflictions of the righteous are many, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all. Prosperity comes back to Job, for he is now its master and not its slave; and he is richer in soul than he is in sheep and oxen. The enigma is not solved, but it is brought nearer to solution. Job has "acquainted himself with God and is at peace." He has found the secret of all saintly lives.

EVOLUTION VERSUS THE FALL OF MAN

Is it possible to believe in Evolution and the fall of man?

According to the doctrine of evolution, man's history has been a continual progress, a steady ascent, and in its course he has already passed through three stages—the animal, the savage, the civilized man. And he is still advancing, and "we know not yet what we shall be," what heights the race shall by-and-by attain. The doctrine is thus a gospel of illimitable hope, but it seeks to involve disastrous consequences for Christian faith. It rules out the idea of a fall, and if there was no fall, there was no necessity for redemption. To my mind, however, this is an illegitimate conclusion, and it errs in (1) misconceiving the Scriptural doctrine of the fall, and (2) ignoring the limitations of the scientific interpretation of man's origin and history. Mere suggestions is all that is possible here.

1. The significant fact is that the Scriptures nowhere teach that God created man perfect. The primitive state was innocence, not perfection. The distinction is important, and the analogy of the individual and the race illustrates it. Childhood is the season of innocence, but not of perfection. The latter is the final stage, and it is attained through the discipline of life. It is the fruit of experience, the crown of conflict. And the race, too, had its childhood, its season of innocence; but that was only the initial stage. The long ordeal of history lay before it, and the purpose of the creator was that humanity should grow from generation to generation toward the perfection of full manhood. That growth, in scientific phrase, is the evolution of the race, and the fall was a departure from the purposed course, a frustration of the normal process.

2. Science has its obvious limitations. It takes cognisance simply of things as they are, and investigates their genesis and relations. Beyond this it cannot travel. The scriptures affirm that at the outset of the long evolution of humanity there befell a catastrophe which has affected all its subsequent course; and this affirmation science is not qualified to dispute. Just as the art-critic deals with Michelangelo's "David" as it is, irrespective of the mischance which befell the rough block of marble and frustrated the original design, so of the scriptural affirmation the man of science can only say: "Of that I know nothing. It is only things as they are that lie within my ken, and I cannot tell what may have preceded and determined them." The question is whether there is reason for the scriptural affirmation and it seems to me that there is.

(1) The presence of disorder and suffering in a universe so marvellously constructed. Science furnishes no explanation, but, according to theology, these are not defects in the cosmos, but dislocations due to the intrusion of an alien force. The will of God is the law of the universe, and it is because humanity has got out of line therewith that its history has been so disastrous.

(2) The testimony of our moral nature. On a merely scientific view "sin" is simply the necessary imperfection of an incomplete development. "One," says Marcus Aurelius, "who objects to the bad man sinning is like one who objects to the fig-tree bearing juice in its figs, infants crying, the horse neighing, and other necessary things." But then how is it that our imperfection awakens in us a sense of guilt, and the sight of a purity beyond our own is felt as a rebuke? "There is," says Erskine of Linlathen, "a deep melancholy in the highest order of natural beauty and a holiness. It seems to recall the original state of man, and to reproach him, and yet to compassionate him for having lost it." It is no condemnation of the doctrine of the fall that it involves a break in the evolutionary process. There are other breaks. There is, e.g., the presence of life on the earth, which after two centuries of scientific investigation remains confessedly an unpenetrated mystery. Life was not evolved; it was imparted from without, according to Harvey's maxim, omne vivum ex vivo. The truth is, as it seems to me, that, however true the theory of evolution may be as an interpretation of the normal mode of the genesis of things, it is an exaggeration to claim that it is all-sufficient and invariable. The entrance of life is one indubitable interruption of the process, and the hypothesis of another through the rebellion of man's will against the will of God is to my mind not.

THE LOAD AND THE KIT

Galatians 6 1-10

1. This passage must be divided into two; it should not be treated as a homogeneous paragraph. The first passage, which really begins at verse 25 of the preceding chapter, ends with verse 6. In it the apostle lays down the rules to which those who try to live according to the Spirit of Christ must conform. Verse 25 is a general exhortation verse 26 a warning against the anti-Christian spirit, and verses 1 to 6 give the actual positive rules. The second part—verses 7 to 10—has a different theme. It directs the reader's thoughts to God, sets forth the solemnity of his unerring judgment, and exhorts to unflagging zeal in good works, not only towards fellow-Christians, but towards all.

2. The teaching of the first of these two passages, rich and full as it is, despite its epigrammatic expression, may be summed up in the apparent paradox of verses 2 and 5: "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ for every man shall bear his own burden." This is not a real paradox, for the word "burden" does not mean the same in each case. The Greek original has not one word, but two. The first burden is baros—a heavy load. The second is phortion—a pack or kit, such as a soldier bears upon the march, his accoutrements and impedimenta. It is this second word that Christ uses to describe the burden which he lays upon his own disciples (Matt. 11 30): "My burden is light." It must also be noticed that the sentence, "Bear ye one another's burdens," means helping in the bearing of a burden, not taking it away altogether. "It signifies lending a hand to help by lifting heavy loads. This does not involve transference of the burden..... but Christian love must ever be careful to relieve each in turn when overtaxed by crushing loads."

3. What is the crushing load which we have to help one another to bear? There is only one crushing load known to the Gospel. The loads that most people feel so burdensome seem very light and unimportant to the apostolic believers—poverty, sickness, mockery, persecution. Jesus, indeed, taught that these things were rather grounds for rejoicing (Matt. 5 1-12). The thing that Paul himself had found to be an utterly insupportable burden was sin and its guilt. It was this that drove him to Christ, and wrung from him the despairing cry: "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" (Rom. 7 24). And obviously it is just this that he is writing about here. "If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye that are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness." "Overtaken" here means "caught in the act." The point is that if one of the brethren be suddenly shamed before the whole church by the discovery of some wrong doing for which no excuse may be made, and as to which no denial is possible, he shall be dealt with lovingly, leniently. We are reminded at once of how Jesus acted toward someone thus caught "in the very act" (John 8 2-11).

We may see a profound truth here. This burden of guilt we are to share. There must be no trace of self righteousness. What flames up terribly in one is a warning as to what may lie smouldering in another. Sin is not only individual, it is social. It does not only concern the sinner; it concerns the race. All who are in touch with any wrongdoer are involved in his sin. The shame and guilt is reflected upon them. They must repent with him, confess with him, and bear his burden. And here some light is thrown upon the burden of sin that our Savior bore for us all, who "bore our sins in his own body on the tree."

NEWTON H. MARSHALL.

THE CARE OF THE SICK

There are persons who instinctively shrink from scenes of sickness and suffering. Nervous, sensitive, flat-chested, and small-waisted, they are easily wearied, easily shocked, easily disgusted, easily discouraged. They have little soul, and little sympathy, and are much more inclined to follow the priest and the Levite as they pass by on the other side, than to imitate the kind Samaritan in relieving the distress of the helpless.

But sorrow is the lot of man, and those who will not look upon the afflictions of others are very likely sooner or later to have sorrows enough of their own. Sickness comes to every home, death enters every door. And when those times of pain and sickness come, it is of the utmost importance that some one there possess steady nerves, a patient, sympathetic and tender heart, gentle hands, and the experience which only comes through acquaintance with sickness and practical training in sick-bed ministration.

Just here those people whom we have described utterly fail. Their children are sick and they know not what to do for them; their friends are ill and they send frantically for the doctor, sometimes calling needless aid in cases of trifling ailments, and at other times seeing their dearest friends taken from them and feeling that they are powerless to help or relieve them.

Had the time spent in trifling, in gossiping, and amusement, been devoted to sick-bed visitation and ministration; had they devoted their days and nights to the relief of the helpless and distressed; their day of sorrow would have found them thoroughly equipped for the work imposed upon them, and instead of weeping over little graves that hide the treasures of their hearts, they might be rejoicing in the joys of motherhood, with their children like olive plants around their tables.

Service done for God and humanity brings its own reward, and one of the chiefest of earthly rewards for ministration of the sick and relieving their distresses, is the acquirement of that knowledge that stands us in stead when the shadow falls in our own homes, and enables us to minister to those who are near and dear to us, as successfully as we have ministered to strangers who were in suffering and distress. This is the earthly blessing; there is one still greater. In the day when Christ shall come he shall say to some, "I was sick and in prison, and ye ministered unto me,... ... Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom."—The Christian.

"The square of life is a straight conscience—always use it."

"When the tree is fallen men rush to it with hatchets."

"The mill cannot grind with the water that is past."

One who is ambitious to get more than belongs to him is very likely to lose what is rightfully his. In stealing his brother's blessing, Jacob lost his home, and all its happy intimacies, for many years.

Love is the life and sunshine of life. We are so constituted that we cannot enjoy ourselves or anything else unless someone we love enjoys it with us.—Sir John Lubbock.

Think yourself miserable, and all the good things life can give will be unequal to making you anything else. Believe yourself happy, and all the disappointments and vexation to which the flesh is heir, cannot make you unhappy. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

No worker has a right to be content with his place in life unless he believes that he is doing the best work of which he is capable. A born shepherd makes a big mistake if he frets because he is not filling a bigger place. But it is the worst of all mistakes for one capable of great service to give his energy to work which another of far less capacity could do as well.

MY BROKEN HARP

S. A. Chaplin

"The heart harp is broken,
Its song-strain is still."

I cannot sing with grief oppress,
Harpstrings too broke I see;
Then tune your harps, ye seraphs blest
And sing a hymn for me.

Of one my grief-surlt soul would plaint,
The Lamb of Calvary,—
But music dies when heart is faint,
O angels sing for me.

From feet and hands, from head and heart
The crimson streams flow free
From nails, from thorns, from spear-shaped dart,—
O chant this agony.

Attune the trembling chords you string
To sorrow's tensest key;
'Tis dying love you sing
If you shall sing for me.

"'Tis finished!" Hear that piercing cry
Come from the blood-stained tree;
As those he loved were standing by;
O plaint sad notes for me!

From eyes that watch the stone-closed tomb
The bitter torrents flow;
The Prince of life is in that gloom;
Sing solemn- softly- slow!

O wail that love without a bound,
Wail like the moaning sea;
My broken lute can give no sound,
O sing that love for me.

But O!—He's risen from the dead,
You now his glories view,
With golden crowns upon his head,
Sing peans now his due.

When 'cross the desert's blistering sands
Through gates of pearl I go
To join your choirs, celestial bands,
I'll have my harp I know.

When o'er the city's gold-paved street
I walk from death made free,
'Twill be with glory sandled feet
Then you will sing with me.

Then I will sing my sufferings o'er,
My harp new-stringed shall be;
Then, seraphs, on that blissful shore
I'll join your melody.

It is a difficult think to talk aright; so much so that "if any man offend not in word the same is a perfect man; and it is said to be easier to tame every species of animals—birds, fishes and even serpents—than to tame the tongue.—Kirk.

PRAYER

Our Father, we bless thee for all thy mercies in the past. We trust that we are gathered together in thy faith and fear, and not without the presence of thy Holy Spirit. May we each come in the name of Jesus Christ, and so find that he is in the midst of us. Breathe holy desires and loving thoughts into all our hearts and minds. Help us in each act of worship, enlighten us as to the knowledge of thy holy will and revealed truth. Be with us when we try to meditate upon what thou hast shown in thy word. Hear us, we beseech thee, and in thy mercy be near us, and bless us, for our Savior Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

NO OTHER WAY

S. Roxana Wince

There he hung on the cross; he who was to redeem Israel and to be their glory; to be a horn of salvation for them in the house of David, to save them from their enemies and from the hand of all them that hated them. To perform the mercy promised to the fathers and to remember the holy covenant. The oath which the Lord God swore to Abraham and to be a light to lighten the nations.

Can all this be accomplished now, when his enemies have seemingly conquered? Is there any hope for poor Judah or for their brethren of the scattered tribes? Any hope for the world at large that they, too, through the saving of these children of Abraham, may be nationally and individually blessed? It does not look so. But Jesus is not disturbed. He calmly commits his mother to the care of the beloved disciple who had been wont to lean on his breast. And when the taunting words, "He saved others, let him save himself if he be the Christ, the chosen of God;" "He trusted in God, let him deliver him now, if he will have him;" "Let Christ, the king of Israel, descend now from the cross that we may see and believe," were flung at him by the passersby, the soldiers and the dastardly scribes and chief-priests, he made no response. He knew that the only way to prove his Messiahship and his right to the throne of Israel was to stay where he was. "As a lamb, led to the slaughter, and as a sheep dumb before her shearers, he opened not his mouth." God would deliver, would save, would prove him to be his chosen, but the demonstration would come in other ways.

The nails must still hold his hands and his feet. He cannot come down. He would not if he could, not even to answer the blasphemous challenge of these mockers. He cannot because he has himself elected and been elected of God to make atonement for the sins of the world. He knows that the life of man is in the blood, and that sin has poisened the blood and brought decay and death upon the race, and that this being so, only the blood of a sinless victim can cleanse the life-giving currents, because only through such an one, on conditions of faith and obedience, has God promised to wash the poison away.

He cannot come down, not even could he thus prove his Messiahship and force belief upon the taunting crowd. "His hour has come." "The fulness of the times," has been reached. The lines of chronology that point to his "cutting off" all converge here. There can be no delay. The words of the prophets cannot be falsified. All must be fulfilled to the very jot and title." Whether these men believe or not, he must die and die on time. Not else can Israel be redeemed and salvation reach to the ends of the earth.

Not else can a people be taken out of the nations for his name to rule with him for the endless ages. Not else can the dead be raised and the kingdom come. Not else can God's will be done on earth as it is done in heaven, sin and death come to an end, and the nation of Israel be established again in her own land under a government that will be as enduring as the ordinances of the heavens.

For if the "set time" goes by, what trust would men have in him or in the words of the prophets? The veracity of his Father is at stake; if he die not on time he is not the Messiah, nor the Son of God as proclaimed at his baptism and by the miracles he was able to perform, and no other Savior can be looked for.

No other way. At noon darkness overspreads the land. There is no eclipse for the moon is at her full. God is speaking. Amos 8:9 is being fulfilled, yet frightful and unaccountable as it is and portentous of "the bitter day" when "the land shall tremble and everyone mourn that dwell therein," and "be cast out and drowned as by the flood of Egypt." The mockery goes on. In the gloom Jesus momentarily loses the hitherto felt sense of God's presence and cries out in surprise, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" But his trust is not shaken; God is still his God. It is only the "why" of this bitterest part of the cup that he does not understand. It is a part of the wages of sin that he, the sinless one, must drink. God hides his face from sinners. They are forsaken and they know "why." They cannot utter the cry of Jesus in their dying hour, for his "is the cry of conscious innocence." They cannot say "My Father," for they have not made him such, and there can be no hope in their death, nothing to cling to, no house of character built on the rock to vindicate them in the court of heaven.

Jesus was left of the Father to die, but he could stand "on his unsullied allegiance to heaven," sure the light would return.

The cry was made at the ninth hour, the hour of the evening sacrifice; and David assures us in Psalm 22:21, 24, that God did hear this cry of his afflicted Son. And so he did for another cry follows, and this time it is the shout of a VICTOR: A loud, exultant shout, that says, "It is finished! Father into thy hands I commend my spirit!" and he bows his head and dies.

The supernatural darkness had continued up to this time, and now "the veil of the temple is rent in twain from the top to the bottom, the earth quakes, and the rocks are rent. The Father's will has been done. The prepared body has been offered. God has had no pleasure in sacrifice and offering and burnt offerings and offering for sin, and the rent veil shows that these are to be taken away; that the Sinaitic Covenant is to be superseded by a second covenant, established on better promises.

Oh what reason for that dying shout, "It is finished!" The way—the new and living way into the holiest is open now! It has been consecrated by the blood of Jesus! With the law of the new covenant written on our hearts and minds, and our sins remitted there is no need for any farther offering, and we can have boldness to enter into that holiest of places in full assurance that we will be accepted. The testament is of force now, for the testator has died. "For where a testament is there must of necessity be the death of the testator." In no other way can the promised inheritance of eternal life and land become theirs who were under the first testament, or ours who are under the new.

No other way! Other men die and their sons and their daughters take the inheritance according to the terms of the will, but death comes to them as the natural sequence of sin. But in the case of Jesus it was different: his death must take the form of a sacrifice; he must make an offering of himself, must take the place of the passover lamb and become our passover; the slain victim, that, having been laid on the altar, constitutes him a priest forever after the order of Melchesidek, able to put away sin and to perfect forever them that are sanctified.

The disciples thank that all is over. They have not taken in the meaning of that shout of triumph. "It is finished!" Do not see how God is glorifying his Son, even in his death. Jesus had not come down from the cross to convert the mockers, but he has already made converts of the centurian and others. He has been lifted up, and the beginning of the prophesied drawing of all men unto him has began. And other demonstrations of his Messiahship are to follow. The graves of many of his saints had been opened by the earthquake, but they had not yet arisen, and did not rise until after Jesus awakened and called them forth by his mighty power. They were "the wave-sheaf" "the first fruits of the great harvest that Jesus is to reap through his sufferings and death. They were not raised to die again, as was Lazarus and the son of the widow of Nain, but came forth to immortal life, to become witnesses in Jerusalem to the resurrection of Jesus and to his power to raise the dead. They were clouds about him when he ascended to heaven, and will be clouds about him when he returns.

Jesus has been declared to be the Son of God with power, by his resurrection from the dead. Thus was he glorified, his power being shown by the rising up of that sleeping host in answer to his call.

Death could not hold him because it had no claim on a sinless being. He tasted death because it was the only way to rescue man, and to destroy death and him that hath the power of death, that is the devil.

"Declared to be the Son of God with power;" first of all to those very scribes and pharisees who had set a watch over his tomb, and by the very soldiers who had composed the watch. What can they make of the earthquakes, the darkness, the stone rolled away, of the shining angel, of the opened graves and the risen dead? Nothing. They will not even now believe, but try to conceal the fact of the resurrection by a lie.

They have chosen. They will have no king but Caesar, and God has allowed Caesar to be the king of the Jews unto this day, cruel and murderous as his kingship has been.

Nor would the disciples believe though told so often that Jesus must suffer and rise from the dead the third day. They only mourned and wept, and finally—went a fishing! The women assured them that they had actually seen their Lord, that the tomb was empty, the grave clothes there and a mighty angel within. They would not believe till they had seen for themselves; and even then, some doubted. But facts are stubborn things. The nail prints and the sword thrust were there, and Jesus could recount all that had happened in their journeyings together. He could expound all that the scriptures had said concerning him, that "Thus was it written and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day," and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem, and they being the witnesses of these things must be the very ones who were to testify as to what they had seen and heard.

They ate and drank with him after he rose from the dead and believed at last. Many infallible proofs being given them during the forty days that elapsed between his resurrection and ascension. But he did not promise them an easy road.

The only way to the kingdom is the royal one of the cross.

He had suffered and they must suffer. They must consider him who had endured such contradiction of sinners, lest they be weary and faint in their minds, for they will be hated of all men for his name's sake. Their names will be cast out as evil; the loss of all things will come as the result of confessing him.

They will be betrayed into the hands of sinners, just as he was betrayed; will be thrown into dungeons, be tortured, be mocked and spit on and put to death. But as there was no other way for him to attain to the glory of the resurrection state, so there is no other way for them. "The blood of the martyrs is to be the seed of the church."

"Flung on the heedless winds,
Or on the water's cast.
The martyr's ashes watched
Shall gathered be at last;
And from their scattered dust,
Around us and abroad,
Shall spring a plenteous seed
Of witnesses for God."

In making an offering of himself on the cross, Jesus became a high priest after the order of Melchesidek, opening the way for us by his mediatorship into the holy presence of God. And we too, must make an offering of ourselves for his service if we would become priests unto God and reign on the earth. Not yet is the road we are called to travel quite so perilous as to life and property as was that the early Christians were obliged to walk. But its perils are just as many and as real, and perhaps more dangerous because unseen and unrealized. The devil is not asleep. If he cannot destroy the Christian by sword and by flame, he will allure him away from God by entangling him in the net of pleasure, undermining the foundations of his faith, or by leading him to bow to the gods of Rome and of heathendom.

To stand for God now requires just as much courage as it did in the days of old. And it will require more as the days go on. We too may be called upon to recant or to die for Jesus' sake. Already our friends caution us to hush our voices to whispers when passing along the streets, if we would talk about Rome. So great has the fear of her become. And well may they be afraid for whoever dares speak out does so at the peril of his life. Many a good man mysteriously disappears in these days, and is never heard of again. Rome still has her dungeons, her bullets and her knives. If she cannot stifle the voice, or force the man to do her bidding, she will kill, as she recently tried to kill the noted lecturer and protester, Jeremiah J. Crowley, in Oelwein, Iowa, and another well known lecturer in Pittsburgh, Pa. Yet we must protest against this wicked power, that is making our people a race of criminals, drunkards and degenerates, though we die, for our protesting.

The Pope of Rome is the antichrist, and all that dwell on the earth, whose names are not written in the Lamb's book of life, have worshipped him—even Queen Victoria and our Presidents bowing the knee by sending him presents and ambassadors and by submitting to his will. The Roman Catholic Church in its organization is an exact image of the beast or of pagan Rome. If we worship that image we will be compelled to drink of the wine of the wrath of God.

Let us arm ourselves to suffer. There is no other way. If we must go to the stake, there is life beyond. After the cross the crown; victory even in death, we shall be saved, Israel will be redeemed, Judah be freed from the yoke of Caesar, and all nations be blessed despite of Rome.

Jesus is coming. Be faithful unto death.

A SERVICE OF LOVE

2 Cor. 5:14

I ask your earnest and prayerful attention for a short time to the words of the spirit in the second epistle of Paul to the Corinthians, 5th chapter and 14th verse: "For the love of Christ constraineth us." This practically teaches us that love is the motive power of the gospel. And I trust that most of us present realize more or less that love was the bait that enticed us into the gospel net. The principle that like begets like, holds in this case also. Love begets love, and hatred begets hatred, and so of other traits. It is evident from this and preceding chapters that adversaries of Paul had reproached him for his fervor and zeal, and had called him a fanatic or madman. But he tells them in this connection that the conduct which makes him appear to them as beside himself, was for the good of the church. Listen to him at the 10th verse: "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad. Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men, but we are made manifest unto God; and I trust also are made manifest in your con-sciences." Strange, but true, these people after being called out of darkness into God's marvelous light by the glorious gospel of the grace of God by the apostle, and profess to have found pardon and peace and reconciliation and adoption, turned against the faithful and earnest messenger sent to them by God, and thought evil of him, and misconstrued what he did, and the manner of his doing it. What a sad change had come over them since they accepted the message he delivered to them from God with hearts swelling with gratitude and love, and fairly hung upon his lips. Ah, a sad change, indeed. The apostle had not changed; he was still the same faithful Paul. The truths he taught were as divine as ever, but their appetite had been vitiated. We sometimes hear it said that when a hungry person is offered food he never enquires who cooked it. Poor Paul, those who should have testified of the favor of God received through his instrumentality, had turned against him. The apostle proceeds to say: "For we commend not ourselves again unto you, but give you occasion to glory on our behalf, that ye may have somewhat to answer them which glory in appearance, and not in heart. For whether we be beside ourselves, it is to God; or whether we be calm and deliberate, it is for your cause." Now follows the spring of all apostolic motives and actions: "For the love of Christ constraineth us." As if he had said: "We vary our methods to meet varied conditions, but the glory of God and of Christ is always the chief end in view, and next to that is the everlasting benefit of the church, it is your cause, on your behalf." The love of Christ constrained them to act thus. Here follows the reason why the love of Christ constrains: "Because we thus judge that if one died in behalf of all, then were all dead." Under sentence of death, and in the sight of God virtually dead. "And that he died, he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again on their behalf, so that we from this time, respect no one on account of flesh; and even if we esteemed Christ on account of flesh, yet now we no longer thus regard him." But for the assurance of the Lord himself that Paul was his chosen vessel to bear his name before the Gentiles, and Kings, and the children of Israel—yes it would almost make us tremble to hear Paul talk thus about Jesus— that they no longer esteemed Jesus on account of flesh, but for this assurance of the Lord Jesus himself. We being present would feel like gently laying our hand upon his shoulder and saying: "Brother Paul, be careful or you may go a little too for in that direction." Ah, but Brother Paul was grandly equipped for his mission. He knew how far in that direction he could go. He could go, and did go the whole length. His statement is absolute and unlimited: "So we from this time respect no one on account of flesh;" even Christ being not excepted. But Paul, we would like a little more light on this subject. If it be not considered as prying into things belonging only to God. Paul is only too happy to explain. He anticipated this question and prepared his answer on the spot, and put it on record for us before he finished his sentence. Yes, the reason why is given in the same sentence. It begins with the preposition "for;" "If we esteemed Christ on account of flesh, yet now we no longer thus regard him, for if any man be in Christ he is a new creation; the old things have passed away, behold they have become new; but all things are from that God who has reconciled us to himself through Jesus Christ, and has given to us the ministry of reconciliation, namely that God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself, not counting to them their offences; and has deposited with us the word of the reconciliation." Doubtless this statement regarding the flesh of Jesus and others will bring to mind the statement of the Lord himself regarding flesh, in John 6:63: "The spirit is that which makes alive, the flesh profits nothing, the words which I have spoken to you are spirit and are life." They were the words of eternal life; the words which must be believed and obeyed in order to secure eternal life. The flesh may be very good in its way, but there is no eternal life in it, be it ever so good. Does this view of the matter help you to realize what the significance of Christ's obedience unto death means? Does it bring close home to you the fact that he was tried in all points like as we are, yet without sin? Does it constrain you to love him more when you think what the tremendous result of sin on his part would have been? Does it draw you up close to the foot of his cross when you remember that the world's redemption hung upon obedient flesh, disciplined flesh, tried flesh, in the very crisis of the world's destiny? And when you realize that it was he who was made in all things like unto his brethren, that was left alone at the trying hour and brought forth the cry "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" What if when left alone, and reviled he reviled again? Would the world have had a redeemer today? What if he had not committed himself to him who judgeth righteously? What if he had taken matters out of the Father's hands and in the agonies of death, tried to avenge himself? Would the world of mankind have a redeemer today?

But I think the answer of Paul why we, as the church of God or household of faith, should not know any man after the flesh, should occupy our attention a moment longer. It says: "If any man be in Christ Jesus, he is a new creature, old things are passed away, behold all things are become new." This is why we should not know any man after the flesh. But what does it mean, to know no man after the flesh? I understand to know any one according to the flesh is to know him merely according to his human individuality, to know him as men know him and judge him by what he is, and does in the flehh, not by what he is according to the spirit, as a Christian as a new creature. Jesus lived and suffered in the flesh; but he was declared to be the Son of God with power. The power of an endless life took possession of him so that he now lives by God; he is the Lord, the spirit, the fulness of the Godhead bodily dwelleth in him, he is the overcomer, the Prince of Life, the only name under heaven by which men can be saved; the name which is above every name, and to which every knee shall bow.

The other part demanding attention is this: "If any man be in Christ Jesus, he is a new creature." Physically this is not yet a fact, but morally it is a fact. The renewing of the mind is preparitory to the physical transformation to take place when Jesus comes; and this moral body is changed in a moment to an immortal body, made like Christ's glorious body. In Christ, then, the moral transformation has taken place, and the legal status of such an one is that of a joint heir with Christ--an heir of God. To secure the inheritance promised to come into possession of it, involves faithfulness to the end of mortal existence, or to the coming of him who is heir of all things, he through whom we inherit, by reason of our relationship to him.

And here, brethren and sisters, the question crowds upon our notice: Are we at this moment new creatures, or old? That means: Have old things passed away? Have all things become new? These are questions that involve eternal things. I have no doubt but we all agree that the love of Christ was the power that God in the gospel of his Son employed to draw us to himself at first; but perhaps that took place, from one to more than forty years ago. How is it today? Has it lost any of its constraining power over us? I remember reading of Dr. Doddridge entering a condemned prisoner's cell with a reprieve or pardon that he had obtained for him. The poor man fell down at the doctor's feet and said: "I will be yours sir! Wherever you go, I am yours. Sir, every drop of my blood thanks you for you have had mercy upon every drop of it." Every one of us who have named the name of Christ should know something of a similar experience; something of the blessedness of him whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered; the blessedness of the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin (Rom. 4: 7, 8). In view of the vastness of the love of Christ, in view of the emminence of the times, and all the vast privileges enjoyed by the adopted children of God, in this life, and the exceeding riches of God's grace stored up in Christ, and to be disbursed in the ages to come, we can only be faithful to ourselves to say nothing of other considerations—Godward and Christward, by examining ourselves to see this very hour whether the love of Christ is gaining more and more power over us, and enabling us to bring thoughts and actions into more complete subjection, or whether it's benign influence is growing less and less. I know of only one divine way to test this matter. Jesus says: "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you" (John 15:14). Before we can keep his commandments we must know them. And in order to know them to any purpose, we must remember them. The fearful importance of this matter is seen by consulting 1 John 2:14. This teaches precisely the same as the preceding passage: "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar." One of these commandments is: "Bless them which presecute you, bless and curse not" another says: "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place to wrath," why not? First, because it is forbidden. Second, because it is written: "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." If we try to avenge ourselves, we assume God's prerogative in the first place, and in the second show that we cannot or do not trust him to do as he assures us that he will do.

Again, Jesus says his sheep hear his voice and he knows them, and they follow him. Is that so? Do his sheep follow him? Do we follow him? If not, are we his sheep? If not, what are we?

In 1 Peter 2:19 we read that it is "Thankworthy if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering, wrongfully, ... and if when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently this is acceptable with God." How so, beloved Peter? Hear his answer: "For even hereunto were ye called." Called to suffer for doing well and to take it patiently because this is well pleasing and because even Christ suffered on your behalf, leaving you a copy, so that you may follow in his footsteps who committed no sin, neither was deceit found in his mouth, who being reviled did not revile in return, suffering, he did not threaten, but delivered himself up to him who judges righteously. Brethren this is a flesh crushing example! Could we but reach this one point. Just turn all such things over to him whose prerogative it is to deal with such things, and who only can judge righteously, and who will assuredly judge righteously, and promises to avenge all wrongs, we would lose the heaviest of our trials, and make rapid progress upward and onward in the divine life. These are but specimens of a hundred other commandments that we should not fail to acquaint ourselves with, with a view to obeying. And need I say it is a question of life or death. To neglect them is to despise them, and the word went forth ages ago that despisers of the word shall be destroyed.

There is one thing certain, that if when the last sands of Gentile times are running out, the constraining power of Christ's love is waning, it tells a sad tale of neglected prayer and watchfulness, it shows that our visits to Gethsemane and Calvary where all the love of God and of Christ seems to concentrate, have been few and far between. One moment's reflection should convince us that the incentive to love has not diminished one iota; nay, rather it increases more and more as the day approaches; and our debt of love and gratitude is ever growing, and it becomes us to render to God the most affectionate obedience and unceasing praise for the manifestations of his infinite love. Oh, if unhappily any of us are sleeping on the edge of a volcano that may engulf us at any moment, may we wake to righteousness and sin not. May we revive the times that remain before it be too late, and we have to take up the woeful lament: "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." God help us all to escape this fearful storm, and share the great salvation so graciously offered. Amen. M. JOBLIN.

OHIO CONFERENCE REPORT

The Ohio Conference of the Church of God met at the fair grounds at Springfield, Ohio, Aug. 6 to 10. Those that have been permitted to attend the conference at Springfield this or former years, are aware that this is a very suitable place to meet. The weather was very fine, making camp life, as it were, more endurable for those unused to it then when we have met later in the month.

We wish to say, for the benefit of those not having had the privilege of meeting with us in person but only in thought, that the fair grounds is located southwest from the center of town, probably about one or one and a quarter miles. The meals were served in the dining hall, and to say the least, were very good, showing those that had this part to look after had been well qualified.

The sisters occupied the second story of the dining hall for sleeping quarters, while the brothers occupied what seemed to be the art hall, a very comfortable place. The meetings were held in another building.

Our program was not carried out as to speakers exactly as published, because of the absence of Bro. Anderson most of the time, owing to sickness in his family. We understand that the babe, as this was the sick one, seems to be on the road to recovery, and we sincerely hope and trust that we have been correctly informed. Brother Anderson and his wife have the entire sympathy of the Ohio Brotherhood, I feel safe in saying. However, we had the pleasure of again hearing him wield the sword of the spirit in no uncertain sound to the edification and encouragement of all present.

Brother Almus Adams of Nebraska, was again with us, and in his usual able and convincing way, spoke to us a number of times. We certainly enjoy hearing Brother Adams, and trust, should the Lord not come, we may have the pleasure of his company at future conferences. May God be with him and guide him in his work in spreading the good news of the kingdom.

Every one, both member and alien, seemed to very much appreciate the carefully prepared discourses of Brother Huggins. It seemed to me I had never before appreciated the masterly way he presents his subjct so much as at Springfield. Brother Huggins certainly should have the cooperation of the entire household of faith in that effort he is putting forth in spreading God's word, both at the desk and through The Restitution. At least don't hinder him. Probably I can more fully appreciate the effort necessary to edit a paper than some of the brethren, being associated with a daily newspaper on the business end, and I assure you, from what I know, it is no small task to take care of the editorial end. And on a religious paper it is all the more important that the editor exercise judgment in the selection of his matter. May God give him the wisdom of the spirit in his labor.

Last but not least, we were delighted to hear our new Brother Alldridge from Cleveland boldly stand up and proclaim the word. He favored us with several discourses, very scriptural and most ably delivered. We trust and pray that our new brother may remain steadfast and run with patience the race that is set before him. We believe he will have many trials, especially so as having been a leader in a body alien from the commonwealth of Israel and stranger to the covenents of promise. He will have much more to overcome than one who has been lead. May he show himself a workman that need not be ashamed, and be among the overcomers.

In short, all performed their part, however small, above reproach, making the meeting in Springfield a very pleasant gathering, and we trust the efforts there will be to the honor and glory of God, and result in strengthening the brethren both in unity and faith, and encourage them to more earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints and to shun error and those holding it.

The folowing officers were elected for the coming year: W. S. Tomlinson, Pres.; David Beck, Vice Pres.; W. C. Heacock, Sec.-Treas.; Henry Juergensen, Chairman; Chas. A. Goss and N. S. Westfall, Conference Committee.

Respectfully submitted,
W. C. HEACOCK, Sec.

OBITUARY

Sarah M. Patterson was born Aug. 10, 1846, at Sycamore, DeKalb county, Ill., and died at her late home in Clarksville, Iowa, June 29, 1913, aged 66 years, 10 months and 19 days.

In 1863 with her parents she came to Butler county of this state. On April 15, 1866, she was united in marriage with A. Seitz, and to this union were born five sons, four of them with the husband survive her. The sons are W. H. of Portland, Oregon and Fred, Forrest and Earle of Clarksville, Ia. A son Frankie proceeded her in death twenty-two years ago.

The funeral services were held from her late home on Tuesday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock, conducted by George Moyer and burial took place in beautiful Lynwood cemetery.

The subject of the above sketch was my beloved companion who has traveled life's uneven journey with me for nearly forty-seven years. We built a happy home and now when we most needed each others company we have to be parted and I am left to go the rest of the journey alone as all of my family have gone to make homes for themselves, the last son having married since his mother's death.

It is a great comfort to me that my children are all good to me and I can have a home with any of them but it isn't as it used to be. The light of the home has gone out never to be lighted again in this life, but thank God for the promise of meeting again when Jesus comes to raise the dead and change the living and give eternal life to his faithful ones.

Wife has been a faithful member of the church of God for over thirty-five years. Although she was sick a long time she bore her suffering with patience, often praying "Come Lord Jesus and come quickly." I'll not have many years to wait and if Jesus does not soon come I too will go down under the power of death to be laid by her side. I would prefer the former but am ready for the latter.

Your brother in hope,

A. SIETZ.

NOTE.—With the Reformation ends the dark chapter of deeper and deeper infamy on the part of the apostate church. With it came a pause in the creation of dogma and ritual, the power of the Pontiffs waned in many ways ,and the succeeding centuries have seen him depleted of all his earthly grandeur and reduced to a mere "false prophet." "The mother church" gave birth to her "harlot" daughters, and they have filled the unmeasured court of the Gentiles with their peculiar superstitions. There is a strong family likeness between them all, the mother and her daughters.

Many questions agitated the church from the earliest centuries, one of which, the infallibility of councils and of the Pope, was settled in the year 1870, when an ecumenical council proclaimed the infallibility of the Pope personally. Many doctrines and questions were discussed for centuries before they became incorporated in the ecclesiastical law by an act of council or a bull of the Pope. They were laws in one country years before they were introduced into others. The debates, controversies, and conflicts which disturbed the Greek and Latin sections of the church ran over hundreds of years, and were the cause of much evil and bitterness. The corruption of the clergy, their licentious conduct, their greed, their lust for power, continues in one unbroken line from the commencement of the departure from the truth as it is in Christ till the voice of public opinion grew too strong to go unheeded. The restraining power of "the earth" was many times and in many ways exercised on behalf of "the woman," and all unknown to the class of mankind which the Scripture designates "the earth."

It is necessary, sometimes, to refrain from questioning our friends, that we may not draw from them what we ought not to know, and especially that we may not tempt them to deceive us.

POWER OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

"But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me" (Acts 1:8).

These words, spoken by Christ before his ascension, were strikingly verified. When the Holy Spirit came upon the disciples they were endued with power from on high, and their characters were transformed. Those who had deserted their Lord in the Garden of Gethsemane were filled with a courage which was undaunted by peril and opposition. A strong confidence in their Master took possession of their hearts and swept away the last remnant of doubt and fear which his crucifixion had roused. Enthusiasm for him and his cause became the dominating note of their lives. Assured of his majesty and the triumph of his kingdom, they were filled with a supreme joy in believing, and an ardent devotion to their Lord.

No less noteworthy is the witness the disciples bore to Christ after they received the gift of the Holy Spirit. They began at once to testify of the peace and salvation which they had found in Christ. Beginning at Jerusalem, they sought to carry out his command to preach the Gospel to every creature.

The early Church is thus clearly distinguished by her spiritual power and by her steadfast witness. Power and witness, inspiration and service —these are always found together. There can be no effective work for Christ which does not spring from an indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and every quickening of the heart, every vision of higher things, issues forth in witness to the light and the knowledge which have been received. When the revelation of God's majesty and purity came to the prophet Isaiah, and his heart was cleansed, there sprang to his lips the words, "Here am I; send me." The cry of St. Paul after his conversion was, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Before our Savior began his public ministry the Holy Spirit descended upon him. A baptism of God's Spirit, an endowment with power from above precedes, and has its fruition in, service to God.

In the present age there is urgent need for faithful witness to Christ. Worldliness and materialism are leading the hearts of many away from God and irreligion and indifference to religious ordinances are found in every class of society. From heathen lands there comes a loud call to win those who are in darkness to Christ. If we are to be faithful to our responsibilities, the Holy Spirit must visit our hearts, and fill them with the strength and light without which there can be no true work for Christ. But God cannot enter hearts which are unprepared for His coming, and his Holy Spirit cannot dwell in souls which are closed against Him. The history of the early church shows clearly what are the conditions of receiving moral and spiritual power.

1. The Holy Spirit came to obedient hearts. Christ had told his disciples that they were not to depart from Jerusalem, but wait there for the promise of the Father. They were obedient, and therefore they were the recipients of God's gift, and were filled with a strength which was not their own. Did we too strive to do our duty and be faithful to the light imparted to us by Christ, God would not withhold the aid of his Spirit. With obedience comes power. "Light is sown for the righteous." Dean Stanley speaks of "the single eye and the pure conscience which are an indispensable condition of having the doors of our mind open, and the channel of communication kept free between us and the supreme fountain of all purity and of all goodness." But, alas! how many who profess Christ make no effort to follow him and keep themselves unspotted from the world. "Will the spirit come and dwell with the drunkard, with the swearer, with the liar, with the evil-speaker, with the deceitful, with the false-accuser, with the lover and thinker of evil? Surely Christ might as well dwell with satan, and light with darkness." When members of Christ's church are leading consecrated lives, whose purity, unselfishness, and self-sacrifice reflect the example of their Lord, then will there be manifest the fruits of the Spirit.

2. The Holy Spirit came to prayerful hearts. "These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication." The disciples were withdrawn from the world, earnestly beseeching God to enter their hearts. Waiting upon him in silence and in prayer, they were receptive to divine influences. If our lives are empty of divine grace and inspiration, the reason is often to be found in their unspirituality. The world is too much with us, and immersed in its business and pleasure our souls are insensible to higher things. All too seldom do we hold communion with God, and in his presence seek to realize the eternal significance of life and destiny. "While I was musing the fire burned." The devout soul, which seeks "the secret place of the Most High" for guidance and inspiration, and even in its busiest hours waits upon God and remembers him, will be refreshed and strengthened by divine grace and visited by his Spirit.

3. The Holy Spirit came to united hearts. "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place." The disciples were filled with power because they were one in Christ. The Church will fail in her effort to proclaim the name of Christ and overcome the selfishness and sins of men so long as many within her ranks are living on a low spiritual level of partisan contention and strife. But were all followers of Christ animated by a living faith and inspired by the same great hopes, nothing could stand aginst them. A church which is united in prayer and obedience will be full of the Spirit of God, endued with irresistible power, and a mighty witness unto God.—Selected.

WHAT IS THE GOSPEL

This question was asked by one in the Sunday school class. No one tried to answer it. After this I made appointments to speak, intending to show what the gospel is, but without much interest.

Now we read in the Bible that it is a good message, glad tidings; but we must know first what the good tidings are about before we can understand and believe them. Paul in Gal. 3:8 says God preached it to Abraham, and he says it is the promise of the blessing of all the nations through Abraham's seed, and he says in verse 16 that Christ is the seed. Matt. 4:23: "And Jesus went about in all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." Mark

1:14: "Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God." So from these testimonials we understand the good message or glad tidings is about the kingdom of God, and the blessing of all nations is to come through the kingdom of God. Jesus in Matt. 6:33 tells us to seek the kingdom first, and as he preached it first, we naturally ask, what is God's kingdom?

Now the only kingdom of God we read about in the Bible is the Kingdom of Israel, so this takes us to the promises made of God to Abraham. Gen. 12:1 shows us that to preach the gospel is to preach the promise made concerning the kingdom of Israel. Now God promised David's throne to Christ, which was the throne of Israel and throne of God's kingdom. Read Acts 15:16; 3:20 to end of chapter. Then we must conclude that the gospel is the promises God made to the fathers of the kingdom of Israel, and to David the king of that kingdom. This includes the Christ that was promised. Acts 15:16 says he will restore that throne. We conclude this will be God's kingdom on earth, which is the kingdom of Israel restored; and to this agree the word of Isaiah 9:6: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulders; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end. Upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom to establish, etc." There is no mistake if the Bible is the word of God, but what the kingdom of God is the kingdom of Israel restored. Believe this gospel and be saved; reject it and be lost (Mark. 16:15, 16).

S. C. LEHMAN.

A PRAYER WITHOUT A PETITION

Neh. 9:5-38

1. Strictly speaking, this is not a prayer without a petition. A very definite petition is not only implied in it, but actually expressed. This petition is that God, seeing the labor and sufferings of his people, will regard the sins of the past as atoned for, and grant the worshippers prosperity once more. That is a thought underlying the prayer as a whole, and coming to expression in ver. 32: "Let not all the travail seem little before thee" which is a modest way of saying: let it seem much! let it seem sufficient! For the Jews believed that when a certain punishment had been inflicted God would again be gracious (cf. Isaiah xl:2).

The substance of the prayer, however, is not petition but praise and confession. It recalls the history of the Jewish people, sets forth the glory and deeds of God, and humbly acknowledges their frequent and wicked rebellions against him. Their oft-repeated sins make the Jews almost ashamed to promise reformation, and his longsuffering makes them ashamed to ask for new mercies. But they prostrate themselves before Jehovah tacitly imploring forgiveness and reinstatement.

2. A large part of the life of prayer which it is the chief privilege of a Christian to enjoy is made up of prayer without petition. It is living in companionship with God. The ideal family life is a life of companionship. Parents and children share everything. They have no secrets from one another. They recount at meals everything that happens, even if very trivial, so that each may be transparent to the rest. So each year knits the family more and more closely into one, even though each member would be astonished to be told that this was so, the process being in the main unconscious. When a big sorrow or crisis of any sort, or a great joy comes, then all this sharing of little things tells, and in the light and stress of the unusual happening all feel supported and uplifted and strengthened by each other. So the life of prayer is a life in which the soul shares everything with God. It is not so much petition as participation.

A friend of mine, writing the other day about prayer, said she did not think she prayed properly. But she went on to say: "Lately it has dawned on me that I do perhaps pray, and have prayed all along, but in a limited rudimentary sort of way. It's like this: I don't believe I am ever not conscious of God, that you could ever catch me in a moment when a recall to the thought of God and of life and death, and the more serious things of life, was inappropriate. I don't think I am ever left alone when it doesn't feel to me, being alone with God there." Now that is not a "rudimentary" sort of prayer. It is prayer without petition most of the time. But it is a very high sort of prayer.

3. One of the fine marks of all real prayer, with petition or without, is humility. The passage which is our topic (and which is more a psalm or an anthem than a prayer, though it is full of prayer) is instinct with humility. It moves between two poles the praise and adoration of God, and the confession of sin. Elaborate as it is, long as it is, it is in perfect harmony with the prayer of the publican in the parable of Jesus (Luke 18:10-14), and in complete contrast with the prayer of the Pharisee. This last point is very instructive. For the Pharisees were that party among the Jews which represented, and was lineally descended from, the devout and humble reformers of the days of Ezra and Nehemiah. But they had allowed spiritual pride to take the place of humility, and so their prayers were abhorrent to God, and our Lord rebuked them. Now, what happens to a party or a nation may happen to an individual. Young Christians may begin with humility like that of Nehemiah and his friends, and yet by and by lapse into Phariseeism.

4. While much of the truest prayer does not take the form of petition, there is nevertheless always a petition implied or (as we say nowadays) present to our sub-consciousness. To be in the companionship of God inevitably involves reliance upon Him, dependence upon his forgiveness, and love and mercy. We cannot talk with God without crying "Help." We want him to rescue us, not only from our sins, but from what is merely trivial and unworthy. We need him to make us sincere alike with ourselves and with others, to burn up all cant and pretence, to correct our merely conventional Christianity. A good way to get into the spirit of this prayer, with its humility and its praise would be to go through one's personal history, noting all God's mercies and forgiveness on the one hand, and all one's sins and defections and failures on the other.

If I take care of my character, my reputation will take care of itself. -D. L. Moody.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), Who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 29); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "The things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

VOLUME 62. AKRON, O., SEPTEMBER 16, 1913 NUMBER 36

PRAYER

O Lord our God, open thou our eyes that we too may "see the things which are" and ever to be aware of thy presence in our humble lives of that great Lord who became dead and is "alive for evermore." We thank thee that we are not far from that enthroned love and life. We beseech thee that into our daily lives there may come the brightness of that vision which is no delusive sight of diseased eyes, but is the revelation of the eternal things at thy right hand. Grant, we pray thee, that all our days may be flushed with brightness and filled with peace and power, because we know that by our sides, and ready to help us, is the manifestation of thine own divine self in the person of that Lord who "died, yea! rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God," and likewise at the right hand of his children upon earth. Give us the joyous consciousness to go with us through all our days. May it sustain us in all difficulty, and calm us in all perplexity, and be a light for us in the darkness and our all in all. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

ASSURANCE

M. Joblin

Brethren and Sisters:

We are told in Acts 17:31 that by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead God has given assurance that he will, on the appointed day, rule the world in righteousness, by the one ordained to do it. We, therefore, have no room to doubt the execution of his purpose. And long before this, the spirit in Isaiah, speaking of the same grand event says: "Judgment shall dwell in the wilderness and righteousness remain in the fruitful field. And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever." This is a delightful picture of the world of mankind under the righteous rule of him who has been raised from the dead for that purpose.

But we at the present, not only have assurance furnished by the resurrection of Christ that God intends to do just what he has said in reference to the governing of the world righteously, in the future, but in Col. 2:2 we are told the riches of the full assurance we can enjoy by understanding exactly the secret of God the Father and of Christ, in which are stored all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. In Hebrews 10 we learn that it is our privilege to draw near to God in as full assurance of faith as if already possessing what is promised simply because he who promised what we believe is faithful. And when we turn to Hebrews 6:11 we find the idea of assurance beautifully rounded out. For we there learn that it is the privilege of every one of us by diligence, to have "full assurance of hope unto the end."

What is there in all the realm of human experience to compare with a humble, but a firm sense of present acceptance with God in Christ Jesus? It is so essentially bound up with our ideas of God, and our understanding of his word; it bears so directly on our daily religious life, whether held in sober cheerfulness or in ignorant presumption; it has so much to do with our happiness and usefulness, as well as our holiness, that we should all try to realize what this assurance really means. How do we regard it? With contempt or dislike, or with timidity, or with thankfulness? I find that those who dislike to hear one speak of full assurance, or perfect confidence as quite presumptious or venturesome, as if it were meddling with God's prerogatives; or say that forgiveness is not so cheaply or hastily granted; and that time is required to test the sincerity of repentance toward God. But that would imply only if God did not know our thoughts afar off and the spring of every action. But to this it may be replied, that it is not our notion of God's procedure that must guide us in this matter, but his own statement in his word. Our Lord when on earth, plainly stated the terms of pardon and adoption; and those who from the heart accept the conditions and obey them, have infallible proof of forgiveness and acceptance. Those who speak with diffidence, or timidity, or what may be called a softened kind of distrust, evidently do not know the blessedness of those whose iniquity is pardoned and whose sin is covered, either for lack of faith in God or are fearful because they know something of the deceitfulness of the human heart; they may not mean to dishonor God, but if we dwarf his perfection and try to make his readiness to pardon fit in with ours; if through ignorance or hardness we are slow to forgive others, does that make him like us? I think there is more danger of presumption in our doubting if he really means what he says, than there is of being too hasty to take God at his word.

I do not see how anyone can say with David "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want," in either of those unsettled states of mind. How thankful we should be for this blessed little. How it rests and refreshes our hearts when we think of him who died, and lives again for us, as our shepherd. The word itself seems to draw us towards him with cords of love. He is one who can save as well as condemn. There is a great deal wrapped up in the word "shepherd," for it implies protection and provision and tenderness and knowledge. A beautiful figure of what Christ is to us, if we are sheep of his pasture. The shepherd often protects his sheep at great risk and labor and fatigue. In winter in some countries he often has to dig them out of the snow, in summer he has to procure water for them or they would die, and in storms he leads them to sheltering hills. The wolf would destroy and scatter them if he did not risk his life in their defence. It is delightful to know that our Father in heaven employes such a word to let us know something of the offices and work of him to whom we are personally related and who tells us he laid down his life for his sheep. Isaiah beautifully brings out this idea when he says of Christ: "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd. He shall gather the lambs with his arm and carry them in his bosom and gently lead those that are with young." In the dangerous life of a shepherd, and where the shepherd and sheep are together for weeks without other living creatures, a great attachment springs up, and the sheep come to him with their daily food and safety and in their way look to him with dependence. This helps us in a measure to show what Christ is to his church. He knows his sheep every one, from the least to the greatest. Each has his own name; each his own place in the family of God. Says he: "I know my sheep;" but this is not all. He adds: "And am known of mine." Do you not see that there is no room to doubt him? Is there not something radically wrong when we do not trust him with all our hearts? Is it not our own fault if we have not the full assurance of hope? Beloved, we have come around the board bearing the emblems of his broken body and shed blood once more, and it behooves us each to examine one to see how matters stand. If we have full assurance of faith we have full assurance of hope. If this be not the case there is something the matter, and should at once be set right. He is soon coming again, and if we would meet him with joy then, we must so live that we can rejoice in hope now.

"BE STILL"

S. Roxana Wince

"Be still and know that I am God" (Psalms 46:10)

This at a time when the heathen rage and the kingdoms of earth are moved, when the waters of the ocean roar, and shake the mountains with their swellings.

The hearts of men may fail for fear and for looking after the things that are coming upon the earth, but we are not to fear "though the earth be removed and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea." We are to "be still," "to let fall," or "let go" of all trust in ourselves or in any human help; for says the psalmist: "The Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge." He is our strength, "a very present help in trouble." "He will be exalted among the heathen, he will be exalted in the earth." "He will magnify himself and sanctify himself, and will be known in the eyes of many nations. And they shall know that he is the Lord." "He will set his glory among the heathen, and all the heathen shall see his judgment that he has executed, and his hand that he has laid upon them. So the house of Israel shall know that he is the Lord their God from that day forward" (Ezekiel 38:23; 39:21, 22). This in and after the battle of Armageddon.

We remember the fearful ocean waves of a year ago; the destructive volcanic eruptions of recent years; the floods, the cyclones, but we remember too the comforting assurance that "There is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God the holy place of the tabernacle of the most high;" that "God is in the midst of her," and that he, being there she cannot be moved or, giving the exact wording, that "she shall not be moved," because "God shall help her and that right early." Remembering these things, we are still.

But the Hebrew word for "be still" is "rapha." It does not occur in any other passage save in this tenth verse of the forty-sixth psalm. Young's Concordance gives the meaning as being "to cause to fall," "to let go." And Jamieson, Faussett and Brown, as literally " Leave off to oppose me and vex my people." "I am over all for their safety." Isa. 2:11; Ephesians 1:22, making the words apply to the enemies of the Lord and of Israel, and it does look very much that way despite our lifelong application of them to ourselves. And yet how hard it is to give them up. It was so comforting to be hushed by the Father into quietness in such a time of fear.

For the psalm is a prophetic one. It reaches down to the last of the last days. We thought it applied to us now, all along the road of life, in whatever trouble we might be, but if that particular last battle is pointed out we "shall be," as Horatious Bonar says, "above the storm."

The words "be still" imply that the Lord himself will fight against the embattled hosts of Gog, just as Ezekiel says. He will "plead against them with the pestilence and with blood, and will vain upon him and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain and great hailstones, fire and brimstone." It will be as miraculous a defeat as was that of Pharaoh in the Red Sea, and of Sennacherib and his hosts. The pestilence will cause them to melt away, the overflowing rain will drown, the great hailstones will beat them to the ground, the lightning's flash will slay; they will be utterly helpless in the hands of God. No matter how strong the army, they cannot fight against him. And it will be the part the supernatural plays in this battle, that will cause "the many nations" and "the house of Israel to know that he is the Lord their God from that day forward."

Israel will do her part in the battle of Armageddon, for God "pleads" with Gog with the sword as well as with the supernatural forces of nature. And David must be talking to Israel when he says: "God is our refuge and strength," for there will be a volcanic eruption and the splitting open and moving of the Mount of Olives; but Israel is "not to fear though the mountains be moved into the midst of the sea." What sea? And why will its swelling cause the mountains to shake? What, if not the Dead Sea?

No peace congress will be needed there, for God, the Lord of hosts, will be with Israel and will make wars to cease unto the ends of the earth. He will break the bow and cut the spear in sunder, and burn the chariot in the fire." Russia will "be still" indeed when brought face to face with God. She will "leave off" in haste her opposition to him, and will vex his people no more.

And the shout of triumph of the 47th and 48th Psalms will follow the exaltation of God among the heathen and the subjection of the nations under the feet of Israel—The princes of the people gathered together, the shields of earth in their hands, Jesus enthroned, and the city of God established forever.

"Sing praises to God. Sing praises unto our King, sing praises!" Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh.

A DAY OF REST

I would like to say a few words in favor of a day of rest. Why do people go to extremes to prove a point in a discussion, especially questions of the Bible? If Jesus did not keep the Sabbath, how could he keep the law? Matthew tells us that one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled. Besides, Jesus said himself that he came to fulfill it. I believe he did what he came to do.

The Jews had so many traditions mixed up with their law, that only one like Jesus could pick out the real commands of God.

Only one text (there are many), where Jesus disagreed with the Jews as to keeping the law. In Mark 7 we read: "Then the Pharisees and Scribes asked him, Why walkest not thy disciples according to the traditions of the elders, but eat bread with unwashed hands?" What did Jesus say? Listen: "He answered and said unto them, Well hath Esias prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written, This people honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. For laying aside the commandments of God, ye hold the traditions of men, as the washing of pots and cups, and many other such like things ye do. And he said unto them, Full well ye reject the commandments of God that ye may keep your own traditions."

But whether Jesus kept the Sabbath or not is not the issue before us in this article. It is: Should we, as Christian people, keep a Sabbath? Should we have a rest day?

God knew that the people of the Old Testament times needed a day of rest, for man and beast; so he gave the seventh day Sabbath. It was given, not only for a rest day, but as commemoration of something—to commemorate Israel being brought up out of Egypt. They were told a good many times what it was given for, and they understood it, too.

After our Savior's resurrection the disciples believed the law had been fulfilled in Christ; as it says in Col. 2:14, it was nailed to his cross. It seems instead of keeping the old Jewish Sabbath, the seventh day, they instituted another day for a day of rest, or Sabbath day.

They certainly were in the habit of meeting on the first day of the week to break bread (Acts 20:7; 1st Cor. 16:2). It has been said that the Pope of Rome changed the Sabbath. Well, what of it? We believe the close followers of Christ took another day, knowing the Sabbath of the Jews was done away, and that day was chosen before there was a Pope.

They claim, too, that St. Peter was the first Pope, but that don't make it so. The Catholic Church claims many things that we do not believe.

Another reason is given for not keeping Sunday, namely, it was named after a heathen god. So were all the days of the week. Sunday was named after the sun; Monday after the moon; Tuesday after Tuiser, a German hero, and so on through the whole week.

But it is the first day of the week that we should observe as a rest day. Why? Because we believe the apostles worshiped on the first day. We believe Christ arose on that day. We believe the outpouring of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost occured on that day. We believe another reason why the disciples chose the first day of the week for a rest day was because they did not want Judaism mixed in with Christianity; to avoid this they chose another day for a Sabbath.

Now why should we not keep it as a Sabbath day? If we should take away our Sunday as rest day, what have we to give in its place? We are told in the Bible to obey the laws that be. We have a law that business cannot be done legally on Sunday. Did not the Lord in Matthew 16:19 give the apostles the right to change the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day? Think about this.

Submitted in love. M. ALMIRA BROOKS.

"YE ARE BOUGHT WITH A PRICE"

1 Cor. 6:20; 7:23

Paul, in using the pronoun "Ye," invariably referrs to the brethren of the one faith; and in telling them that they are bought with a price, he means the brethren of today as well as the ones of the first century.

Who is it that buys? It is God. "Therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit which are God's;" "Ye are not your own."

What was the price paid? The blood of God's only begotten Son. How was his blood shed? Upon the cross. There are but two classes of people in the world: the righteous and the wicked; the saved and the unsaved; the seed of Abraham and the nations. The righteous, the saved and the seed of Abraham are one class, and are all those that God has purchased with the blood of his Son, which is called his own blood in Acts 20:28. If we walk in the light our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ; and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin (1 John 1:3, 7). The followers of Christ are not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ (1 Pet. 1:19). Christ, by his own blood, obtained eternal redemption for us (Heb. 9:12). Give thanks unto the Father, who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son, in whom we have redemption through his blood (Col. 1:14; Eph. 1:7). For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; being justified freely by his grace through the redemption, that is in Christ Jesus (Rom. 3:24).

All that are bought are saved. How are they saved? He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved (Mark 16:16). He that endureth to the end shall be saved (Matt. 24:13). I am the door; by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved (John 10:9). Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved (Acts 2:21; Rom. 10:13). By grace are ye saved through faith (Eph. 2:8). Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved and thy house (Acts 16:31).

God's Son was sinless, hence did not pass under the sentence of death. Adam and all of his seed are under the sentence of death for they are all sinners. God created the earth to be inhabited by man, and chose the Jews for his people, and gave them laws to live by, and one law was a sacrifice of animals for their many sins. But he made a new covenant; and through his love for man, that he had made, he planned to save Gentiles as well as Jews. In order to do so, he made a greater sacrifice for man than had ever been made. He allowed his only begotten Son to die on the cross, and spill his blood at the foot of the cross, for a sacrifice for the sins of the people.

Does this sacrifice save all of Adam's race? No. Only those that call on the name of the Lord, believe in him, obey him, and are baptized. This is the process they must follow in order to have their names recorded in the book of life; and only those found written in the book of life are bought, or saved. "They sung a new song saying, Thou art worthy to take the scroll and to open its seals; because thou wast killed and didst redeem (us) to God, with thy blood, out of every tribe and tongue, and people, and nation; and thou didst make them to our God a royalty and a priesthood, and they shall reign on the earth" (Diaglott). Let us strive to be worthy of the price that has been paid for us.

PRACTICAL POINTS

Dear Brother Huggins:

I can still think much, but thought I had not strength to write, being so worked up by reading an article in last paper. I would like to give a few thoughts on article in The Restitution of July 29, that is in opposition to an open letter on saints or Christians voting in issue of June 17. The writer in favor of Christians voting says: "Few things have surprised me more than conclusions reached by writer of "An Open Letter" (paying no attention to how he reached those conclusions). I can say the same: few things surprise me more than to have a person take exceptions to the statements given with chapter and verse. It may be that I am too fast, not knowing that you claim to believe the Bible. I have reason to believe that you don't believe the Bible, for you speak of making it "hard to do wrong" by Christians voting. 2 Tim. 2:3-4: "Endure hardship as a good soldier of Jesus Christ" (not a soldier of the wicked world, and against your brother in Christ). Verse 4: "No man that wareth (the Christian warfare) entangleth himself with the affairs of this life." Paul surely surprises you as much as the writer of "Open Letter." Speaking of the world in 2 Cor. 6:17, he says: "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and I will receive you, and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons." All other things that we do or don't do, would not make as big a showing that we had come out from the world, as to take no part in politics. I have much plain scripture in mind, but will keep it back, as you would probably ignore it all, as you have all of the plain scripture that our sister gave.

You say you cannot see what right men or women have to life in our land (that come out from the world) who are empowered with the ballot, and neglect their civic duties, thus practically saying that a person ought to be killed for coming out, and being separate from the world. It would not be surprising to hear an infidel or atheist make such an awful statement. We know that ballots often end with bullets; and if you are shooting at your political father, mother, brother, sister, children or husband (not in Christ, for that man takes no part with the world) that as honestly as you, voted the other ticket, and if Christ (that we look for at any time) should come for his own, which would he take; you or your should-be-friend? Would it not be just and reasonable for him to say to both parties, "Ye would not come out from among them, as commanded, so now get your reward from the party that you have worked for?" So the ones that you can't see have any right to life, stand a good chance of coming out ahead, with eternal life in the near future, whether dead or alive; glorious hope! Does a politician have such hope?

I know very little about politics, but as you say so much about the good that woman have done by ballot, and as you include California, my home for the last 26 years, I say a few words on the other side. Fresno City has a population of 42,000, and came so near going dry before the women had a vote, that the saloon men were terribly worked up about losing their (illigitimate) business when the woman vote came in last April, but when the votes were counted they were gladly surprised but many others were sadly surprised, to find the largest majority for open saloons that had ever been poled since the question had been agitated. Have those men and women who voted wet, not neglecting their civic duties, as you claim, a better right to live in our land than the man or woman that has chosen to do as told in 2 Cor. 6:17, "To come out from among them (the world), and be ye separate." There are also other places between here and SanFrancisco that went dry, but now have open saloons, since women vote. I know a woman here that is a good templar; I have heard her give good prohibition lectures, and at the same time, very likely, her two boys were at some saloon "blowing in," as they called it, the money they had earned on the last job. We read in Prov. 16:25: "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man (or woman), but the ends thereof are the ways of death." So be sure from a Bible standpoint, that you are right, and don't do as the immortal soulist, try to prove your point as they do, without one scripture quotation (for you have none), against the sister that gives chapter and verse for what she writes.

Do you believe what Solomon says in Prov. 22:6; "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it?" I think I have a good reason by my own personal experience, as well as what is given by the wisdom that God gave, to believe that statement. It is truly wonderful, what it is possible for the woman, the good mother to do (not by voting). To illustrate: I inherited from both parents a very high temper, and father was a very bad sweuring man, but mother taught me so strictly against using rough words of any kind, that with my temper I never had to guard against swearing, thus proving to my mind, what is possible for a good mother to accomplish, who works in God's appointed way, instead of voting with the world, man's way. I will say here, that father learned the truth, and was one of the most earnest Christian men that I ever knew. He pulled off from the political world and did all in his power for King Jesus; and is it possible for you to believe that he had no right to life in our land, on account of his not staying popular with the world? Over fifty years ago, I well remember the first act (to speak of) on the awful liquor traffic, and in spite of man's work, the evil is many times worse than it was sixty years ago; and as shown above, still worse here in California than before woman voted. But if women had taken God's plan of bringing up their children in the way they should go, there would never have been a saloon in the land, and many of the other vices would be unknown; and the expenditure of money, blood and Christian principles would have been avoided. You can see that I believe it is possible for the woman to be the greatest source of righting the many wrongs, but not by being a politician; for that causes more neglect of the dear children, that will soon be men and women in form, if not in Christian principles. If I should give up the citizenship that I now hold, as you say, I cannot see that I would have any right to life in our land, for I have not enough intelligence to become a citizen in this state of things, and vote intelligently, so would have no right to life or hereafter. I shall not try to be a citizen of two countries at the same time, lest I should fail in both; so as in Eph. 2:19, I will try to be a fellow-citizen with the saints, and of the household of God. I stop, but not for lack of matter; have written more than I intended. Will say in conclusion, if my life has not been a total failure, and if I have done some little good in the world, mother deserves all the credit, but not by her vote. In love to all that love the truth, and knowing there will be a better state of affairs when King Jesus comes to reign, G. W. CALDER.

ENOCH'S WALK

Little does the Bible say about Enoch; but that little means a vast deal. It is said that he "walked with God." It does not say that he walked behind God, nor that he walked ahead of him; but he just walked with him. This, we take it, means that Enoch kept even step with God, side by side with him, going neither faster nor slower than God did. This gave him all the blessed advantages which it is possible for any human being to receive, in a companionship with God. It was thus that Enoch was constantly near God. He could not be any nearer. He was so near that he could not only hear God talk, but also every gentle whisper.

And Enoch was not obliged to raise his voice, in high tones to make God hear. In whispering speech he could make known his requests to God. What sweet and delicate communings they must have had! And God enjoyed them as well as Enoch. How we would like to know what they said to one another! Will Enoch tell us something about it when we come to take him by the hand in the gloryland? Perhaps, but in the meantime, let us remember, that if we want to know much of God, we must walk close by his side, and have our ears so sensitive that we shall hear every word that he says, and let him do the most of the talking. It becomes ignorance to be modest in the presence of infinite wisdom. Our walking with God will be profitable in proportion to our capacity to listen reverently and teachably to all of his utterances.—The Christian.

WHY HAVE FUNERALS?

W. Alford

If the soul is immortal and goes to heaven at death, what is the sense in having a funeral for the soul? Better have a jubilee. If the funeral is for the body, and the body is not the man, but a "house," a "clog," or some other hindrance to the soul, it should have a jubilee service, because by falling to pieces it has worked a kindness for the soul, releasing it from "prison." It was a good thing to break down the jail and let the prisoner out. When a home held under mortgage is released, and the tenant becomes a freeholder, we don't have a funeral, or weep, or put on black clothes.

But if, as the Bible teaches, man is a unit, and the body man is the real man, then a funeral is appropriate; there is a real death, something for the worse has taken place, something to mourn about. And, as the Bible teaches, all hope depends on the resurrection. "Now if Christ be preached, that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there is no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain" (1 Cor. 15:12-14).—Our Hope.

MARTYRDOM

So he died for his faith. That is fine—
More than most of us do.
But, say, can you add to that line
That he lived for it, too?

In his death he bore witness to truth
As a martyr to truth
Did his life do the same in the past,
From the days of his youth?

It's easy to die. Men have died
For a wish or a whim,
From bravado or passion or pride
Was it harder for him?

But to live—every day to live out
All the creed that he dreamed;
While his friends met his conduct with doubt
And the world with contempt.

Was it thus that he plodded ahead,
Never turning aside?
Then we'll talk of the life that he led—
Never mind how he died.

EDITORIAL

Be temperate and give yourself to labor diligently, and you will not often need the physician's call.

The Virgin Mary is only once mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles, and is never mentioned in all of the fourteen epistles of Paul; not once in the epistle of James; not once in the epistles of Peter, of whom the Pope says he is the successor; not once in the three epistles of John. The twenty-one epistles are silent in praise of the scriptural Mary. So should all true believers be, and speak of him who by his one offering hath forever perfected those who are sanctified (Heb. 10:14) by one oblation (Douay version).

This week we have been encouraged by a visit from brother and Sister Moore, and Brother and Sister Townsend, all of Salem, Ohio. Their zeal for the faith and steadfastness in the one hope have strengthened us in the race for eternal life. Thank the Lord for these faithful servants of his truth, who with purpose of heart cleave to the Lord.

We have had perhaps the busiest year of our life the past winter and summer. The good brethren of Cleveland seemed to notice this without intimation; hence we were agreeably surpised when they informed us that it had been officially decided that we were to have a two weeks' holiday this summer. Left to our discretion as to when we were to take it, we decided without hesitation after the Nebraska conference. With grateful thanks to our dear brethren, we are now spending ten days at Edgehill, a camp on the lake shore near Rocky River, Ohio.

The Nebraska conference was a splendid success. Brother Adams and Brother Heckman gave very strong sermons. Both speakers seemed to be in a happy mood. Doctrine and exhortation were faultlessly blended; the first worked conviction in the sinner, and the second built up the saint. Kennard, where the conference was held, is comparatively a new field, Brother Adams having planted the truth there last winter. A goodly number of those who obeyed it came out of the Methodist fold; hence there was considerable feeling on the part of this denomination toward the truth. However, on one evening the Methodist "Reverend" dared to attend the services. He listened to a discourse on the spirits in prison. The "Divine" was evidently dull of understanding, for during the sermon it was shown that spirits were not "ghosts;" this position he construed in a way that threw discredit on the Holy Spirit. He even inquired of Brother Denton if this was the design of the speaker. On being assured that it was not, he went on to say that if a sermon was given on the Holy Ghost he would attend. This sermon was duly given, and the preacher was in attendance alright; but we think the only benefit he derived from it was the rubbing of a smooth place on his chin with his fingers, a benefit we did not observe till our attention was called to it by Brother Adams. While the Methodist parson did not profit by the meeting, some did we feel sure. Brother Adams gave a most splendid discourse on the witch of Endor. Then Brother Heckman got in some telling strokes on the "ghosts" in his Sunday morning address. From beginning to the end of the conference an effort was made to free men and women from the "ghosts" of popular superstition. The darkness passed away in some hearts, as they embraced the faith, and others were left much interested. The Lord bless our dear Brother Adams and the Nebraska brethren, and give them a prosperous year in the work of the truth, is our fervent prayer.

MEMOIR OF ENOCH M. ANDERSON

Brother Enoch M. Anderson was born in Henderson county, N. C., July 26, 1842, and died at Pelzer, S. C., July 9, 1908.

In early life, when the truth found him, Brother Anderson was pastor of four Baptist churches. About the time the din of battle had ceased at the close of the Civil War, Brother Newell Bond of Cleveland, Ohio, removed to North Carolina, where he built a winter home. His "soul sleeping" doctrine soon attracted the attention of "Rev." Mr. Anderson; and the result was an early arrangement for a debate. In this discussion the light of the truth began to break into his darkened understanding. In a short time his large and active mind was flooded with divine illumination, and he began to preach the "whole counsel of God" ably and boldly.

Almost from the first his labors were blessed of God. He established churches in various parts of the country, at Liberty, Holly Springs, Henderson county; Concord, Buncombe county; and Galimore Gap, Henderson county.

In 1895 he moved to South Carolina. A discussion with two Adventists ministers opened the way for the establishment of the truth there. He organized churches at Pelzer and Guthrie Grove in 1896; and he was their loved pastor until he died in 1908. He now sleeps in sweet repose in the cemetery at Guthrie Grove, S. C.

Of the numerous churches established by Brother Anderson it was observed by his son, who supplied us with the data for this memoir, that the ones which were left without pastoral care, died; and that the ones which were blessed with his personal supervision and care flourished numerically and in love. At the time of his death he had baptized three or four hundred. Some of this flock were left without a shepherd, and they went astray. But his son, Brother J. H. Anderson, then only a young man, entered the needy field. He put on the "whole armour of God;" "strengthened the things that remained;" drove out from the sheepfold the wolves and dogs, and greatly encouraged the hearts of the believers. Under his ministry all the churches which were founded by his father were revived and brought back to life and service except Concord, a church in Buncombe county.

While Brother Anderson lived in North Carolina the editor of The Restitution was about ten years of age, a rustic boy in the mountains of Polk county. Brother Anderson lived at least twelve miles from our home, over the Blue Ridge mountains. There was a log school house within a mile of us. Father and mother conceived the idea of having Brother Anderson come and preach the truth to their neighbors. He came (on foot), and repeatedly; the soil was thin and poor, but protracted efforts resulted in the obedience of a dozen or so. Among those whom he immersed was my youngest sister, who is now dead; and my oldest sister, now Sister Eastman, of Omskirk, England. Father was a carpenter, and he built a nice frame church; but Brother Anderson moved to South Carolina, and the work went down for lack of leadership.

It was in these humble circumstances in the "backwoods" of North Carolina that we heard the truth preached by Brother Anderson. A barefoot boy as we sat on the crude seats of that old log school house, we heard our dear brother preach the gospel in word and power; and there from him we received the inspiration to be a preacher. He combined high thinking with low living. His eloquence was as grand and brilliant in that hut as it would have been in a palace. His intelligent eye, rich voice, perfect gestures, stately bearing and unparalleled oratory, enabled him to tell the truth with a clearness and force, sweetness and eloquence, which we have never heard equaled. Such of our readers as have some knowledge of phrenology will observe by his picture, which appears herewith, what a master mind our brother had.

His son, Brother J. H. Anderson, who was our schoolmate, and who, for several other reasons is one of our closest "chums," took up the ministry of the truth in the South where his father left it. He labored there with great success until 1912, when he thought it best for himself and the truth to take work in Ohio. For a year he has labored in the southern part of the state, and has engaged his services another year. The cause of the truth is safe in his hands, and we predict that error will be rebuked and truth defended by his presence among us. May a double portion of his father's spirit be upon him!

COMMUNICATIONS

Editor Restitution:

I have thought for a long time that I would let you know how I come to know anything about The Restitution. Don't suppose you care anything about knowing, but I feel like telling you anyway. So here is my story:

About 35 years ago there was a man by the name of Skeels who lived near Perryville, Ky. By some way unknown to me, he sent an appointment to preach at a school house in the school district adjoining the one I lived in. And it was announced that a "soul sleeper" would preach at said schoolhouse on a certain evening. Well, this was something new, and everybody was anxious to hear him, and quite a crowd gathered in at the appointed time. In due time the preacher showed up, a man about 45 years old, about 5 ft., 8 or 10 inches high, weight about 150 lbs. A stranger to every one present. So when the time for him to begin came, he arose and introduced himself, and after a few preliminary remarks began preaching without either song or prayer; and when he got through he simply told the audience they could consider themselves dismissed.

Well, the first sermon over everybody had something to say about it. The most of them didn't seem to like it very well, while a few could find no fault with it, I for one. But all seemed anxious to hear more of the strange doctrine, as it seemed then. So he preached a few times more in the house, and the crowd increased so that he moved out into a grove nearby and continued his meeting for several days, after which he returned home. But ere long he came back and this time came into the district in which I lived and stopped with one Mr. Sandusky, with whom he formed an acquaintance at the above meeting. At this time he had meeting at Sandusky's house, and for several years after he would make two or three trips a year to this neighborhood, and on said trips would preach at private houses or at the school house in cold weather, and in a grove in warm weather. Sometimes he would bring his wife and sometimes his daughters. I remember two of his daughters being with him on one trip. I think their names were Viola and Ollie. But after several years his wife died and he continued to come for a year or two after she died; and finally he quit coming at all. I never knew what became of him. I want to say right here to the old fellow's credit: It wasn't for the money that he made those trips of about 35 miles, for I am quite sure that many times he never got a penny; and during the time he spent among us he baptized eight persons, one being my wife; and it was during those times he induced me to give him 25 cents for three months' subscription to The Restitution. It was then published at Plymouth, Ind. I have taken it ever since at intervals. Now this is my rude story and I know you are getting tired of it.

Yours truly,

W. T. EARLES.

CHRIST

A Greek word answering to the Hebrew word Messiah, and signifying the anointed or consecrated one, three terms of similar import (Jno. 1:41). Christ is an official title, and its not a mere appellative, to distinguish our Lord from other persons named Jesus. The force of many passages of Scripture is greatly weakened by overlooking this. In the apostolical epistles, however, Christ is sometimes used as a proper name instead of Jesus. (The above is copied from the appendix of the "Emphatic Diaglott," page 7.)

Yes, I think King James' translation uses Christ many times where Jesus would be better, and there are many pieces printed in religious papers using Christ many times where Jesus would be better. If we would notice this more carefully there would not need be so much difference of opinion in regards to the preexistence of (shall I say Jesus? No.) Christ, the true official, the saving power. "And did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual rock that followed (or went with) them; and that rock was Christ" (1 Cor. 10:4). God created the heaven and the earth" (Gen 1:1). When he said, "Let us make man in our image after our likeness" (Gen. 1:26), he had his Son Jesus in mind. Prov. 8:30 says: "Then I was by him, as one brought up with him; and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him." The reference from this "I" takes us to Matt. 3:17: "And lo, a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." "Hear him" (Luk. 9:35); "God is a spirit" (Jno. 4:24). There isn't but one man made perfect yet (Heb. 5:8, 9). "As we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly" (1 Cor. 15:49). "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Jesus the Christ" (Eph. 4:13). That which is born of the spirit is of the Virgin Mary (Luk. 1:30, 32). "Son of the highest." "The Christ the Son of the living God" (Matt. 16:16). "The Father is in me, and I in him" (Jno. 10:38). "I am in the Father and the Father in me" (Jno. 14:11; 17:21. "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father" (Jno. 14:9). "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day; and he saw it, and was glad" (Jno. 8:56). A vision no doubt. The thief also had a vision of paradise restored, third earth (Luke 23:43; 2 Cor. 12:1-4). "Before Abraham was I (the Father) was" (Jno 8:58). "I (Jesus) lay down my life, that I might take it again. I (the Father) have power to take it again" (Jno. 10:17, 18). Do you see the Father in Jesus? God manifested in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory" (1 Tim. 3:16). "God with us" (Matt. 1:23).

I wish our brethren would not bite and devour one another (Gal. 5:15) through our good paper. It makes it unfit to give to those that are without God in the world (Eph. 2:12). If a brother or sister wants to bite me, I want them to talk or write to me (not the paper). Let us all have "the fruit of the spirit: love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meakness, temperence" (Gal. 5:22, 23). I love the brethren and sisters, and poor old Uncle John Foore, whose mind is weakened with old age. He has fought a good fight (2 Tim. 4:7). He has about finished his course. Let us love him and care for him as a father. "Rebuke not an elder but entreat him as a father" (1 Tim. 5:1).

A BROTHER AND SISTER.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The twenty-eighth annual Nebraska conference is a matter of history, and the small portion of God's adopted children who met together in Kennard from August 16th to 24th have gone to their several homes with renewed hope and strength to carry on the daily strife to establish the sweet, true fellowship with their Father that is so necessary to make them accepted and capable workers with him in his great plan of salvation. God grant that each day each one may gain a little in the strife until at last the perfect fellowship—the perfect understanding and sympathy that should exist in family circles—is reached. In the meantime let us show, as never before, our love and patience for each other. It is one of the first and surest steps toward fellowship with God.

Bro. R. G. Huggins, of Cleveland, Ohio; Bro. Almus Adams, of Omaha, Neb., and Bro. J. J. Heckman, of Ames, Neb., were the speakers. Each gave us excellent sermons, clearing up many misty points along doctrinal lines—points which, if left unexplained, would tend to weaken the faith of some in God, and so work to their harm; for, as faith in God decreases, hope diminishes, efforts to build Christ-like characters grow weaker, and salvation is unaccomplished. Let us who heard the sermons show to the Father that we have understood and benefited by them, by daily overcoming some weakness of the flesh—ill temper, evil thoughts, malice, gossip, etc.

On Saturday, August 23d, the registration committee reported 70 enrolled, and Sunday the number was increased to 112.

The visiting brethren were from St. Paul, Palmer, Omaha, Benson, Blair, Cushing, Florence, Neb. A few were with us from Iowa. Sister Mary Calkins, who had been visiting in Iowa, thought she would stop on her way to her home in Kansas City, Kan., for a few days's visit with the conference people. When her "few days" were up she was enjoying herself so much that she sent her key home by mail and stayed to the last. It seems wonderful how quickly we can become acquainted and learn to enjoy each other's company, and yet not so wonderful when we think of the One who has esta' lished our acquaintance.

Practically all the brethren of Kennard were strangers to the rest of us, but this caused no inconvenience or aloofness. We were made to feel at home from the first, and were royally entertained. The management of such a meeting was entirely new to them, but with the aid of the Blair people the work went on smoothly and quietly.

Only seven business sessions were held, these being held on the 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st and 23d, thus leaving the greater part of the time to Bible readings, sermons, question box, etc.

The following were elected as conference officers: M. D. Newell, Blair, Neb., President; Perley Brown, St. Paul, Neb., Vice-President; Alta King, Palmer, Neb., Secretary; Emma E. Davis, 3304 Taylor Street, Omaha, Neb. Treasurer.

Bro. Almus Adams was again chosen State Evangelist. His salary was raised from $65 per month and expenses to $70 and expenses. The subscriptions, amounting to $490, express the good will of all to pay it in full. Bro. Adams' report of work during the past year is as follows:

Sermons, 156.
Expenses, $143.82.
Total receipts, $805.82.
Additions, 28.

One church set in order and one Sunday-school organized.

He also reports that the outlook for new places was never brigther than at present, and we hope that by next Conference another such a conquest for the truth can be repotred as was reported this year as the result of the work in Kennard.

The Treasurer reported as follows:

Evangelist Fund
Receipts		$591.57
Expenses	..	590.27
		$ 1.30
General Fund
Receipts		$ 79.18
Expenses		20.00
		$ 59.18

We are back only $18 on Bro. Adams' salary this year. However, this was by not counting the salary for the two months Bro. Adams could not work on account of sickness. Sister Davis says this is the first time during her five years as Treasurer that she has been able to bring money to the Conference. The money weighed heavily both on her mind and body. It was decided to create an emergency fund, to be subscribed to as anyone may see fit, the money to be used in any case of emergency, such as a shortage in the Evangelist Fund, when there is a call for work, renting of halls, etc. This money should be sent to Sister Davis, the same as all other moneys.

Letters of greeting were read from Sister Angie Stevens, of Freedom, Neb.; Sister Lucy Brown and Bro. Perley Brown, of St. Paul, and Sister Alice Adams, of Atlanta, Ga. The latter was written to Bro. Huggins, but he gave us the privilege of reading it also, and it was thought well to have it printed, that all might get acquainted with the spirit of giving that should be among us.

Now we come to the best part of the meetings. Six more availed themselves of the privilege of uniting themselves to God's family and of the privilege of serving him and his Son, namely: Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher, of Omaha; Miss Hunt and Mrs. Anderson, of Kennard; Miss May White, of Washington, and Mr. Krogh, of Blair, Neb., were baptized into the name of Jesus Christ. May we and they prove worthy of that privilege of which we have accepted.

The following resolution was adopted for publication in The Restitution:

"Resolved, that we, in Conference assembled, extended our most hearty thanks to the brethren and sisters in Kennard and Blair for their many acts of kindness and hospitaliy, which have made us feel so much at home among them during our short stay here."

ALTA KING, Secretary.

THE POTTER AND HIS ART. NO. 1

John Hawkins

The art of the potter furnishes results as we meet with them, not only as to the artizan, the skilled artist at his wheel, but also the man and his product as illustrative of the argument of prophet and apostle, and showing also that this ancient craft collapsed in large measure in its art aspect when the flood of political and national degradation passed over and swept away the ancient civilizations which had their great national life in the Assyrian, Babylonian and the Greek and Roman States and Empire. The potter's history may be almost said to be the history of the human race as it formed the daily ally with family and domestic life for utility and beauty, and beyond this, supplied the undestroyable, unchangeable medium upon which was incised the historic records, the ancient literature, the income and expenditure, national and private, the banker's ledger, and the exact record of mercantile transactions. Thus the histories of the extinct great civilizations, by means of the engraving upon their pottery, supplemented by records upon stones, as the Moabite stone, and the sculptures of old; all these have become of the highest value; they are always faithful, not to facts only, but to the spirit of their age; they are not drawn from the depths of the historic consciousness, the source of much of the histories of, say Great Britain. The ancient writer incised upon his pottery exact facts, while the modern historian too often places upon his manuscript his own fancies and conclusions; and thus prevents as history the product of his own fertile brain. Beyond the development for utility and for comfort, further uses for the potter's material were not long in presenting themselves, such as the provision of vessels for the manipulation of molten metals.

It would require a volume to condense the history of all the art of the potter in its manifold applications to human necessities. It may suffice now to say that only the lowest decadents, whose lodging is the cave, or whose shelter upon the desert is of a few boughs torn from the bush are the ones who have not so far advanced (or who have so far retrograded) as to have no practical knowledge of the potter's art.

Perhaps the most widely known parable is that of Paul, in Rom. 9:12 to end, which illustrates from his comprehensive pen the mastery of the creator as chief potter, fashioning and adapting his creature for his own purpose. In the question the apostle asks is presented to us the very sum of the divine selection of his creature for his purpose, "Hath not the potter a right (and power) over the clay, from the same lump to make one part a vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor?" Thus, we see the object of the divine potter-artist is to make men to differ the one from the other for use and for beauty, for honor or for dishonor; all to furnish for the human through the human the true solution of the divine problem.

It was a proper presentment of the will of God which we have from Paul in the development of his argument against the strong sense of the eternal fitness of the divine choice that was the very breath of the Hebrew claimant, whose conviction it was that he only and no others must ever be the only fittest for divine favor. Paul could enter into the very heart and feeling of the Jew; and, while doing this, he, a Jew of Jews, a Hebrew of the, so to speak, choicest type, says of himself (Rom. 11. 1, 2): "I say, then, did God cast away his people? (as of a final separation). God forbid! For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, and of the tribe of Benjamin! God did not cast off his people, whom he foreknew." The choice of the Father being final—the choice of a people, the "one part made unto honor"—"God is not a man * * * that he should repent." Thus, the future of his nation is secure through the perfect action of his perfect purpose.

Paul himself is a most marvellous example of divine election—the man who from his birth was fashioned by the master potter for his service. Those most valuable scraps, as the historian would term them, of his personal biography which he voiced from time to time in the vindication of his office, may very well be instanced—indeed, they cannot be left out in the argument—to quote and thus to show the situation is the necessity. Who was Paul? (Acts 22. 3): "I am a Jew, born in Tarsus of Cicilia." One of the results of this birth and education in a city where the Greek literature was the dominant cult was seen in the facility with which he quoted the Greek writers upon occasion. Paul was also a Roman citizen born free, Tarsus being made a free city by Augustus Caesar, and it was renowned as a centre of education. Strabo, the historian, compares it in this respect with the other most noted centres of Athens and Alexandria; and the result of his education in the accumulative intellect of Paul constituted his accomplished fitness for his mission to the Gentiles in his master's service. Ramsay thus places him before us: "As Paul looked out over the heathen world, which he knew since his birth practically, both from the inside as a Roman and a Tarsian Hellene, and from the outside as a Hebrew, he saw how idolatry acted in the society in which he was born. He saw that it must necessarily, and that it did actually, work itself out in a distortion of the whole life of society and of the individual, falsifying the political situation, frustrating all preparation for the future, making the whole fabric of the State unhealthy, rendering the life and thought of the individual diseased and decadent" (Rom. I. 22, 23). If you examine the history of every nation, you can see how the State becomes unhealthy, how its right development is stopped, how it is prevented from getting rid of evils and dangers in its constitution by error as to the nature of God, and the true relation of man to God."

This summary illustrates how there was combined in the man Paul the duplicate experiences by birth and training, making him just the man to represent the dual principle of the divine choice, and present it to the world of Jew and Gentile. (1 Cor. 9:19-21): "For though I was free from all, I brought myself under bondage to all that I might gain the more; and to the Jews I became a Jew that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law that I might gain them that are under the law; to them that are without the law, as without the law, not being without law to God, but under law to Christ, that I may gain them that are without the law." This fitness of the vessel—Paul became beneath the manipulation of the divine potter—was revealed to Ananias, whose fear of the man in his mind was keen, with every reason for that fear. (Acts 9:15, 16): "But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way; for he is a chosen vessel (margin, 'vessel of election') to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel."

The phrases of the modern philosopher, "the selection and the survival of the fittest," may be applied to the apostle Paul with some true and exact sense in the application. Divine selections are the only perfect ones, the true work and the perfect skill of the divine potter, and is therefore perfect.—Visitor.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3.21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

SING

Little by little the time goes by,
Short if you sing, long if you sigh.

There's many a trouble
Would break like a bubble,
And into the water of Lethe depart;
Did we not release it,
And tenderly nurse it,
And give it a permanent place in the heart.

There's many a sorrow
Would vanish tomorrow,
Were we but willing to furnish the wings,
So sadly intruding,
And quietly brooding,
It hatches all sorts of things.

When you feel like sighing, sing.

WHAT HAVE WE DONE TODAY?

Selected by Chas. A. Goss

We shall do so much in the years to come,
But what have we done today?
We shall give our gold in a princely sum,
But what did we give today?
We shall lift the heart and dry the tear,
We shall plant a hope in the place of fear,
We shall speak the words of love and cheer,
But what did we speak today?

We shall be so kind in the afterwhile,
But what have we been today?
We shall bring each lonely life a smile,
But what have we brought today?
We shall give to truth a grander birth,
And to steadfast faith a deeper worth,
We shall feed the hungering sours of earth,
But whom have we fed today?

We shall reap such joys in the by and by,
But what have we sown today?
We shall live in mansions by and by,
But how have we lived today?
'Tis sweet in idle dreams to bask,
But, here and now, do we do our task?
Yes, this is the thing our souls must ask,
"What have we done today?"

"THE COMING OF THE LORD DRAWETH NIGH"

Jas. 5:7, 8

M. JOBLIN

The coming of the Lord is one week nearer to us than ever before, and we are still privileged to meet in his name and exhort one another. May our meeting this morning be for our good and for God's glory. May we be receptive of mind and drink deeply of the spirit of him who has said: "I will come again, and receive you unto myself."

The divine program mapped out in the 15th of Acts, and reference from it to Amos 9:11, 12, shows that all the parts of Jehovah's oratorio of redemption were in perfect accord, though centuries were between its different measures; and then the holy spirit, as it were, sounds all the octaves with a single sweep, and shows the gathering out of the people for the name as the first act, which began at Pentecost and still goes on, taking out here and there one from the muddy pool a pure drop and lifting it heavenward. But the light and truth radiating from God's word is doing more than this. It is lifting millions out of savagery, where it does not take them out for God's name, and in this way, too, the work of preparation is going on. The vast strides forward in educating millions in the dark places of the earth in the past one hundred years, I believe, is also of God, and is making them intelligent enought to appreciate the divine government when it is established on earth. There is no mistake of the uplifting effect of the Bible, even when not believed from the heart. Cannibalism, and slavery, and polygamy and infanticide, and such things give place to its genial influence.

The second act in the divine program next comes to view—the return of Christ in power and glory, to build again the tabernacle of David. This means the restoration of the twelve tribes of Israel. And here it would be well to suggest, the program as stated by James in 15th of Acts should be compared with the schedule drawn up by Paul in the 11the chapter of Romans, to see how perfectly they agree. Paul begins with the Jewish election, as James does with the Gentile election. But each takes up the same succession of events—first, the Gentile outgathering, and then the Hebrew ingathering. The hardened condition of the Jews is to continue until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in; "and so," or then, "all Israel shall be saved. As it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob" (Rom. 11: 25, 26). Then good old Simeon's prophecy will be fulfilled—he will both be a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel (Luke 2:31, 32). In regard to the phrase, "fulness of the Gentiles," we hold that it means the entire number to be taken out during this age by faith and obedience to the world rulers in partnership with Jesus.

It is, beloved, the Gentile election and the Jewish restoration, is not the consummation of Jehovah's purpose. These are only means to an end, namely, that the residue of men might seek after the Lord. Here you see the old priority of the Jews again stands, as far as the world-wide salvation is concerned: "To the Jew first, and also to the Gentile." The rejection of Christ by his own reversed this order for a time; but when they turn to him and find mercy that order will be resumed —Jew first, Gentile second. It is written that all Israel shall be saved; and just as sure as that takes place, and through that consummation, all the Gentiles upon whom God's name has been called shall seek after the Lord. That Paul awaits the boundless effect of blessing on the world from the conversion of Israel we have the proof in these words: "Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles, how much more their fulness? For if the casting of them away be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?" (Rom. 11:12, 15). Then will be the time the prophecy of Joel concerning the effusion of the spirit will have a complete fulfillment as it had already had a partial fulfillment on the day of Pentecost. On turning to the prophet we find him saying, as the mouthpiece for Jehovah: "And ye shall know that I am in the midst of Israel, and that I am the Lord your God, and none else. And it shall come to pass afterward." This is what we look for: "It shall come to pass afterward." After what? After what? After the pre-figurative accomplishment at Pentecost, when the illiterate Galileeans spake all languages miraculously; after that, he says, he will pour out his spirit upon all flesh, not restrict it to one hundred and twenty, as at the first. Oh, there are glorious things to look for, and all this agrees with the spirit in Isaiah 32:15, where he shows that the desolation of Zion will continue until the spirit be poured upon us from on high. And here we begin to see something of the grandeur of the purpose and the world-wide scope of the promise to Abraham, that in him and his seed all the families of the earth shall be blessed. Oh, the depths of the riches, both of the wisdom and the knowledge of God. First, he perfects—lifts the one seed of Abraham, his copartner in the promises; yes, lifts him clear out of the human into the divine; gives him a name which is above every name, exalts him to his own right hand in the heavens, constitutes him the Prince of life, the only mediator between God and man, the great high priest over the house of God, so that he can conduct many more sons to glory, an heir apparent to David's throne, the king over the earth. The next thing is to exalt in the same way all who accept him as the object of faith and the center of Jehovah's purpose. This is the seed of Abraham faithwise taken out from among all the rest by the glad tidings. This faithful family being complete, everything is ready for the next act, which will thrill the world with astonishment, and is compared by Paul as life from the dead. What is it? Why, the receiving of Israel, the restoration of the Israel whose casting off brought such riches to us Gentiles. "All Israel shall be saved." God says so. But, mind you, they lost the opportunity to reign in glory through the thousand years with Christ by the rejection of the Man of Sorrows. That is the riches we gain, that is the riches they lost. They will be mortal through that age—but they will be loyal mortals, happy mortals, useful mortals. God will use them for his glory in many ways which I could point out if time permitted. But I may say here, Jehovah is going to use them as his battle-axe to complete the conquest of the world, and then he will employ them to make Jehovah known among them that have not known his fame or seen his glory. Yes, unspeakable blessings will come upon the Gentiles when God's spirit is poured out upon the natural seed of Abraham. They are to be largely the vehicles of his mercies, who once slew God's Lamb. And, on the principle that they love most who have been forgiven most, with what alacrity will they execute their commissions! Is not this the subject of Isaiah's prophetic song, in his 52nd chapter, where he says: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth! Thy watchman shall lift up the voice, with the voice together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye. There will be no factions then—they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall reign again. Zion, break forth into joy, and sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem; for the Lord hath comforteth his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem—that is, out of the hand of the Turkish desolator, the treader down of Jerusalem. "The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God."

Again in chapter 59 the prophet tells us that the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgressions in Jacob, saith Jehovah. "As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord; my spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith Jehovah, from henceforth and forever." Arise, shine (Zion and her people), for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people" —generally. "But the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising." After much more joyous intelligence for Israel it says: "The sons of strangers shall build their walls, * * * and the nations and kingdoms that will not serve thee"—kingdom of Israel—"shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted." And to show how completely Jewish times will have taken the place of Gentile times it goes on to say to Israel: "The sons also of them that afflict thee shall come bending unto thee"—come in the humblest attitude—"and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee the City of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel. Whereas thou hast been forsaken and hated, so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations. Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation and thy gates Praise. Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; for the Lord shall be thine everlasing light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended. Thy people also shall be all righteous." Just imagine a nation of mortal men and women all righteous! And what about them? "They shall inherit the land forever; the branch of my plainting" -Jehovah's planting—"the work of my hands."

The next words tell why he has wrought this great national salvation; not because the descendants of Abraham deserved it. -"That I may be glorified." These words explain Jehovah's object, that he who had promised that Abraham's seed would bless all the families of the earth should prove to the world of mankind that he was a covenant-keeping God, and a God who pardons iniquity, transgressions and sins when confessed and forsaken, and by establishing the means to fulfill his oath to Moses, that "all the earth shall be filled with his glory." What sublime poetry! What magnificent pen pictures! Nothing in all the realms of literature compares with the utterances of these in some senses uncultured children of Abraham when moved by the Holy Spirit. But, inspiring as their glowing descriptions of the good time coming are, we can not dwell upon them longer at present, except to add that we have had but the merest glimpse of "all things" Peter in Acts 3:19 says shall be restored when God sends Jesus to earth again; and to remind you that we have offered most infallible evidence that the whole glorified hosts redeemed by the blood of Christ and the whole house of Israel are the two agencies to be employed by God in accomplishing his eternal purpose in regard to man and earth in the future age. The glorified saints will be the rulers, and the whole house of Israel will be the loyal subjects proper of the kingdom of God. Blessed time to look forward to, when God's patient seeking after the Gentiles by the gospel will give place to a universal seeking after God by the Gentiles; Zech 8:21, 22, tells us distinctly that the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, "Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord and to seek the Lord of Hosts. I will go also; yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of Hosts in Jerusalem and to pray before the Lord."

After this glance at the kingdom and glory we are invited to participate in at the appearing of our Lord we should have fortitude to face all the trials incident to the period of probation; the fight of faith to be fought before eternal life can be laid hold of.

The career of the church during the absence of the Lord is the exact facsimile of his—a career of exile, rather than of exaltation; of rejection, rather than rule; of cross-bearing, rather than crown-wearing. Of all the churches of apostolic times, the most imperfect, apparently, was that at Corinth, although richly endowed with spiritual gifts. And one of their faults was that they were puffed up, inflated with their own importance, one against another. And as Paul tells them that they have nothing but what they had received, what had been given them, it looks as if the miraculous gifts bestowed upon them had the effect to exalt one above another, as if the several gifts had been bestowed upon the recipients because of some excellency or superiority. This at length made them feel full, as Paul puts it—well satisfied with themselves, rich and reigning as kings without apostles. And what does he say to this? He says: "I would to God ye did reign, that we also might reign with you." And having pricked their puffs in that way, he shows them it was not yet time to reign—that the apostles, even, were appointed to death, and were made a spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men—made fools for Christ's sake; and suffering hunger and thirst, and nakedness and buffetings, and homelessness, and amid it all were laboring with their own hands. Being reviled, they blessed; being persecuted, they suffered it; being defamed, they entreated, and were made the filth of the world and the offscouring of all things unto this day; and finally adds, in the spirit of the Master they followed: "I write not these things to shame you, but as my beloved sons, I warn you." What a warning! Just think of this premature assumption of crowns in the absence of the King of kings! This grasping of authority over one another I believe to have been the very inception of the apostacy predicted by Paul in 2 Thess. 2:1-12, to come before the day of Christ. What I have quoted from 1 Cor. 13:11 shows that they were quite off their base, entirely unbalanced, imagined that they were then reigning as kings.

Turning again to 2 Thess., we find this same Paul dealing with a serious error at that place, and, in order to correct it, says: "Now, we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our gathering together unto him, that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter, as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand." Or, as Rotherman renders it, "As that the day of the Lord had set in;" or, as the Diaglott, "as the day of the Lord was present." It appears likely from the warning that they should not be troubled by letter as from him, that they had been imposed upon by a letter as from Paul, teaching that the day of the Lord had come—a forgery. The same disturbers might have been to Corinth—and being told that the day of the Lord had come in some sense they concluded that he was reigning in some sense, and as they were promised that they should reign with him they, too, ought to reign in some sense. But from the picture of suffering presented by the apostle of the church despised and rejected by the world—suffering, outcast, exiled—showed the facts in the case did not correspond with that notion. And when we read the words of the spirit in 1 John 3:1, that the world does not know God's children because they knew him not; and Rom. 8:19, and learn that creation earnestly waits for the manifestation of the sons of God, and 2 Tim. 2:12, where it says: "If we suffer we shall reign with him," not otherwise, we see how wide of truth they were. Put it down now as a settled fact that obscurity, and rejection, and exile, and trial, is the first part of our patrimony; but the second is manifestation, vindication and enthronement when the king comes, just as sure as God has spoken to us. "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear we shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away" (1 Peter 5:4). The little flock on whom Jesus said it was the Father's good pleasure to bestow the kingdom has in every age been branded with approbrium, torn by persecution, beaten by hirelings, and the end is not yet. So long as any part of Christ's mystical body is exposed the adversary will strike at it in some way or other. No permanent peace is guaranteed until the Lord's return— and then, addressing the Thessalonians, he says their persecutions and afflictions are a token of the righteous judgment of God. What about? Respecting what are their afflictions a token of God's righteous judgment? The answer follows immediately, and how sweet to read it, how consoling to those who suffer with Christ. We are told that it is a token of the righteous judgment of God, that you may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God for which ye also suffer; seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you; God will attend to their case; he will recompense them. And what of the sufferers? The answer to that question also immediately follows. Listen: "And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." All through the Christian course there has been quite a contrast between the condition of the troubled ones and the troublers. But the tables are presently turned, and then what a contrast! One class enters into rest, and those who troubled them are punished with an everlasting destruction proceeding from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power. Happy day for the saints—Jesus is coming, to be glorified in them and admired of them. And the spirit in Rev. 5:12, 13, gives us a glipmse of the happy throng, and a few of their words of admonition fall upon our ears: "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and honor, and strength, and glory, and blessing." And John adds: "And every creature which is in heaven, and on earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard, saying, Blessing and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever." Glorious consummation! Oh, may our prospects tell upon our present life, help to mould us into the likeness of him whom, not having seen, we love, and for whom we look with earnes' hope and longing. The arrival of the Bridegroom, the marriage supper, the inheritance, the kingdom, the crown of glory—these are some of the ingredients of our hope that shall make us not ashamed—a hope because of which God shall not be ashemed to be called our God. Oh, blessed hope, regarding which neither on our part nor on God's shall there be disappointment or regret or shame. Infinitely glorious and perfect, like a flower opening each bud into full and eternal blossom, like the river swelling and sparkling in its gladness as it passes into the vast ocean, like the sweet spring growing into the sweeter summer, like the morning twilight blushing out and on into the cloudless, sorrowless, everlasting day. Oh, when will absence end? When will presence begin? When will Bride and Groom meet face to face, the one chief among ten thousand and the other the fairest among women? O, time, flee away! O day, dawn! O song, begin! O glory, shine! O sorrow and sighing, forever flee away—yes, flee away! "Surely I come quickly," is the Bridegroom's watchword. May our response ever be: "Amen, even so come, Lord Jesus."

A LETTER BY BRO. JUDD ON THE TRINITY

Dear Brother:

For a considerable time it has been upon my mind to write you, but pressure of work during this busy spring hatching season has necessitated my working about seventeen hours a day, besides getting up once during the night, sometimes two or three times, to give special care to the incubators. We have, I am pleased to say, been rewarded with a very fair amount of success. We are now troubled with illness in the home. My little daughter has been and still is quite seriously ill, her temperature rising to 101, and the dear little beautiful lamb quite delirious at times. You may know my dear wife and I are feeling quite worn.

It is partly as a reljef to a burdened mind to get away from self that I am now writing to you. I was very sorry to see that article on "The Trinity" in The Bible Standard so soon after their own declaration of an open mind on the subject, saying they must leave redears to judge the plain teaching of God's word on the matter.

Though I admit in all candor to the writer of the article that it is by far the best attempt I have ever seen in defense of the Trinity, and though I am certain of the integrity of both the editor and the author, I am assured from the examination of their own arguments that they have allowed themselves to be carried away by inference, and not plain statements. If there is one fundamental principle adopted by conditionalists above any other it is that in deciding the scripturalness of any Bible doctrine it must be plainly stated. Were this not the case the very "satan's lie" that we so strongly repudiate would meet us on our own platform—and very generally get the better of ours, too. Indeed, our whole case would be sacrificed.

To my mind the question, Does the Bible plainly teach the Trinity, or is it the case that it requires men of mental ability above the average to place the doctrine in such a light that "the man in the street" can contemplate it? To ask the question is to answer it, for no upholder of the doctrine of the trinity has yet brought forward a single Bible passage teaching such an important doctrine in plain, matter-of-fact statement. Such being the case, he departs in this one instance from the safe rule that has given him steadfastness of mind and purpose on other themes.

The arguements used regarding the plural "Elohim" are purely inference, and can not be substantiated, unless some direct statement can be brought to support it. The same word is used in the Psalms, and is there translated angels, viz., "To which of the angels said he at any time." If inference is legitimate then surely we have it doubly so here in support of our position, for not only is the word used regarding the angels correctly used, as all will admit, but a clear intimation is given as to whom God had converse with, both in the passage in Psalms and the use of the pronoun "us" in Gen. 1:26.

It is perfectly true that God created the heavens and the earth. The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, but surely God, the Master Builder, had his workmen to do his bidding, and to whom he could say, "Let us," even as men do today. Sir C. Wren built St. Pauls, and probably frequently expressed similar partnership in similar language.

The arguments in Sections 3, 4, 5 and 6 are so much allied that the above remarks will suffice for them all. Before passing to Sections 7 and 8, which to my mind are crucial points in the argument when considered in conjunction with direct scripture testimony, I would like to point out the fallacy of the line of argument. I refer to the remark; "For what would be the "likeness" or "image" common to God and angels in which man was to be created?" That remark is based on the generally expressed opinion that to suppose there was any physical likeness between God, the angels and man would be almost sacrilege. But to take the Bible and study the facts what are they? In every case of the appearance of angels they are like men in bodily form, and every description of God himself by himself is the same. Take the word "image" itself. What is an image? Surely it is the outward form, the resemblance, the likeness of some other object, but not of the same substance. The children of Israel were forbidden to make any image or likeness of anything in heaven above or the earth beneath. Did they obey? No! Did they make images? Yes. What of? Fishes, men, etc. I firmly believe from the plain statement of God's word we are made in the image of Elohim.

Sections 7 and 8. Is. 9:6 is quoted. The title, "The Everlasting Father," is omitted by our friend, whether for obvious reasons or not I can not say, but a little reflection convinces one that there is probably a better translation. Bishop Louth renders it "Father of the everlasting age," and with regard to the title, "Mighty God," more than one good explanation is available before it becomes necessary to make it teach what no other passage in the whole Bible states. Barnes, the Commentator, tells us the Hebrew word means "power" or "strength," and that in Gen. 10:8, 9, it is applied to Nimrod. In Sam. 17:51 it is translated "champion." In Judges 9:46 it is applied to a false God. How anyone who professes to take the plain statements of the Bible on which to build doctrine can say that the doctrine of the Trinity is "hinted at" in certain passages passes comprehension. Can any other reasonable interpretation be placed on the following passages other than that conveyed by the language contained in them: "There is but one God, the Father, * * * and (besides him) one Lord, Jesus Christ." "I am the Lord, and there is none else; there is no God beside me." "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one." "For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus." Put such passages as these before any unbiased mind and what would be their natural conclusion?

Reference is made to three visitors who appeared to Abraham, and the question is asked: "Who were they?" We would reply most emphatically that neither of the three were God himself. Scripture distinctly states that no man hath seen God at any ime. If any man had seen God at any time that statement would be false, therefore we must look for some other explanation of what appears a difficulty---something that will not conflict with the scripture already quoted.

To my mind the explanation is found in the fact that God's name was in or upon many of his messengers when doing his bidding. Certainly Gen. 19:24 does not necessitate two persons being understood; perfectly good sense is obtained without.

With regard to Sections 9 and 10 it is perhaps best to admit they are difficult passages, but at the most the doctrine can only be said to be implied, and if such is considered satisfactory for belief in the Trinity (viz., that both the Lord Jesus and the Holy Spirit are God, equally God with God himself), then the plain declarations of the word above quoted have no force or meaning, and the one hundred and one sects are not without texts which imply what they teach.

Further reference to Isa. 9:6. The question is asked: "Can there be an Eternal Father without an Eternal Son?" Surely our writer is mistaken here, for it is generally conceded that the phrase alluded to has reference to the "child (that) is born," and not to God the Father; and some of the best commentators agree that "Father of the Everlasting Age" would be a better translation.

Two more remarks, and I must close. The argument for the personality of the Holy Spirit, founded on the use of the personal pronoun "he," is very inconclusive, for this reason: It is a frequent practice to personify even inanimate things, but it is never admissable to use the neuter gender "it" in connection with personality, especially so in connection with the Deity. No one would think for a moment of using "it" in place of "God" as "he" and "him" are used. Yet such is what must be conceded would be the case if the Holy Spirit is God. It seems almost sacrilegious to think of it, but it is the inevitable conclusion. If the Holy Spirit is God it seems incomprehensible that Paul should have omitted to include mention of him in 1 Tim. 2:5. Surely words could not be plainer: "There is one God, and (besides him) one mediator between God and men." The latter part of the verse is in no sense a commentary on the first four words. Christianity is founded on the death and resurrection of Christ. The very fact that God raised Christ from the dead proves that he might not have done so, in which case Christ would have remained death without in the least affecting the existence of God himself. That such might have occurred Paul himself allows in 1 Cor. 15, and to maintain that God or a part of God died is simply to take away the ground for every human hope, for it leaves no gaurantee that what befalls part may not befall the whole.

Whenever you go out of doors draw the chin in, carry the crown of the head high, and fill the lungs to the utmost; drink in the sunshine; greet your friends with a smile, and put soul into every

THE BOOK OF JOHN

The Book of John From the Greek

No. 1

BY ALPHA

In this study we are following Westcott and Hort's New Testament. It is the best so far as we know.

En This is the first Greek word in John 1. have an apostrophe (') over the vowel (e), and have an apostrophe (') overt he vowel (e), and that marking gives it what is called "the smooth breathing." The word "e n" is a preposition here. The literal meaning of it is "in."

The next word is arche (pronounced archay, with accent on the last syllable). There is in the Greek no article to precede it. The letter "a" has the apostrophe (') over it. That means smooth breathing. The word is in the dative case. The "iota subscript" is under the eta (ata, a as in ate). This is the sign of the dative singular. Over this letter, too, is the circumflex accent. It means "beginning," etc.

This will be sufficient in this article, with this little addition concerning the cases: The nominative case is the naming case; the genetive case the beginning or genesis or out of case; the dative the giving case; the accusative the direct object case; and the vocative the calling case.

THE ARROW

Life is an arrow—therefore you must know
What mark to aim at, how to use the bow
Then draw it to the head, and let it go!

But being happy is a fine thing to do;
Looking on the bright side rather than the blue;
Glad or sunny musing is largely in the choosing,
And just being happy is brave work and true.

FORGIVENESS

"Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us."

Dear Brothers and Sisters of The Restitution:

I wonder if we all realize fully what we are saying when we offer this prayer at the throne of grace. I think we are liable at times to put most of the emphasis on the first clause in this paragraph. We all want our own sins forgiven, of course, but are we willing at all times to forgive those who trespass against us?

Do we realize that the prayer to be effective must be complete? We are all prone to err and make mistakes, and our gracious Lord knew this when he taught his disciples thus to pray. He knew better than they that when they could say, "As we forgive those who trespass against us," they were not far from the kingdom of God, but I have heard some say they did not ask my forgiveness." Never mind, brothers and sisters, give it anyway; give it full and free, good measure and running over, and you will be blessed abundantly.

Human nature is full of frailties, as the Savior knew, and until we can conquer our own little petty feelings it will do us no good to go to our heavenly Father and ask forgiveness for our trespasses.

Brothers and sisters, stop and think what would become of us if we had not such a long suffering, forgiving heavenly Father. David says: "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. For (and this is my greatest comfort) he knoweth our frame, he remembers we are but dust."

So then, dear ones, let us not be slack concerning these things; let us put ourselves in the background and if we are called on to suffer with Christ, let us say with Paul in 2 Corinthians 4:17: "Our light affliction isb ut for a moment, working for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." If we keep ever before us the fact that we are laborers in his vineyard, and that it is his glory (not our own) we are jealous of, surely the dear Father will uphold us with the right hand of his righteousress (Isaiah 41:10). Oh how we long for the time when these vile bodies will be fashioned like unto his glorious body! What a grand time that will be? Will you be there? Will I be there? Serious questions these.

Brothers and sisters, let us look to it now, let us make our calling and election sure, earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. "And now unto him who is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory, with exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Savior be glory, and majesty, dominion and power, both now and forever. Amen." CATHERINE COWELL.

WORK

"Comfort your hearts and stablish you in every good word and work."

Brothers and Sisters:

This verse seems to cover so much in a Christian's life. To "stablish yourself in every good word and work," means so much to us. If we do this we certainly can comfort ourselves. We know that to stablish our selves means to make firm, or to fix ourselves in all our words and works.

There is no work like that of our dear loving Father. Deut. 32:4 says: "He is the rock, his work is perfect, for all his ways are judgment, God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he." To have a firm foundation we must build on a rock.

Therefore let us use Christ as our rock on which we will build our hope of salvation for, "His work is perfect." If "His work is perfect" there is none better. We know nothing can be better than a thing that is perfect. Psalms 3:3. Says: "His work is honorable and glorious and his righteousness endureth forever."

Let us feel as Christ did when he said in John 9:4: "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day; the night cometh when no man can work."

Brothers and sisters, this is the time that we are needed the most. We can see by the signs of the times that the coming of the Lord is so near that we should be up and doing. We see and hear that the cry of "Peace, Peace," is going through all the nations. This shows that the day of the Lord is at hand. Many times before we have heard that the coming of the Lord was at hand. Every time we have heard this it has been with greater force than the time before, and this being the last time, it is the one that interests us most of all. Never before, dear ones, could we figure so close as we can now. It will not be long now until we shall hear his voice saying: "Thou hast been faithful over a few things I shall make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." The day is coming, and it is near at hand, when the Lord shall descend with the shout of an archangel and the dead and living in Christ shall be caught away in the air to meet him, and then go with him to Zion to set up the kingdom and then we shall be at his right hand. Oh, what greater pleasure have we than this blessed hope? None. A greater one would be impossible.

This is the time, dear ones, that our help is needed. Work today, for we know not what tomorrow might be. The Lord's appearing shall be as 1 Thess. 5:2 shows us: "For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night." For as the world says "Peace and safety, then sudden destriction cometh upon them, and they shall not escape."

We who have taken on the name of Christ and have been buried with him in baptism, should not be children of the darkness, but we are of the light. Thess. 5:6: "Therefore let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober." Now is our time to work. This is some of the work we are called to do, 1 Thess. 5:14-15: "Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. See that none render evil for evil unto any man, but ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves and to all men."

Therefore brethren, let us get out into this spacious field of darkness and drop a few little stars that will enlighten the path of some poor fallen brother and bring him into the marvelous light that is promised to all that believe. The Lord help us, that we may so live that we may be ready to say at any time, "Even so come, Lord Jesus. Amen. GEORGIA GAZELEY.

THE BEDRIDDEN AND GOD'S PROMISE

I had occasion recently to visit a bedridden young woman, a great sufferer. The home is kept together by a weakly sister, who does a little dressmaking. They have got behind in rent, and the landlord threatens to seize their furniture if they cannot pay him promptly. They are both sincere Christians, and in face of the want which confronts them they asked me to explain to them the meaning of St. Paul's statement: "My God shall supply all your need, according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

Our Lord's words in Matt. 6:25-34 present the same difficulty.

I rather think St. Paul's words (Phil. 4:19) are hardly relevant to a case like this. He was in prison, and his converts at Philippi had sent him a contribution for the betterment of his condition. Their kindness gladdened him, and in the course of his grateful acknowledgment he assures them that they will have their reward: "My God shall fulfill every need of yours according to his riches in glory in Christ Jesus" (R. V.). It seems obvious that he is not referring here to their temporal necessities. They had no lack in that respect, else they could not have ministered to his relief. It is their spiritual need that he means; and his promise is that their generosity to him will return in blessings on their own souls. It is therefore illegitimate to isolate the verse and take it as an unqualified assurance that God will never suffer his faithful people to suffer loss or hardship. The Holy Scriptures nowhere promise that. On the contrary, they warn us that it may be our Father's good pleasure that we should encounter hard adversity and, like the Apostle himself, experience hunger and thirst, cold and nakedness (2 Cor. 9: 27); and the promise is that he will carry us through all, and "will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able, but will with the temptation make also the way of escape, that we may be able to endure it" (1 Cor. 10:13). "A disciple," said Jesus, "is not above his master, nor a servant above his lord. It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord" (Matt. 10:24, 25). Our Lord and master was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, a homeless wanderer with nowhere to lay his head; and his challenge to us is: "Have you the courage to follow me along that hard road, if it be the Father's will?"

It is precisely this that he sets before us in Matt. 6:25-34. He depicts there a situation of entire destitution, where we never know when we lie down at night where we shall find the morrow's bread; and he bids us not be anxious, for our Father will see us through. "Bread shall be given us; our waters shall be sure;" that is the promise - bread and water, not houses and barns. And was there ever a believer to whom it was not fulfilled? Our cup may not always have been overflowing, but has it ever been empty? The Psalmist has often seen the righteous sorely bested, but he had never seen him forsaken, nor his seed begging their bread. The comfort which belongs to these poor sisters, in common with all God's people, is that they may face the worst that can befall them with quiet hearts, assured that they will be brought safely through.

Nevertheless, from the beginning of her career, the care of her poor was a sacred charge which was imposed upon the Church (cf. Acts 4:34-37; 6:1-6), and which she gladly bore. St. Ambrose tells (De Offic. Minister. II., 28:140) how St. Laurentius the martyr was once asked about his Church's treasures, and he promised to exhibit them. Next day he assembled the poor and, pointing to them said: "These are the Church's treasures." The gracious office was maintained in the Scottish Church, and after the Reformation the Church's patrimony, which we hear so much about in these days, was appointed by John Knox in his "First Book of Discipline" to three uses: provision of the ministers, education of "the youthhead," and the relief of the poor in every parish. "Every several kirk must provide for the poor within itself; for fearful and horrible it is that the poor, whom not only God the Father in his law, but Jesus Christ in his evangel, and the Holy Spirit speaking by St. Paul, hath so earnestly commended to our care, are universally so condemned and despised." While the Church remains Christian, the obligation of caring for her poor will rest upon her. DAVID SMITHY.

DO CHRISTIANS SUFFER PERSECUTION?

Before I learned the difference between a mere church member and a Christian, I said: "No, there is no persecution for a Christian in the United States at least," for I could see that it was very popular to belong to a church, often made a matter of business to join a church. But when I learned that a Christian was a Christ like person, and read what Paul said in 2 Tim. 3:12: "Yea, all (not part) that will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution," I changed my mind. See what he says in Chapter 2:12: "If we suffer (with Jesus) we shall also reign with him." Rom. 8:17: "If children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ if" —if what? If so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together" (with Christ). Notice closely how much is said about suffering with Christ. Dear reader, is it possible that some of us (against our will) are suffering with the world, and are deceiving ourselves, in thinking that we are suffering with Christ, and so claim the promise of reigning with him. Surely an awful disappointment awaits such.

Who is our nearest relative? See how our Savior felt in the matter, Mark 3:32-35: "The multitude said unto him, behold, thy mother and thy brethren without seek for thee. He answered them, saying, 'Who is my mother or my brethren?' He looked around about on them which sat about him, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren, for whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and my sister and mother.'" Dear ones, is it not safe for us to pattern after Jesus? I think all will say yes, if some don't act yes; but if we do pattern after him by our acts and words, showing that we feel nearer related to those that do God's will, than we do, to our near blood relation, that don't do God's will, we will be scoffed at, and have to suffer persecution as our Savior did, and even by our own household many times.

I have known skeptics that took delight in quoting Matt. 10:34-36, trying to prove that Jesus had no principle, for he said: "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man (that is a Christian) at variance against his (skeptical) father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household." They ignorantly jump at a wrong conclusion, not being acquainted with Jesus; they don't know how it grieves his loving sympathy and tender heart, not willing that any should perish; he suffered and died, that all may have eternal life if they only will. But the "sword," the "variance," and the "foes" of a man's house, is brought about by those that take a solid stand for the loving Jesus, and are willing to suffer the persecutions of should-be-friends, rather than forfeit the gift of eternal life, with eternal friends for associates. The 37th verse partly explains the Savior's meaning. We read in 1 Cor. 14:33, that God is not the author of confusion. Matt. 5:10-12: "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice and be exceedingly glad; for great is your reward in heaven," that Christ will soon bring.

Do you notice that it is the persecuted ones, that recive those blessings. Dear brother or sister, are you living near enough in conformity with your relatives and the world, that you suffer no variance or persecution? If so, can you reasonably feel safe in the final outcome, at Christ's appearing and kingdom? Or are you as Moses was (Heb. 11:23-27), "Refusing to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt."

I have long since fully decided, from God's word, observation and experience, that the study of God's word, and daily prayer is as indispensible to a spiritual Christian's life as food and drink is to our natural fleeting life. We read that Christ was despised and rejected of men (is it so now in many cases); a man of sorrow, acquainted with grief; and can we reasonably expect the honor and glory of reigning with him over the nations, if we are not willing to suffer with him, but take an active part in politics. The greatest act of conforming to the things of this present evil world (as Paul calls it in Gal. 1:4), showing that we are not willing to suffer even any of the light persecutions of the world. We are told in Rom. 12:2, to not—be conformed to this world; and in Matt. 5:16, to let your light shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven. I have heard isolated ones say that it was a person's duty to go where there was a good lively church of the one faith, that had preaching and Sunday school, for it would be much easier to live a Christian life. Surely no one would enjoy living in such a place, more than I would, but is it ease in this life that we are looking for?

The Christian life is called a war-fare (not with the world, but against the world); and if a person lived where it was unpopular to live any thing else than a Christian life; would they have as many credits set opposite their name in the lamb's book of life, as the one that stood alone, letting their light shine brightly in a dark place, suffering the jeers, scoffs and persecutions of a wicked world, being ready at all times to tell what you believe, and give Bible reason why you believe it. We read in 2 Tim. 3:1, that in the last days perilous times shall come (times full of danger). They surely are upon us now. Some well meaning parents are given to what is called "innocent fun," have found to their sorrow, that their children have patterned after them though their fun was was not as "innocent." Dear ones, I hope we will begin now to profit by our own and other's sad experiences, your brother and well wisher, in hope of life.

JUDGING OTHERS
Matt. 7:1-5; Luke 6:37-38

1. Jesus was never censorious. He did not behave as the judge but as the comforter and savior of sinners. He began his ministry at a time when all Jewry was agog with the preaching of John the Baptist, who called upon all men to repent of their sins, to confess their sins in baptism, and to amend their lives. With the utmost humility Jesus responded to this call. Although himself without any consciousness of sin, by baptism he linked himself with all the sinners of his race, not judging them, but sharing their repentance and burden. He preached, not judgment, but forgiveness. He taught his disciples a limitless forgiveness. They were to forgive so long as the day lasted—until seventy times seven. And even the flagrant sinner—the greedy tax collector, the harlot taken in the very act, the thief executed by human "justice"—found in him a friend. "Neither do I condemn thee," he said. He brought salvation to the house of Zaccheus, and welcomed the penitent thief into his own home.

2. Vastly different is the way of the world. The natural desire of men is to punish any sinner, and if punishment is impossible, at least vociferously to condemn. Our law courts are this human tendency to judge, reduced to a system and made permanent in an institution. Police, judge, jury, witness, counsel—if the man really has done wrong they all conspire to fasten his burden irremovably upon his shoulders. He leaves the court of justice with his wrongdoing branded upon him for ever. Society is even less inclined to forgive than the law. Anyone offending its conventions is made to suffer bitterly. His acquaintances will not speak with him any more. He is made to feel himself an outcast. And even the ordinary conversation of the shop, the drawing room and the railway carriage is bitter with judging. Innuendo, rumor, half-hearted slanders, malicious retailing of third hand gossip—how much of this continually goes on, so that every one of us is daily being "weighed in the balances and found wanting."

3. The Christian's proper attitude is clearly set forth by the apostle Paul in Galatians. Even the man caught "red-handed" in some evil deed is not to be treated harshly or bitterly by his fellows, but they are to seek to bear his burden with him (Gal. 6:2)—to support him, to repent with him, to pray for him. For after all, no judging can be of any real moral value to any man unless he be his own judge. It is when our sins weigh heavily upon us that we begin to seek a Savior. Bunyan puts this with his own simple but picturesque directness where he describes Christian just before setting out to see the Celestial City. "I dreamed, and behold I saw a man clothed with rags, standing in a certain place, with his face from his own house, a book in his hand, and a great burden upon his back. I looked, and saw him open the book, and read therein; and as he read he wept and trembled, and not able longer to contain, he brake out with a lamentable cry, saying, 'What shall I do?'" In the self-judgment, the consciousness of his own sin, that is the onward path of a healthy and hopeful state of soul.

4. He is the hypocrite who is measuring his brother's judgments by his. In Matt. 7:3-5 we have a parable or figure of speech so graphic, when Jesus told it, he told it as a full and graphic narrative based upon a proverb, which is known to have been current in the East. The mote is an oriental figure or example of that Oriental mode of speaking of characters in which parables abound and which we term hyperbole or "exaggeration." The mote to take out of the brother's eye from his beam in the eye when all the eye's wooden beam or [illegible] in his own eye (compare Matt. 19:24; Luke 18:25). The point is that the man cannot possibly have overlooked the opposite "beam" in his own eye. He must be aware that it was there, and have ventilated the fact in the operation of removing the mote. Christians constantly judge their fellows; whatever is to a man's consideration of the [illegible] Jesus made it clear [illegible] to be judges, [illegible] of others than a recognition of one's own life; but that we be hypocrites in the eyes of Jesus the basic motive of all [illegible].

THE WAY, THE LIFE
John Lamb, Fyvie.

"The way which leadeth unto life" (Matt. 7:14)

The way—and as you read you are not on it, you who have come from the fields where you have been sowing and planting with the blessing of God; who have left the desk where you have been learning to shape your course and set the sails for conduct; you who have left the [illegible] for a little the cares of hearth and of home, which have more of the crown than the cross in them; to speak to you of the way might seem a very useless thing, you who have already passed [illegible] dusty miles and know the only way you can [illegible] where you stand today.

The life—and again, why speak of it? It is the gift of birth, of youth, of manhood and of womanhood, the gift of age; the thing of all things that you must realize, the possession of all possessions that you know you possess, your own individuality and personality; and who should know that better than you yourselves do?

So perhaps some of you may wonder at Christ troubling to speak of such common everyday things. "The way which leadeth unto life." We have reached the chapters of the book of the days, and passed the preface to existence. If any of you think so, I wish you, before you turn from these words, to realize why Christ spoke them.

Not, surely, only to convince us of two great facts of our being—that life is the great reality and that that reality must be worked out in us. It is true he did so, but he did far more. He showed us how the one depended on the other. Life and the living of it, he taught, cannot be put apart. Realise that life has its claim on conduct, and that conduct demands an ideal of life. We need to remember how he connected the way and the life; we need to believe that his words are the truth concerning the way of life.

Do you see what a startling contradiction it is of many a life? It was a very wide appeal Christ was making, speaking of the right and of the wrong, painting his pictures of the pilgrim soul lingering by the meeting of the ways, that picture which has come down to us with its centuries of warning—the way which leadeth unto death, and the way which leadeth unto life.

Notice how he connects the two; it is the way first leads to the life. That is not the manner in which we often would fain put it. We would reverse the order, we would make the life lead to the way. Jesus says all you have must be devoted to the gaining of life. We say all life must be devoted to the gaining of what we would have.

You have made up your mind to get on in the world. That is good; that is right. Prosperity is one of the blessings of God. But you fix your eye on what you have chosen to call the goal of your life, till it looks so large with you that you see nothing else. All your time, all your energies are devoted to the gaining of it, its attainment conditions your every thought and word and deed. It is not life that concerns you, but the way you would live it—prosperous, powerful, at ease. That is the 'ease' order, that is life leading to the way.

"My life is conditioned for me," you say. "I would fain do good, yet my opportunities are few. The little I can do is scarce worth the doing." You know, when you argue so, the little good is left undone. Slowly earth begins to encroach on heaven, and self grows greater than God. Your hours of prayer become fewer, your place is vacant in God's house, the gifts of God that only flourish by their use, the gifts of brotherly kindness, of consideration for others, of love of the noble and the true, die out from life. And you have discovered that life can be a failure, for again life has been leading to the way.

So here, in this simple saying of Jesus, lies the most tremendous choice the aimless wayside wanderers, or the pilgrims to the land of light. It is the question of life value, whether in "the passing" or in "the eternities." And each one knows the struggle. For there are the broad highways, where the going is easy, but they lead not to the city of God. And there is the rough path, which to follow means often to carry the cross. It is the way he went. It is the way which leadeth unto life. Selected.

NOT THE SAME MAN

Start right and keep right! There is a wonderful difference in the ways of life. A young man may say, "I believe I have started wrong. I swear, and take a glass of beer now and then; I am sowing a few wild oats, but though I have started wrong I will come out all right." If you remember but one thing I have to say to you let it be this: that two diverging lines go on, and on, widening as they go.

Luke Howard graduated in a leading college and went to practice his profession in a large city. He took boarding in a fashionable hotel. One morning after a drunken debauch the landlord said, "Mr. Howard, you must move from my hotel; I can't have such boarders here to-night."

Did he go to a better hotel? No; to a lower order; he had started wrong. In this one, a few months later, he found the same order to leave.

Did he go to a better? No. Till lower, he had started wrong.

At last he sought lodging in a low saloon hotel on a back street near a river. The landlord met him, and said, "Sir, I feel honored to have you board with me. I remember when you graduated from college; I saw the flowers tossed at your feet, and you shall have the best room in my house."

The poor drunkard took the room, but eight months after, at midnight, in Christmas week he was very drunk and asleep on the bar room floor. The landlord went to him with a kick and said, "Get up and go out of here, you brute!"

The poor fellow arose and said, "Brute! Where am I? This is my landlord and my home. What is the matter?"

The landlord replied, "Get out at once, and never do you enter here again."

"Why," argued Howard, "you said you were proud to have me board at your house when I came here."

The reply came, "You are not the man you once were."

"I am not the man I once was," the drunkard caught the words. "I am not the man I once was. I will leave. Good-by. I am not the man I once was." He started down the steps, but fell and hit his head against the curbstone.

A doctor was sent for. When he came he recognized the injured man as his old schoolmate, and kneeling by him said, "Look up, Luke; here is your old time friend. I am here to help you."

Feeling upward, Luke Howard said, "Hold my hand, Jimmy, and listen: I am not the man I was. I am not the man I was," and thus he died.

Start wrong and end right? Start wrong to-day and you may surely expect in the autumn of life the goadings of memory to harrow you. Col. Bain.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints associated with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:25, 26); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-53); the final destruction of the wicked (Isa. 33:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life Giver (John 3:36; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of Abrahamic Covenant (Gal. 3:16), and trust in the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, as conditions to final salvation (2 Pet. 1, 3:18); and all other truths of the Bible concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ (Acts 8:12, 28:23, 31).

GOD'S GLORIOUS KINGDOM
Tune: "The Old Oaken Bucket"

How dear to our hearts is the love that is shown
When Jesus our Savior in glory descends
To 'wake all the saints that in Him are now sleeping;
And raise them to life, that will never have end.
We'll then rejoice with desire, o'er nations now lying,
We'll free this old earth from its sin and its shame,
The Lord will bind Satan for none to deceive us;
For a thousand years God's to settle truth's claim.
God's glorious kingdom, that long promised kingdom,
Will soon be established on earth among men.

How sweet it will be when the saints meet the Savior,
And know that the curse is taken from the earth,
The blessing of nations begins there in Eden
The law to go forth, from there will go forth.
No more will we visit the sick and afflicted,
No sorrow nor death, will be ever see there;
But all of the righteous will then be immortal,
And dwell in God's kingdom forever so fair;
God's glorious kingdom, that long promised Kingdom,
Will soon be established on earth among men.

God's glorious kingdom we hail as a treasure;
The greatest of prizes and sought for by few;
For satan is teaching the nations that pleasure,
Is what they should strive for, and all they should do;
But we seek the prize that already is offered:
To all that will come and believe in the Christ;
We find that the gospel has promised a kingdom,
To all mankind without money or price;
God's glorious kingdom, that long promised Kingdom,
Will soon be established on earth among men.

PRAYER

Come thou, O Lord, and dwell in us. Thou art building men for the habitation of God through the Spirit, and we pray that our minds and hearts may be indeed thy temples. Lord, we need thy cleansing. Thou dost not dwell with impurity; banish it from us that thou mayest dwell with us. Help us more and more to be conformed to our Master's image, and to shape our lives and selves in accordance with thy holy will. May we entertain no known transgressions. May we cherish no known evil inclinations. May we consciously lack no discerned good. May we strain all our strength and devote all our being to making our own the fullness that was in Christ, and was there that it might be distributed amongst us all. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

Exodus 9. - Who is there that has not heard of the plagues of Egypt? The account of them we possess in the book of Exodus, was evidently designed to serve the purpose it first served, for all after ages. Its preservation for such a lengthened period, in a way in which no other equally ancient literature has been preserved, leads to this conclusion and especially when conjoined with the fact of its all-time utility. They were plagues sent upon Egypt in the interests of Israel's deliverance, and for the honor of Yahweh's own name, that they might know that the earth is the Lord's. They were afterwards made the subject of celebration in Israel's psalmody (Ps. 55:128) and national worship. Their renown has reached to the ends of the earth. One of the objects served was to rebuke the idolatry of the Egyptians, as in the case of those plagues which affected the water of the Nile, the air, the cow, or that had to do with the frog, all of which are said to be things that were worshipped in Egypt; as it is written "against all the gods of Egypt will I execute judgment" (Ex. 12:12). Another object served was to put a difference between the clean and the unclean; between Israel, God's own national son, and the Egyptians who had not thus been separated for divine purposes. This distinction was observed in each plague. The Israelites dwelling to themselves, in that part of the land first assigned to them by Joseph's Pharaoh, were altogether exempt, in body and estate, from all the plagues. This was a wonderful result to secure. The plagues, were headed up in the death of Egypt's firstborn. In this the saying "I gave Egypt for thy ransom" (Isa. 43:3), may be said to have received its first illustration; of which there are more illustrations to follow (and plagues too) in the last and final exodus of Israel from all the nations whither they are now scattered (Mic. 7:15-17). boils and blains of this chapter affected alike man and beast—horses, asses, camels, oxen and sheep; Israel's cattle, their own persons, and those among the Egyptians who regarded the word of Yahweh, alone expected (ver. 20). Then the hail that followed was such as had not been seen from the foundation of Egypt to that time (ver. 18). The hail devastated the whole country, Goshen only excepted, destroying everything that was out in the field—man, beast, herb and tree; as it is written: "He destroyed their vines with hail, and their sycamores with frost. He gave up their cattle also to the hail and their flocks to hot thunderbolts" (or lightnings). Rain, hail, and thunder combined to render the situation at once dreadful to behold and destructive and desolating in its effects. It had the result of extracting temporary confession from Pharaoh, to the effect that he and his people were wicked and that Yahweh was righteous in this visitation. But this soon gave place again to the hardened heart for being a vessel fitted for destruction, Yahweh made use of him for his own glory, "That thou," as God said to him by Moses, "may know that there is none like me in all the earth."

Psalm 83.—God is good to Israel, says the Psalmist—that is, as he explains, to the pure-hearted, the clean-handed, to "such as keep his covenant and remember his commandments to do them;" for they are not all Israel who are of Israel, neither then nor now. To such as are of a "clean heart," God is truly good. The goodness, however, is not at present so manifest a thing as it will be eventually. It is a godness as it were in the seed state, which, like seed sown in the ground, is invisible to the natural eye, with but scant traces of its existence there. This will not be the case when the seed sown comes to the designed perfection. Its existence and glory will then be visible to all the world, for the now outcast sons of the Eternal will then be manifested in all the power and perfection of the divine nature, and with the wealth and entire substance of the world in their hands. But the goodness of God is a realizable thing even in its present form—realizable at least by those who are the subjects of it. All Israel was brought out of Egypt, but it was reserved unto those only who wholly followed the Lord to enter the land of promise. It is godness that even now transforms slaves into sons and heirs, and makes them henceforward the special objects of the divine favor and love, and the subjects of his fellowship and overruling providence—a providence in which all things work together for the ultimate good of those who love God and are the called according to his purpose. Present reverses are but elements in a well-devised scheme, for the eventual deliverance and exaltation of his chosen. They would not be necessary if he aimed at the uplifting of mere flesh and blood. This is not his object at all; what he purposes is the exaltation of the humble and meek, who have been made such by the very evil of their experience, operating upon a well-based and well-maintained faith in God. What, therefore, has the appearance of being a curse is in reality a blessing of eternal significance. The wicked prosper that they may be finally dispossessed forever; while the righteous make their life's voyage over troubled waters, that in the end they may be the inheritors of abiding peace and the possessors of both earth and ocean, and all they contain or represent, in the way of worldly wealth. How is it that the wicked prosper, is a question that has exercised many a son of faith, from time immemorial. It is a problem that only the truth of God can solve. "When I went into the sanctuary of God," said the Psalmist, "then understood I their end." The "prosperity of the wicked" is liable to become a cause of stumbling to the undiscerning. What it naturally creates is envy- envy of their comparatively charming circumstances--no bands in their death: strength, firm; living, fat: trouble and plagues, none: estate and honor, everything that heart could wish. These are all temptations to envy, which it is difficult for flesh and blood to resist." They are well fortified, however, against this, and well able to overcome it; where it may for a moment have taken possession of the mind, who, like the Psalmist, look at God alone, and enrich their hearts and understandings with the knowledge of the holy. This only is true wisdom; all else is superficial and bottomless, and vanishing as a dream of the night.

Mark 13.—From this chapter we learn that the gospel is an all-nation institution, and therefore a proclamation of the "whosoever will" kind. In this matter there are no tenth generation exclusions, such as existed under the law. The fatlings are killed and the supper is ready, and the Jew of the city first, and now the Gentiles of the highway and the hedge, all are invited. Those, however, who excuse themselves from attending, on the ground of attentions that must needs be paid to land, oxen or wife, need not plume themselves upon the smallest taste of the king's banquet, for the fesat is only for such as esteem the privilege conferred upon them beyond all price. The great buildings of the temple have all been thrown down, as Christ said they would nearly forty years before it happened. No man foresaw this but Christ. Nothing was more unlikely at the time the prediction was uttered. It was a prediction, called forth by a remark of one of the disciples, calling his attention to the goodly stones and gifts wherewith the temple was adorned. The remarks of friends, and the questions of enemies, kept Christ supplied with opportunities which he never failed to turn to account in the interest of his mission of love and enlightenment. The object of all he said to the disciples was that they might "take heed," and so, being forewarned, they might also be forearmed, and thus the better prepared for all that would happen. For many things were to happen in the history of that generation, that were beyond the power of any merely natural prescience to foresee. Wars and national commotions, earthquakes, famines and troubles were by and by to introduce the disciples to a period of increasing general evil, that would only end in the destruction of the city and temple and the entire subversion of the Jewish State. It will help us to realize something of the terrors of the situation to mentally transfer what happened to our own time and country. No more trying situation for the truth and its friends could well be imagined; such things as the truth and its adherents of this century have come though fairly pale before the persecution and the warlike conditions that in due time set in upon the apostolic work. "Troubled on every side, without fightings and within fears," is the testimony of its actual experience. It was the case of living death, "troubled on every side, yet not distressed; perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed: always, says the apostle, "bearing about in the body and dying of the Lord Jesus." The nineteenth century friends of the truth have had a taste of "fears within;" what if their future experiences should include "fightings without?" They would but correspond still more to the ultimate realizations of the first century disciples. The character of the period coincident with the ending of Gentile times does not altogether preclude the possibility of such experiences. Anyway, Christ's watchword is "watch;" for what he said unto his more immediate disciples, says he, "I say unto all," "watch."

Exodus 37.—The ark of the covenent, with its practically incorruptible wood, and its golden furnishings, and accompanying tabernacle furniture, was an altogether divinely contrived institution; for Moses was commanded to look to it that every thing was made in accordance with the pattern shown him on the mount (Ex. 25:10). The mere working to pattern, however, in the hands of ordinary artisans would not have answered the requirements of the purpose contemplated; so in order to secure this divinely chosen men were filled with the spirit of God, and with the wisdom and understanding necessary to the effectual superintendence of the work. Gold, silver and brass are all metals possessed of a spiritual significance in the scriptures, as also the "beaten work," the "anointing oil," the "sweet spices," the seven-branched light-stand, the mercy seat, the winged cherubim, the cherubic vail, the altar of incense, the table for the shew-bread, the tri-colored hangings, and much else all significant of the things that concern the true tabernacle, which God pitched and not man. They speak of God manifested in due time, in spirit-anointed flesh; of the anointing "oil of gladness," the prayers of saints, the gold-tried faith of believers, the truth-illuminated ecclesia of Christ, the Messianic mercy seat for offences, the brass-overlaid altar of sacrifice on which sin was condemned, the Christ-bread of life and the showing forth of the death till he come, the divine counsels which make the tongue of the just like choice silver, the process by which golden-faithed believers are beaten into the divinely required shape, the "sweet-savor of Christ" which all possess who are filled with the knowledge and fervent love of his name, the immortal first and second commandments on which hang all the law and the prophets, and the new and living way into the holiest and incorruptible state through the rent flesh of Christ, etc.

Footnotes to the Foregoing

Murrain From the Latin mori, to die. The Hebrew word (dever) thus translated is the term rendered pestilence in the nearly fifty places of its occurrence.

Magicians Two of these were named "Jannes and Jambres," as we learn from Paul (2 Tim. 3:8-9). They are also referred to outside the Bible, to-wit, in what is known as the Targum of Jonathan, which speaks of them as "chiefs of the magicians," and in the work of a Numenius, a Pythagorian, who it is said wrote that "Jannes and Jambres were sacred scribes, deemed inferior to none in magic."

Evening Time The saying that "the barley was in the ear and the flax boiled" coincides, it is said, with the month of February, when these things are to this day just in the state described by these words. These events therefore happened just ending the year B. C. 1627, culminating in the death of the first-born in the March-April passover month of the exodus, the first month of the new Jewish year, B. C. 1626.

The Ark—This was made of Shittim wood (plural for Shittah tree), the wood used throughout the tabernacle. It is said to resemble ebony in hardness and durability. The Septuagint renders it "incorruptible wood." It is now regarded as identical with the yellow, fragrant-blossomed, gum bearing acacia of the desert.

The Light-stand This is its proper name, not candlestick, the Hebrew term being derived from the word rendered light. It was oil that was used for the light, not candles. Josephus says it weighed a hundred pounds.

The Almond-Shaped Bowls These remind us of the meaning of the almond rod vision. "I will hasten my work to perform it" (Jer. 1:12). The almond tree is said to be called in the Hebrew the "Waker," the "Vigilant," the "Watchful," because it buds in January and bears fruit in March or the beginning of April.

The Flowers These are properly buds, or flower buds; the Hebrew word in other places being rendered bud and blossom. The Septuagint translates it "blossoms."

The Shaft In literal Hebrew the thigh, the words ul (yerekh) being rendered "thigh in all passages. Many of the Hebrew descriptions of things, both natural and artificial, are derived from the human body, thus: for mountains and hills names are used that signify head, ears, shoulder, side, loins, rib, back, elbow, thigh: while for a natural spring they use a word (ain) that means an eye—the eye of the landscape.

The Mercy Seat This was the cover lid of the ark, and as a verb signifies in the Hebrew language "to cover," hide or conceal; hence the saying," love covereth all sins;" "blessed is the man whose sin is covered;" "thou hast covered all their sins;" "shall hide a multitude of sins;" "a tale-bearer revealeth secrets, but he that is of a faithful spirit concealeth the matter." The Hebrew word for atonement is but the plural of the word rendered mercy seat—hence, "coverings of sin."

Incense The Latin word, from which the English is derived, signifies "to glow," and is akin to the word incandescent, which Dr. Thomas thus uses: "And his feet like to incandescent brass, as if they had been glowing in a furnace" (Rev. 1:15). The Hebrew root is said to express the idea of "fragrant smoke," such as arise from the burning of odoriferous woods.

Bowls and Flagons—Bowls and flagons, as in the Revised Version, not "bowls and covers to cover," but bowls and cups "to pour out," as in the margin. The "Seventy" read, "the cups and the bowls with which he should offer drink offerings;" hence libation vessels. It is a little singular that the word here rendered bowls should be said to be derived from a root meaning to suck, and, as a noun, suckling—with the suggestion that milk dishes would have been a more appropriate translation (1 Cor. 3:1; 1 Pet. 2:2). Josephus, speaking of Cain's brother, says: Abel brought milk and the first fruits of his flock."

The Altar—From the same Latin root (allus) as altitude, hence "high." The Hebrew word is said to mean "the sacrificing plague." To this the Greek term is akin, which comes from a word that is rendered slay, kill, and sacrifice.—C. C. Shuttleworth.

THE MANIFESTATION OF JEHOVAH

The subject of the manifestations of Jehovah requires careful study and prayerful meditation. In the beginning of the history of the creation, as given by Moses, we have the words "God" and "Gods" as referring to the eternal one. These words are of Anglo-Saxon origin, and have no Hebrew significance. These words are translations of the Hebrew words "Eloah" and "Elohim," and refer to the angels or messengers of Jehovah, and not to the eternal one himself. Jehovah manifested himself to Adam and Eve through these messengers. They were the powerful ones that created all things. The psalmist calls them "his angels that excell in strength, that do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his world" (Psa. 103:20). They are the agents that communicated the will of Jehovah to his creatures. In these messengers Jehovah was revealed as the powerful one. Our first parents could only have communicated with Jehovah through the elohim that created them and placed them in the garden and gave them the law under which they were to develop a character that would give them the rulership of the world. They have no personal communication with Jehovah, as "He dwelt in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see" (1 Tim. 6:16). Jehovah is veiled to his creatures, and can only be known through his power as the creator of all things and his word as given by the elohim or angel messengers. The law was given through their medium. The judgment of our fore-parents was given by the elohim that gave them the law. Jehovah's justice and mercy were manifested in the covenant made as recorded in Gen. 3:21.

Adam died a natural and not a violent death (Gen. 5:5). Until the days of Abraham Jehovah was known only through his messengers. They were messengers of mercy or destruction.

In Gen. 17:1 the Almighty God or Jehovah communicated his name to Abraham. "I am the Almighty One" (Ail Shaddai, not the Eloah, powerful one). This manifestation through the name of Ail was reserved for Abraham and his seed. Through this name the everlasting covenant was made and ratified. Gen. 17:1-15: "I appeared unto Jacob by the name of God Almighty (Ail Shaddai). The faith of Abraham and his seed is based on the covenant name which signified that a future one should possess the land promised and the inheritance of all things.

The consummation of this promise to Abraham and his seed is recorded in Gen. 22:15-19. His seed was to possess the gate of his enemies and should bless all nations through the name of Ail. This name was veiled until revealed to Abraham. The name of Abram was changed to that of Abraham, one having power over a multitude of nations. This covenant was ratified with human blood pointing to the shed blood of his seed, Jesus the Christ (Heb. 9:15, 16).

A further manifestation of the eternal one was made to Moses when the Eloah appeared to him in the burning bush. When Moses enquired as to his name, he was informed that "I am sent him," "I am" being translated from the Hebrew word "Yahwer," which not only signifies a powerful one but one that will be and will bless. In this name Moses trusted, and was given a measure of the spirit of power that enabled him to stand before Pharaoh and deliver Israel from Egyptian bondage. This spirit power given through the name sustained Moses through all his trials and preserved him physically. "His eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated" (Deut. 31:7). The Hebrew name "Yawhew" is translated by Yah, Jah and Jehovah. He was known to Israel as the eternal one. Young translates Deut. 6:4 thus: "The eternal is one being." To believe in any other god was to break the covenant made with Abraham and Moses. The covenant made through the name Ail embraces the promise of the land and the unit seed. The covenant made through the name "Yawhew" embraced the Ail promise and included the multitudinous seed that will come through Jesus the Christ (Gal. 3:26-29).

Thus far we observe that the eternal one has manifested himself through the covenant names of Ail and Yawhew. Through his prophetic word we learn that he will manifest himself through a member of the Adamic race. Isaiah calls this one "The child born, the Son given, the Wonderful Counsellor, the Might or Power of Jehovah, the Father of the Everlasting Age, the Prince of Peace." This one is to sit on the throne of David and order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice. In Jer. 23:5 we have this manifestation made through David's righteous branch, who shall be a king and shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. These are prophetic utterances, and could only be understood by Israel a sa promise of a personal manifestation of Jehovah through his Son. This manifestation exceeds all others.

The name "Yahiveh" was given to his son before his birth (Luke 1:31). The Hebrew equivalent of Jesus is Yahiveh. Paul, in writing to the Galalians says, when the fulness of the time was come Jehovah sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. Matthew refers to this one as the Immanuail of the prophetic word. The significance of this term is, Jehovah with us, holy spirit nature, Jehovah veiled. This one was begotten by holy spirit power (Luke 1:35), and was to be called the Son of Jehovah or Yahiveh. This Son is distinguished from the Father (Yawweh) as Yawhew-eloah The one in whom the Father deposited his holy spirit without measure. He is spoken of as the "only begotten Son." This begettal was peculiar inasmuch as it was the work of Jehovah through his spirit power. This was to be the woman's seed, and not the man's (Gen. 3:15; Gal. 1:1). This was the corn of wheat that fell into the ground and died, and will bring forth much fruit (John 12:24).

This promise of "much fruit" embraces another seed. This is to be a multitudinous seed (Gal. 3:26-29), and is to be distinguished by Yawhew-Elohim. The last two are the product of the same spirit power. The multitudinous seed being begotten through the incorruptible word that liveth and abideth forever. This word is the gospel that is preached unto you (1 Pet. 1:23, 25). When the fulness of time shall come, as it did with the only begotten Son, the numerous seed will have a spirt birth and become the Yahweh-Elohim of the future age (John 3:1-8).

Thus we see that the manifestations of the eternal one have been gradual.

1. Through the angels of strength.
2. Through his names Ail and Jehovah.
3. Through Jesus the Christ, which was a personal manifestation.
4. Through the multitudinous future seed that have been and will be counted righteous, since righteous Abel to the coming of Christ, and have overcome the world through the word of the eternal one.

The last will consummate Jehovah's purpose in bringing into existence the means by which this earth will be brought under a righteous rule. He who ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of the Lord. What a reward for such a poor service as mortals can render! May we, as adopted children, bear the Jehovah name with honor, magnifying ourselves through his name.

WAGES OF SIN, ETC.

Dear Sir:

In your issue of July 3, you published a news item under the heading "The Wages of Sin." The remarks subscribed were to the effect that the case of a certain individual whose evil ways resulted in death, the Bible proved correct. If I may be allowed the kindly courtesy of a small space in your columns I should like to call attention to one or two matters. I am pleased to see the writer of that paragraph took the Bible text in its literal sense, and gave the passage credit for the meaning of the words contained in it. But the very reading of the paragraph gave the impression that to do so was exceptional. Now, sir, the point I wish to bring out, is that the Bible is most unfairly treated, and that much, very much of present day infidelity is due first of all to the wholesale way in which the plain statements of the grand old book have been misinterpreted, even to the extent of making language mean its exact opposite; second to the lack of courage on the part of individuals to investigate the Bible for themselves. Were any man in business to treat business matters and business literature in the same way the Bible is treated, he would be quickly given marching orders. Take the text alluded to by the writer of the article mentioned, as an example, "The wages of sin is death but the gift of God is eternal life." Theoretically pastors and preachers profess to teach this, but do they? They do not. I make no personal attack, for if the language of the present day pulpit is amenable to dictinary interpretation, they flatly contradict it.

I was in chapel last Sunday, and sought to occupy waiting time beneficially by reading the hymnal, and I would ask you sir, do the following statements seem consistent with the plain teaching of the words conveyed by the text:

"There is no death what seems so is transition." (This is news indeed, no need for doctors.)

Second line of one hymn says "A never dying soul to save," and last line of same verse says "I shall forever die."

Another hymn actually says, "A death that never dies."

A writer in the "Sunday Companion" says, "Death is simply life spelled with five letters instead of four."

To call black white is nothing to this. Such rubbish in the business world would soon be vigorously handled. It would not be tolerated. The same occurs (not in the Bible, thank God), regarding the Trinity. The Athanasian Creed would stagger the reason of any man, and so would the Methodist hymnal. The Bible is plain enough. The Christian religion is founded on the death resurrection of Christ. If these are not facts then Christianity is false. Thank God they are facts; but the very fact that God did raise Christ from the dead, proves that he might not have done so, and Christ would have remained dead, without in the least affecting the existence of God. I believe in the divinity of Christ, but not in his deity. He is of divine origin, the Son of God, but not God himself. True Christianity will bear any amount of scrunity, and is of sound common sense, suitable to "the man in the street" and the "common people" and does not need the profound arguments of D. D's., etc., to explain and foist on it: doctrines which do not belong to it, which are manifestly absurd.

The wages of sin is death (the second death) but the gift of God is eternal life. Men do not live forever except as the gift of God by resurrection from the dead.—BROTHER R. H. JUDD, in a local paper.

SHIN BONE CURES

A great many people seem to think that the Menace is disposed to make light of the Catholic religion, and that in order to do that we resort to conclusions that are not borne out by the facts. But this is absolutely untrue. We realize that Saint Rita, if there ever was such a person, had a shin bone in both legs, the same as you and I have. We also grant the pagans of the present day the right to revere these bones, kiss them and worship them to their heart's content—but at the same time we demand the right to do all in our power to enlighten people to the extent that they will not engage in such foolishness.

I call to mind one reader, at least, who thought that we originated this shin bone racket and were using it on the Romanists as a great big joke. To set at ease all those who may happen to still have this opinion I desire to quote the following from the May 22d issue of the Chicago Daily News. Surely the News would not misrepresent the Catholics in regard to as serious a matter as the shin bone of St. Rita. Read the item:

"A large number of cures said to have been effected through prayers at the shrine of St. Rita in St. Rita's Roman Catholic church have been reported to the Rev. James F. Green, pastor of the church, in the course of the nine days novena, which closes tonight.

"A score of persons have declared that their prayers before the relic of St. Rita in the church have brought them relief from bodily ills.

"Several thousand persons from all parts of Chicago and nearby cities visited the church today. St. Rita's church is located at Oakley avenue and West 63d street. It treasures a bit of bone from the shin of St. Rita of Passia."—The Menace, June 7, 1913.

EDITORIAL

Many thanks to Brother A. H. Elrod, of South Carolina, for supplying us with a photograph of Brother E. M. Anderson. It will appear next week with a biographical sketch of his life.

Writing from Lipscomb, Texas, Brother D. C. Robison says on a postal dated August 16, that he may be addressed there for the present.

Brother Hal Harlan, of Holbrook, Neb., reports that Jessie Lewis was immersed there on August 17th.

Sister L. B. Chapman writes that she has been stopping with Brother S. H. Thomas, of the "Pinehurst" Bible class since last May. "We have had many pleasant meetings with the Pinehurst Bible class since we have been here," she writes.

Brother John E. Hogarth writes: "The Restitution of August 5 seems to be the best one I ever read. The article, 'What We Believe and Why We Believe It' should be printed as a tract, as it covers the ground so thoroughly. 'Bible Study' is good; so also is 'Children of Light,' by Viola Gazely."

Our afflicted and loved Brother G. W. Calder writes: "As a man came in last evening and paid a bill that I never expected to receive, I am sending order for little over half the amount for you to use in the work as you see best. Your article in Restitution of August 5, 'What We Believe and Why We Believe It, Revised,' is good and plain. This morning I sent it to a Congregational minister, and wrote on the margin: 'Please read this article carefully, and as the writer has done, give chapter and verse for any mistakes you see he has made, and oblige a searcher after the truth.' If he replies, and it is worth sending, I will send it to you."

Writing from Lipscomb, Texas, August 20, Sister N. B. Robison says: "We are glad to hear through friends of the excellent conference at Springfield. Brother Robison is at present interesting the aliens of this place in Bible lessons. Have done some preaching, and now have evening Bible school lessons. Will hold a series of meetings near here soon. Your sister in the glorious hope."

The article titled "Catechism on the Soul" in The Restitution of August 19 should have been credited to Brother E. W. Knapp.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Restitution:

Sunday, August 24, was a day of great rejoicing among the members of the little flock at Springfield, Ohio. The week before we had received an invitation from Brother Overholsen to come over on Saturday, the twenty-third, so my wife, Brother Howard Pearson and I went over on Saturday afternoon. We found Sister Peter Overholser in bed sick but still deeply interested in the advancement of the truth. We spent the night with them and next morning about 6 o'clock an automobile stopped at the gate and Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Argabright got out and came into the house and notified us that they wished to be baptized. We did not wait for breakfast but went to the creek and planted these dear ones in the likeness of Christ's death. Brother and Sister Argabright are too well known to the Ohio brethren for me to give them an introduction. I find that the members of the Springfield church are true to God and willing to support his cause. May God help us all is the prayer of,

J. H. ANDERSON.

Dear Restitution:

I consider it a blessing that we have the privilege of corresponding with each other through the paper, while we are scattered and so few in one place. It helps me to hear from those of like precious faith. We are informed by Malachi that "they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord harkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon his name; and they shall be mine, saith the Lord, in that day that I make up my jewels."

Dear ones, my heart flows with love for the truth, and my prayer is that Christ will soon come and take the dominion and reign on David's throne. Let us be patient for a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry (Heb. 10:37).

We were glad to have Brother J. H. Anderson come from Ohio and conduct a meeting for us at Gallimore Gap and Liberty, N. C. Our Brother Anderson was raised in old North Carolina; here his father brought him up to study the word of God. He has become successful as a minister, being one of the ablest preachers we have. Dear brothers and sitsers, let us try and keep our good and faithful ministers in the good work. Pray for me. Yours in hope,

AMANDA CASE.

ECHOES OF OHIO CONFERENCE

Ohio Conference this year was one long to be remembered by those who were privileged to be present; not only were the speakers well prepared and their discourses timely, but the earnestness and unity of spirit were commendable. And the same may be said of the Bible Classes also. Every session was well attended, and the interest manifested was quite remarkable. The Young People's Society and the Sisters' Society both gave splendid evidence of good work for the year, not only in their Secretaries' reports, but in the meetings as well. Let them continue on the same lines as they have been working, and the Lord's blessing is sure to rest on them.

We were saddened that Bro. Anderson's time at the Conference was cut short by reason of the sickness of his little child, and he was called home by Sister Anderson, so that we only had one discourse by him.

We were fortunate in that Bro. Aldridge, of Cleveland, was there, who on several occasions gave the brethren stirring and uplifting words. His talk on "The Potter and the Clay" will long be remembered by his hearers.

Two expressions of Bro. Aldridge particularly impressed me, and doubtless others also. He called attention to our being all together at that place, reminding him of the words of Acts 2:1: "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place." Being of one accord makes it both pleasant and profitable to be together in one place; and that sentiment became the ruling principle of the whole Conference, from the first to the last session.

Another thought was that of what great care was experienced by the Lord in preparing the apostles to go out and deliver the gospel message and testify of him. They were not permitted to use their own judgment, but were instructed to "wait until they were endowed with power from on high," notwithstanding they had been with him three and a half years during his ministry and forty days after his resurrection, being instructed in the things concerning the kingdom. A fine thought for us to treasure up and ponder over when choosing ministers, class leaders and speakers. Certainly too much care can not be used in sending out men to proclaim the gospel.

Another of Bro. Aldridge's sayings was that many people believe a little bit of the Bible is inspird, but the rest is not. Jesus was very careful to teach the literal fulfillment of the scripture. Can we do any better than he did?

Bro. Huggins' sermon Sunday morning was one of most intense interest, under the caption, "Repulsions of the Truth." He showed in the strong and vivid language of earnest conviction how that the truth in its purity acts differently on different people—some being immediately attracted and enthralled by it, and others just as positively repelled by it—they can not endure those things which the others love. This theme and the practical application of it to present conditions around us, aroused much feeling. Words of earnest commendation were spoken in the afternoon by Bro. Adams in regard to Bro. Huggins and his uncompromising stand, which everyone considered a well-deserved tribute.

Last but not least among the many good things of the Conference was that sermon Bro. Adams gave on "The Eastern Question." Prophecies concerning Turkey and the Holy Land were used to show what was restraining Russian and other European powers from making an end of Turkey at once and of seizing Constantinople and then Syria or Palestine. Russian ambition has wanted to possess Constantinople ever since the days of Peter the Great. Every Russian Emperor was trained from childhood to the idea that Russia must take that city and establish her capital there. The great Empress Catherine of Russia erected a grand arch in the City of St. Petersburgh over the top of which is inscribed "This is the road to Constantinople," thus putting them in perpetual remembrance of the set policy and determination of Russia.

In the war with Turkey in 1878 the Russian army was within sight of Constantinople and camped for some unexplained reason and quite contrary to military expediency. Everything indicated that they should go forward, enter the city at once and establish themselves there, but they unaccountably delayed entering and the result was that the great powers of Europe, headed by England, put up such a strong protest that Russia was compelled to retreat and abandon the prize she coveted when almost within her grasp.

Being thus drawn back when about to devour her prey, Russia was obliged to abide by the decree of the powers headed by England, whose prime minister was a Jew named Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield, and he successfully withstood Bismark, "The Iron Chancellor" of Germany, who was friendly to the Russian policy.

The prophet Ezekiel (chapter 38:1) says the Lord will turn him (the Russian Czar) back and again bring him forth in the latter days against the land he so long coveted, and in verse 21, will "call for a sword against him," and utterly destroy the army of the allies.

Brother Adams showed how the armies of the powers never accomplished their designs against Turkey though they weakened her only to see her revive again, and she holds together because none of them are allowed to break the prophetic word of God concerning her under the symbol of the great river Euphrates. She shall dry up, gradually waste away, comparatively like a river which was not fed by springs or rains.

The Rothschilds, Jewish bankers of London, the richest men in the world, had a mortgage for eighty-two million dollars on the land of Palestine for money loaned the Turkish government at different times. The Holy Land is pledged for this vast sum and Turkey will never be able to pay it. England would quickly go to war with any power which attempted to take Palestine from Turkey because the Rothschilds are English peers and high in government circles, as well as powerful by reason of their vast fortunes. There are many Jews in English government positions. In the present war with the Balkan States, Bulgaria, Servia, Greece, etc., the Turks were at the end of their resources and almost forced to give up their last foothold upon European territory including Constantinople, but again the Jews were summoned to the rescue and loaned Turkey money to continue the war, which was so nearly lost already, and she has regained much of the lost ground.

The Jews were able to get another hold upon the land of promise by making the loan conditional upon Turkey granting to the Jews the right to purchase land in Palestine and obtain clear title to it as individuals. So we see God's purpose to gather Israel again in their own land is visibly going on and gathering headway. Nothing can break the force of the Scriptures as recorded by his prophet: "Thus saith the Lord God: I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen (nations) whither they are gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land" (Ezek. 37:21; 39:28).

CHARLES A. GOSS.

SEPARATE

Dear Brothers and Sisters of the One Faith: (Eph. 4:5): "Be ye not unequaly yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? And what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? Or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty" (2 Cor. 6: 14-18).

"Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful" (Psalms 1:1).

"Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men. Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away" (Prov. 4:14, 15).

"This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind, having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their hearts" (Eph. 4:17, 18).

"Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children; and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us, and offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savior" (Eph. 5:1, 2).

"This know, also, that in the last days perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away. For of this sort are they which creep into houses and lead captive silly women laden with sins, lead away with divers lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth * * * But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived" (2 Tim. 3:1-7, 13).

"He is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness; from such withdraw thyself" (1 Tim. 6: 4, 5).

It is valid or just for the weakest member of the one faith to baptize, if they baptize "in the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 2:37, 38), since "the day of Pentecost" (Acts 2:1).

"Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts 4: 12).

To those who understand and want to be members of the one faith, I would say be baptized by one of the one faith, for Paul, speaking of those out of the faith, tells us they are "without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world" (Eph. 2: 12).

Who would want to "Grieve the Holy Spirit" (Eph. 4:30), by mingling with unbelievers?

Looking for all things to be made new (Rev. 21:5), MR. and MRS. L. J. SWEET.

SOME BIBLE THOUGHTS

My plans were to attend the Springfield conference, but not being able to do that, I went to the Michigan Bible School instead.

I was very glad that I did, for I received much benefit from it. I cannot refrain from urging upon all old as well as young the great necessity of thus meeting together, for we received spiritual food in such abundance that growth must result. I heard several of the older people speak of the great benefit it had been to them, and of the pleasure the new ideas they had received had given them. If those who were absent, even from necessity, knew what they were missing, they would find some way of arranging their affairs so that they could be present. These meetings are something we positively cannot miss.

If I had been present only Saturday and Sunday, I should have felt repaid for the trip. I want to give a few of the good thoughts received, although I cannot give them as impressively as they were presented.

The simple blackboard diagram used by Brother Lindsay to show the different planes upon which God's created beings were placed, and where they now stand, made Christ's part in the redemptive scheme very plain and clear. It made the great love of Christ more dear and impressed more keenly upon us how utterly impossible it would have been for us to attain the higher plane alone.

Adam was given as a type of Christ. He was created on the innocent plane, but instead of ascending to the higher—the immortal plane—as he might have done by overcoming temptation and obeying God perfectly, he descended to the lower plane—the mortal plane—thus losing his life and bringing all who should spring from him, into the same condemnation. Christ, created on the same plane as Adam, overcome in every trial, and fulfilled perfectly the Father's will, thus gaining the right to the immortal plane.

As God saw that it was not good for Adam to be alone and provided him a bride, so he saw that if Christ went into the life and glory he had won, he would have to go alone. At God's request he descended to the lower plane, in order that he might redeem us and make us his bride. Was not that love beyond compare?

The sermon on "Garments" was full of good thoughts. The symbolic meaning of the word was used, and it made plain to us the kind of garments we should be clothed with.

The first garment we have any record of was the apron of fig leaves. Sin caused the garment of innocence with which God had clothed Adam and Eve to be lost, and, that their shame might be covered, they made the figleaf garment. As this was insufficient, God provided them with animal skin. This caused the life of that animal to be lost.

Note the similarity in this figure to ourselves and Christ. Our poor and naked condition because of sin; the garment of self-righteousness of our manufacture which seems sufficient. But God's word reveals to us the fact that it is insufficient. We must cast aside this garment and be clothed with the righteousness which is to be found in Jesus Christ, if we would stand before God approved. The Pharisees were well clothed in their own estimation, but their garments of self righteousness were as filthy rags in God's sight. Trials will purify our garments and make them fit garments for daughters of the king. Oh, that I may be clothed with a garment of wrought gold at his appearing!

Your sister in the blessed hope,
ESTHER RICHARDSON.

SISTER'S MEETING

The sister's meeting at the Ohio Conference was held Saturday afternoon, Sister Poole, president of the Springfield church, acting as chairman. It was much enjoyed by those present. We thought a few isolated ones would also enjoy a short account of it.

The lessons were taken from the Psalms. Interesting papers and texts were read. All enjoyed the anthems and hymns sung, all words taken from the Psalms. Several were sung at the request of sisters whose health prevented their attendance.

The Cleveland sisters read texts from the Psalms on the judgment of the wicked and the reward of the righteous.

We feel it a blessing and a great help to meet with others of like precious faith, thus gaining strength from each other to enable us to go on with the good work.

The report of the Cleveland church follows:

The sister's meeting at the conference of 1912 was held on Friday, August 23.

Since that time we have held twenty-four meetings, with an average attendance of thirteen members and a total of nine visitors.

We endeavor always to visit the sick, taking flowers or fruit. Wrote letters to those unable to attend and others. We were able and pleased to send two to the conference this year. Our lessons are still in the Book of Exodus, a very interesting study from which we receive many practical lessons.

We are much pleased over our year's work as the following report will show:

Last year our collections were $83.14 and disbursements $79.55.

This year our report is better:

Balance on hand	$ 3.59
Dues collected	55.50
Donations	65.28
Total	$124.37
Disbursements	120.05
Balance in treasury August 6, 1913	4.32

TITBITS

The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom (Prov. 1:7; Job 22:28).

Wisdom that is wisdom is one of God's best gifts (Job 28).

He who is a doer shall dwell safely (Prov. 1:33; Ps. 91; Ps. 112:7).

The Lord will teach man in the way he shall choose (Ps. 25:12; Ps. 37:4).

All the progress that has been made in any and every walk of life has had its root and thought in some desire of the heart.

If we believe in a living God and his word of truth, we shall soon be like him and dwell in a kingdom not made by hands.

OBITUARY

Dr. L. B. Chapman

On the morning of July 8, Dr. L. B. Chapman, recently of Oneonta, passed away at Proctor, Montana, of paralysis from Bright's disease.

He was born in Darlington, Canada, in 1845. As a young man he went west and in 1872 was married at Chicago to Miss Frances T. Thomas of Brooklin, Canada, who survives him with one son, Dr. Irving Lee Chapman, also recently of Oneonta, and Beaver Dams, Schuyler county.

For many years he had been at times a great sufferer from an intricate form of disease that puzzled the physicians. Last February Brights' disease developed, and in March, hoping that rest and change might effect a cure, he left his practice in charge of his son and visited Virginia, Oregon and finally Montana, where he was apparently improving, until July. After passing a particularly happy day, he was stricken with paralysis, and after four short days, sank peacefully to sleep to await the coming of the master.

He was baptized into the one faith in 1870 or thereabouts and remained a consistent follower of the master until his death. He was of a cheerful hopeful temperament, and, though suffering himself, always brought sunshine and smiles to the bedside of a patient. Many who have laughed with him will grieve with the sorrowing wife and son.

MRS. L. B. CHAPMAN.

HAPPINESS AND JOY

Have not all believers a right to plead the fulfilment of the requests of our Lord in John 17? The last verse is overwhelming in its greatness; if realized, would we all be lamenting as we are now? I John 5:3 is an encouragement to doubting souls. I often think and take encouragement from it. In the Gospel it is stated: "These things have I spoken unto you that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy may be full." Have we any right to be contented with less?

It is very far from true that "we are all lamenting;" and no one should be lamenting. Of course, there are many distressful souls in the world, but it is, to my thinking, precisely those who have least cause for complaining that complain most. People generally make their own trouble. Happiness does not depend on one's circumstances, but on one's attitude toward these; and so far as my experience goes, there are three dispositions which are responsible for much of the unhappiness that is in the world.

One is discontent, with its unfailing concomitant that of "envying and grieving at the good of one's neighbor." So many fret at their poor condition, and complain that they have "never had a chance." The truth is that what is given us at the outset is merely the material of life, and all depends upon the use which we make of the material. And it is remarkable how little initial advantages avail in the long run. Indeed, they frequently prove a positive hindrance; they can be nothing else if a man relies upon them. It is courage, effort and self-denial that really count, and these not only overcome weakness, but transform it into strength. Success is almost always a triumph over difficulties; almost every great career has begun amid discouragement. It is in winter quarters that an army prepares for the summer campaign.

Another fruitful source of unhappiness is selfishness. It is misery to be always thinking of oneself—one's own griefs and wrongs and ailments. Indeed, it is incipient insanity. "Have you ever," says Thackeray, "been amongst insane people, and remarked how they never, never think of any but themselves?" It would cure half the unhappiness of the world if its victims would take account of the multitude of their unnoticed mercies, and set themselves to do what they may to make life easier and brighter for their fellows. "Life," said Mazzini, "is a mission, and every right a trust;" and the recognition of that truth is a prime secret of happiness.

Finally, there is ill nature—a frequent and prolific source of misery. This is a disposition which is apt to be fostered by inexperience of the world and the narrow-heartedness which such inexperience breeds; and hence it is especially prevalent in remote and isolated communities. It is pure childishness, and it makes a man unpleasant for his associates, unless they are endowed with the grace of humor and are able to smile at his absurdity. And this they may the more readily do, since he is the chief sufferer. He has no friends. An ill-natured man is the precise antithesis of a gentleman.

It seems to me that we make a mistake in regarding this matter as a theological question. Of course, our Lord means that we should have joy, and—more than that—should share his joy, the joy which filled his own heart amid all the adversities and sufferings of his earthly life. But it rests not with him, but with ourselves, whether we shall have it or not, and it is foolish and unreasonable of us to pray that he will give us joy and marvel that it does not come. You will perceive this if you observe an obvious difference between material and spiritual benefits. The former can be directly bestowed. If a man is poor, you can give him bread; if he is naked, you can give him raiment. But spiritual benefits cannot be bestowed after that fashion; they cannot pass like alms from hand to hand. How do you give a mourner joy? Not as you give a beggar bread. The way is to give him a better and truer understanding of his situation, and then the joy will ensue. Raise the thoughts of a mother sorrowing by her child's grave to the Father's house and the glad meeting again, and she will be comforted. Give her a new view of death, and her sorrow will be turned into joy. Similarly, if we would have the joy of our Lord, the way is that we should assume his attitude toward God and man and the world, his faith in the Father's purposes, his submission to the Father's will, his gentleness and kindness toward all our fellow creatures. Then our joy will be full; his joy will be ours. All our sorrow comes of alienation from God, and Jesus cures our sorrow by reconciling us to our Father. This is the remedy of every ill—believing bravely the good tidings which he has brought us of our Father's love and mercy, and setting ourselves resolutely day by day to live as he would have us, and be the sort of men and women that he means us to be.

"WITHOUT ME YE CAN DO NOTHING"

No. 1

ALICE R. CURTIS

What would we do without Jesus,
As we travel on life's weary road?
He is the great burden bearer,
And will lighten the heaviest load.
He says, "Come to me, ye that labor,
By burden and sorrow oppressed:
My burden is light, my yoke easy,
And your poor, weary soul shall find rest."

What would we do without Jesus,
The "Light of the World," by our side?
We surely would stumble in darkness,
Unless he was with us to guide.
And often, as we walk before him,
We hear his dear, loving voice say:
"This is the way; walk ye in it,"
As our feet to the right or left stray.

What would we do without Jesus,
When the body is sore-racked with pain,
And life's pleasures are vanishing from us,
And all of man's help seems in vain?
Oh, then we would lean upon Jesus,
On the arm that is mighty to save:
For we know that his help never faileth,
He can ransom our souls from the grave.

What would we do without Jesus,
When Death, "King of Terrors," draws near,
And the thought of his swift-coming summons
Fills our hearts with a terrible fear?
Can we enter the deep, dark valley,
And walk through its shadows alone,
And no evil fear, if we never
The love of the Savior have known?

Dear Jesus, we need thee each moment,
Naught can prosper without thee to bless;
Paul can plant and Apollos can water,
But 'tis God that must give the increase.
In thy presence we miss not the sunlight,
When the clouds tinge the skies with their gray,
For the light of thy countenance cheers us
And can drive earthly shadows away.

PRAYER

Our Father, we pray for purity of heart and purpose, for singleness of mind and inclination. We beseech thee that thou wouldst deliver us from the weakness of our own character, from the temptations of our callings, from the inducements of evil which may belong to any of our circumstances. And we ask thee that thou wouldst make us more than conquerors over the world and ourselves by the elevating and stimulating presence within us of thine all-sufficient grace. Thou hast delivered our eyes from tears, our souls from death, and our feet from falling many and many a time. And we pray that the remembrance and the consciousness of thy past and thy present blessings toward us may lead us to the fixed resolve that we will ever walk before thee in the land of the living. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

HOW THE GOSPEL WAS RE-DISCOVERED

King Henry VIII died in 1547, and Cromwell died in 1558. During that period great changes took place in religious beliefs and practices. The Scriptures in their own language had been obtained by many of the people of Europe and America. Many were reading and beginning to comprehend the teachings which were contained in them. Many suffered cruel death and imprisonment during that period because they would not comply with the tyrants that were trying to compel men to believe and act as they commanded them to do. Edward VI, who succeeded Henry, was a Protestant, and fairly good toleration existed during his reign, but God's word was not yet known in connection with religious belief and practice. Every religious party yet who had the power persecuted and tried to destroy all other beliefs. Even the early Protestants persecuted vigorously those who did not believe as they did. Calvin was one of the active ones who caused Servetus to be seized and burned, because he was a heretic according to his way of thinking, and even Melanchton, the mild associate of Luther, expressed his gratitude for Servetus being put to death. It was not till 1622 that toleration in religious matters began to be used.

By this time there had grown up a great body of independent thinkers, and they were forming independent churches. They were bitterly opposed by the ruler of the church of England, and as bitterly by the Presbyterians in Scotland. Cassel's history of England says: "Selden, who was a far more profound scholar than the generality of the ministers, continually contradicted their gloomy and persecuting doctrines from the original Greek or the Hebrew of the Scriptures. Perhaps he would say, in your little pocket Bible with gilt leaves, the translation may be thus, but the Greek, or the Hebrew, signifies thus and thus, and so would totally silence them. But he could not silence them long or altogether. "Toleration," they would exclaim. "Toleration would make the kingdom a chaos, a Babel, another Amsterdam (there was toleration in Amsterdam at that time, and many of the persecuted ones fled there), a Sodom, an Egypt, a Babylon. Toleration is the grand work of the devil; his masterpiece, and his chief engine to uphold his tottering kingdom. It is the most compendious and ready way to destroy all religion, lay all waste, and bring in a devil. Original sin is the fundamental sin, having the seed and spawn of all sin in it, so they declared that toleration had all errors in it, and all evils. And they petitioned Parliament against the smallest admission of it. We detest and abhor, they said, this much endeavored toleration. Our bowels are stirred within us, and we could even drown ourselves in tears when we call to mind how long and sharp a travail this kingdom hath been in for many years to bring forth that blessed fruit of a pure and perfect reformation; and now at last, after all our pains and dollars and expectations, this real and thorough reformation is in danger of being strangled in the birth by a lawless toleration that strives to be brought forth before it."

Such was the reception of the idea of tolerating other people's ideas of religion met among these early reformers, although they were breaking away from the tyranny of the Papal power, and were demanding liberty for themselves. They were determined to prosecute all who would not believe as they did, and they proceeded to do so whenever they could get the power. During the period from Henry VIII to Cromwell, both the Catholics and Protestants took a violent hand at persecuting those who did not believe as they did.

At the death of Edward in 1553, his sister came to the throne, but fortunately she died in 1558. She made her short reign famous for bloodshed and cruelty. She was a rabbid Catholic, and married the notorious Philip II, of Spain; and between them they proceded to burn, hang and destroy all who were opposed to the Papal power. She is known in history as "Bloody Mary," but her husband, Philip, was probably more to blame for the tremendous amount of persecution and brutal judicial murders that took place during her reign than she was.

In Spain, at that time also, the Papal power was burning and destroying people by the wholesale, using every effort to crush out all freedom of thought. When Mary died, Elizabeth, her sister, came to the throne. She is known in history as "Good Queen Bess," but her goodness of any kind was a very small quantity indeed. According to history, she was a Protestant, but her religion was to persecute and destroy those who did not comply with all the rules of the English church which she alone started to re-establish. From her father's reign down to her own, constant changes had been taking place in the national religion. One time the church was Catholic; another time Protestant. The preachers and people had to comply with these changes in peril of their lives or liberty. Some of the preachers changed readily with every change of creed; many, however, earned their living for a time, till the wheel of fortune again turned in their favor. It is said of one vicar of these days, that this was his creed: "This I say, and will maintain unto my dying day, sir, that whosoever king may reign, I will Vicker of Bray, sir."

Elizabeth, having the power, compelled all those clergymen who conformed sufficiently to accept a living and bishopries, not only to conform, but more or less to persecute their brethren. Even men like Parker and Grindoi, naturally averse to compulsion, were obliged to do her bidding till Grindal rebelled and was set aside; but their places were supplied by Sandys, who had himself fled from Popish compulsion, and by Whitgift, who vigorously enforced the laws. Sandys actually sentenced the Baptists, who in 1575, were burned at the stake by order of the Queen. Hammond, a ploughman, being burned at Norwich in 1579, and Hett, a member of one of the universities, in the same place ten years afterwards under Elizabeth. The queen discouraged preaching and instruction of the people, allowing many bishopries, prebends and livings to be vacant and received their incomes. She declared that one or two preachers in a country was enough. Cassel's history.

It was at this time that many preachers and others broke away from the English church, and wandered over the country preaching independent of the church. They were continually brought before the authorities and punished for doing so. In this way, what is called "Noncomformity" originated, and the formation of many different sects. "Amongst the Nonconformists a most zealous and resolute sect arose called Brownites, from Robert Brown, a preacher in the diocese of Norwich. His followers soon acquired the name of Independents. * * * Sir Walter Raliegh declared in Parliament that there were before the death of Elizabeth 20,000 members of that body in Norfolk, Essex and the neighborhood of London."

During this time a perfect ferment was going on in Scotland in religious matters. The Catholics were determined to hold down their opponents with fire and sword, and the Presbyterians were just as determined to destroy them. They burned or killed each other as they could find opportunity. During all this time the Bible itself was becoming more and more available and the people were hungering for a knowledge of their true teachings which had been so long hid from them. Some were discovering that the Orthodox teaching of the ages, both by Catholics and Protestants, were not the teachings of the Scriptures. The Anabaptists, so-called, had discovered that sprinkling a few drops of water on a baby's face was not the baptism commanded by Jesus Christ; they had also discovered in large numbers that Christ was coming again to reign on this earth; some of them had discovered that the immortality of the soul was a heathen doctrine, and suffered the penalty of death for daring to say so. By Cromwell's time, when more liberty was given than ever before, "One John Biddle, who may be regarded as the father of the Unitarians, was imprisoned by the Long Parliament, for holding that he could not find in the Scriptures that Christ or the Holy Ghost were styled God. The parliament committed him to the gate house, and ordered a bill to be prepared for his punishment." The leaven of truth was slowly working that was going to overthrow in a measure the bitter and barbarous spirit that had dominated the ages, and bring light and eternal life to many.

THE LAST DAYS

S. Roxanna Wince

"God who at sundry times and in divers manners, spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son" (Heb. 1:1, 2).

These words were written by Paul, the apostle, in the year 61 A. D., and John calls the same period "the last time," evidently referring to the whole Christian dispensation, made up in part or wholly by the last of the prophetic years, or times of Gentile domination over the Holy Land, and not to the very end thereof. Peter, writing to the scattered strangers in various parts of the eastern world, said Christ "verily was fore ordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you." Of course there are other texts that most certainly refer to the end, as "raise it up again at the last day;" "In the resurrection at the last day;" "shall judge him in the last day," etc. We must determine by the wording as to whether the beginning, the whole of the period, or its closing moments are pointed out, or we shall make serious mistakes. Peter spoke of a salvation (R. V.) "ready to be revealed in the last time." He evidently refers to a salvation wrought out in the raising of the dead and the giving to them of an incorruptible, undefiled and fadeless inheritance. So we know just where that salvation stands. But when we come to turn to 1 Tim. 4:1, where it says: "Now, the spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron, forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats," we shall grievously err if we apply this language to the years just preceding the coming of Christ. The seeds of Gnostic error had already been sown when Paul was writing to Timothy. Apollonius Tyranaeus, a heretic, was then, or a little later, at Ephesus, doing his best to overthrow the faith of the Ephesian church. Hymenaeus and Philetus were also at Ephesus, profanely and vainly babbling that the resurrection was already past. In both Asia Minor and at Alexandria, in Egypt, the philosophy of Greece was being mingled with the theosoph of Asia, with Jewish superstitions, and with the crazy imaginings of the Persian Magi: and all this in profesesdly Christian schools and by men who professed to be followers of Christ; and still more damnable things were taught in the private circle. It was a subtle attempt to unite all religions. The mystery of iniquity had already begun to work, and it worked on and on until the apostacy was brought about; the "let" or hindrance of the Roman Emperors was removed from Rome, and the Man of Sin, or Son of Perdition, was revealed, climbing by degrees to universal dominion. So "the latter times" of 1 Tim. 4:1 are "the times" that measure off the years allotted to the Roman Harlot.

It is the church of Rome that has departed from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. It is the Church of Rome that has blackened herself by speaking hypocritical lies, that has forbidden marriage to her priesthood, and the eating of meat on certain days. It is the Church of Rome that has had her conscience "seared," the Greek primarily meaning "branded," with the consciousness of crimes committed against their better knowledge and conscious, like so many scars burnt in by a branding iron" (Jamieson, Faussett and Brown). It is a cardinal doctrine with her priests. Sin to these is holiness, and holiness a crime. Professing to lead others to holiness, and to be the only church in which salvation can be found, they commit and teach their followers to commit every sin that can be committed against the hapless followers of Christ and against the nations wherein they gain a foothold. The heir of the old Babylonian religion, she has become the Babylon of "the latter times;" for the name of "Babylon" has been written by inspiration on her forehead.

"The former times" of Gentile domination covered 1260 years; "the latter times" cover 1260. The two added measure 2520.

A moon or lunar year is shorter by five and one-quarter days than a solar one. This difference grows into years as time passes on, and is named by chronologists as "the epact."

The epact, or difference between moon years and sun years, becomes 75 solar years in the 2520 years that measure Gentile rule. Daniel adds this epact of 75 years to the 1260, or "latter times," making 1335 years, a period that "terminates in resurrection blessedness." "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh unto the thousand, three hundred and five and thirty days."

But what about "the last days" of 2 Tim. 3:1, and "the last days" of 2 Peter 3:3? Jamieson, Faussett and Brown think these are the days preceding Christ's second coming, that "the perilous," or literally "difficult times," when it is difficult to know what is to be done," "the grievous times," when scoffers will be scoffing as to our hope of a coming Savior. And this is the application given to them by Bible expositors generally. I see no reason to antagonize the application. Every word in the long catalogue of sins that are to characterize the men of "the last days" characterizes the men of the age in which we are living. They join the church, but deny by their manner of life the restraining, regenerating, sanctifying power of the gospel.

Traitors to God, they deny the truth of his word in the very pulpit. "Laden with sins, they creep into houses and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away by divers lusts."

The priests of Rome do this in these very days; the priests of heathendom, of Christian (?) Science, and of Spiritualism, do it to an alarming and fearful extent, as witness the numbers and the great temples belonging to these cults in our own dear country.

It is indeed in "the last days" that we are living. Evil men and seducers are waxing worse and worse, as is proven by the white slave traffic, the increased consumption of tobacco and rum, and by the bold and continued efforts of Rome to trample all that is good under her feet. Rome has stirred up Mexico, that she may, if possible, by embroigling our country in war, make it a Roman Catholic empire, subject to the Roman God on the Tiber. Will she accomplish her purpose? We do not know. But war will come. The Roman question will not be settled here. Until it does "grievous times" are ahead of us. Washington was shown in vision an exact panorama of our civil war. He was also shown a later scene of strife, brought about by a countless host of inpouring immigrants from Europe, when our great cities would be in flames from one side of the continent to the other and blood would flow in torrents. But that was the end. Thereafter came peace.

And the time is near when the folly (literally, dementation) of these wicked classes "shall proceed no further," but shall be manifest, as was the folly of Jannes and Jambres, the traditional resisters of Moses. It is a vain thing to fight against God, but to fight for him is glory indeed. Shall we continue to fight to the end, holding fast the doctrine and following "the manner of life, purpose, faith, long suffering, charity, and patience of the apostle Paul, enduring the persecutions and afflictions?"

Only the holy scriptures can make us wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. Our safety lies in studying and obeying them. Only thus can we be kept.

CREATION WEEK AND SCRIPTURAL CHRONOLOGY

No. 1

CHAS. A. GOSS

In the use of the term "week" we are not necessarily limited in our meaning to the common definition of "the space of seven days" of twenty-four hours each. It may be just as properly applied to any septiform period. A week on any scale consists of seven, always seven, equal periods of time, be those periods days, months, years, or prophetic "times" of 360 years each. It is its septiform nature which characterizes it as a "week;" hence we see the term "week" is properly applied to the first seven divisions or epochs of creation, called "days" in the first chapter of Genesis.

Chronology is that department of knowledge which relates to the reckoning of time, and is derived from the Greek Chronos (time), and Logos (a discourse); hence meaning a discourse on time. Thus we call a disease of long standing chronic; chronicle is applied to a record of past events, and a chronometer is an instrument for measuring time.

There can be but one true measure of past time, one which satisfies all demands made by astronomy, chronology and history. It must combine all these and make a harmony which is the best evidence of its genuineness.

Until recent years none of the various systems came near fulfilling the requirements, except that known as Bishop Usher's system. There is only one error which affects Usher's system as a whole, namely, the assumption that the birth of Jesus Christ was four years after the commonly quoted year 1000 A. M. (year of the world), instead of putting it four years before that date. By reason of this error Usher's date for the creation is 4004 B. C., when it should have been 3996 B. C. With allowance for this eight years, Bishop Usher is absolutely correct in ninety per cent. of his line of dates, and with better data would no doubt have been more so.

True chronology avoids the use of B. C. and A. D. dates, and notes all dates in A. M. years. Whether we use B. C. or A. D. dates, however, is not so material as to be able to harmonize them with the true A. M. date, i. e., one which may be verified by the astronomical cycles. The A. M. dates give us a "straight sequence of years" from the very beginning of human history, i. e., from the creation of Adam to the present time.

Being founded upon astronomical cycles of various kinds and different lengths, true chronology is a method as true and reliable as the movements of the heavenly bodies. And from the fact that all the various cycles are rigidly linked together by the laws of astronomy, we are enabled, when these laws are known, to prove or disprove the correctness of any date or record. False chronologies are founded upon fables and the conjectures of skeptical "wise" men of this world.

In speaking of periods of time reckoned by the movements of the heavenly bodies we use the term "cycles," meaning a revolution of one or more of them through space until it returns to the starting point, or the time which one of the heavenly bodies takes to traverse its orbit and return to the same relative position as at first. Some of these "cycles" are very great and of vast duration, others relatively very short; but in any event they are absolutely unchanging in their cycles; and this fact makes them the best means of reckoning past time that could be devised. In fact, it was devised by the All-Wise Creator for that purpose, as may be seen in Genesis 1:14.

Keeping in mind the various movements of the sun, moon and planets, and the absolute accuracy of them, we have an infallible timepiece; and we also have in them an infallible record as well, for all time, whether days, months, years—all are recorded as well as measured by them.

Let us here take up the record as we find it in the first chapter of Genesis: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth, and the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters."

When asked how long the period referred to was, what is our answer? How much time is supposed to be included in the picture of a dark and watery world, uninhabited and uninhabitable? Who knows? I answer: No human being can tell, because it is not revealed. Nor does it concern us to know. The narrative only begins to concern man at the point of time when the Creator began the work of preparing the earth for his creation, chiefly man.

In the third verse of Genesis 1 we begin to be interested. Let us watch and look and listen. The Creator begins the great work by the command, "Let there be light," and, although we as yet see no sun in the heavens, "there was light." And this was the first step in making the "void" or empty world fit for man's abode. In so far as human history is concerned, this was the beginning of time, and the earth began its rotation with the command, "Let there be light," the first act of creation.

Day and night were instituted on the "first day" which we have any record of, and although the sun and moon are not yet apparent they are undoubtedly already fixed in their orbits, but invisible through the surrounding vapors and clouds of the watery world, just beginning to awaken into life by the all-pervading influence of the spirit of God. I say the sun and moon were not "apparent;" and in explenation of this term I will say that my conception of Moses' account of creation is that he wrote from the standpoint of a man, and wrote to men in the simple and direct style of one describing as an eye witness. He wrote from the viewpoint of one who stood by and used his natural senses of sight, hearing, etc.

In the sixth to eighth verses we read of the creation of the firmament and dividing of the waters. I find that very few people have ever given this part of the creative work any attention or thought. Yet there is good food for thought in it. The "firmament" is the open expanse above the earth, the atmosphere surrounding it. Did you ever consider how vast must have been the amount of water which was taken away from the earth in this separation of waters, so that the gathering of what remained into one place caused the dry land to appear in the next "day?" Probably you never connected the account of the deluge, in the days of Noah, with "the waters above the firmament," and yet there is no doubt that this "belt of water" which was suspended above the firmament in the creation was the same which fell for forty days and nights (Gen. 7:4).

There was no such thing as rain in the time prior to the deluge, "but there went up a mist from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground" (Gen. 2:6). This makes it easy to understand how skeptical the antediluvian population were of Noah's predictions and preaching of a flood of rain. They never had seen "rain," as we see it. But it came "on time" to the very day, and did not leave one of them alive. Of that we may have more to say at another time.

THE HOODOO IN CAREY, OHIO

A pilgrimage is going on to the shrine of Our Lady of Consolation in Carey, Ohio. Crutches, braces and canes hang on the walls of the church, evidences, it is supposed, of miracles that have been performed before the image in the shrine.

Years ago, one Paul Castor, in Ottumwa, Iowa, had the same thing going his way. The sister and the mounthank, the fraud and the hypocrite, work upon the credulity of the ignorant.

Father Fish is the priest in Carey, and it appears that the big fish is taking in the suckers.

It seems incredible that such a graft could be worked in Ohio. Listen to this:

"About 2,000 men and women in line, they carry a white banner of Our Lady of Consolation.

"The first miracle occurred April 27, 1875. A storm broke as the procession was on its seven-mile walk. The lightning flashed and the rain fell. But the procession walked dry. Rain fell to the right and left, and not a drop fell on the banner.

Over the altar in the cathedral at Luxemberg, is a statue of the virgin, reputed not to have been made by human hands. She was found in a hollow tree in 1628 by Father Broquar, who was healed of a plague by prayers to the Blessed Virgin. He erected a church to the Blessed Virgin and placed the image, three feet tall, above the altar.

"Rev. Father J. P. Golden, now of Defiance, Ohio, took the Carey pulpit in 1872. The parish was in need of help and Father Golden made a secret vow to the virgin.

"He will not tell the nature of the vow that led to the establishing of the church of Our Lady of Consolation. However, he wrote to the dignitaries at Luxemborg, Germany, and requested a replica of the statue. The request was granted. But, more wonderful, a particle of the original was removed, made into a cross, incased in a silver capsule and suspended from the neck of this copy, making it virtually alike in substance to the original."

The account then goes on to record supposed miracles since then. Readers will note the reason why this shrine was set up in Carey. The account says Father Gloden took the Carey pulpit in 1872. The parish was in need of help and Priest Gloden made a vow that led him to establish the hoodoo, and the thing has worked ever since.

If there was no other evidence of superstition and heathen incredulity in the Roman Catholic church this would be sufficient.

Do you call that twentitch century Christianity to dupe people like that priest is evidently doing, according to this account taken from the Cleveland Press, April 22d?

Do the people believe that it is the image that does the healing, or the saint, or faith? The church erects the shrine and creates a false notion, and makes money on the pretended miracle.

Did you say the Catholic church was learned, was spiritual, was honest, was holy?

"And I heard another voice from heaven saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues, for her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquity."
—The Manace.

"ENMITY BETWEEN"

This is the revealed inevitable nature of the present condition of things. No peace and harmony can prevail between the seeds, wherever and whenever they exist. It manifested itself at the first between Cain and Abel; later on between the prophets, Jesus and his apostles on the one hand, and their respective adversaries on the other. Woe to us were not this enmity in evidence now! It would stand as a sign, "Ye are not the seed of the woman."—Selected.

EDITORIAL

Bro. J. J. Heckman has editorial thanks for his active service in furthering the cause of The Restitution. He is not only one of our most valued correspondents, but his efforts to enlarge our circulation are industrious and most commendable.

Anxious letters from Bro. Earl and Sister Juergensen tell of the serious operation through which Bro. Juergensen has passed, and ask for the prayers of the brethren in our brother's behalf. Let us all pray that God will spare our loved brother's life and give him many years yet to serve the truth, the Lord and the household of faith. The will of the Lord be done.

"Love your enemies" (Matt. 5:44). Yes; but it is not possible to entertain toward an enemy the kind of sentiment you feel toward a friend. Christ's commandment refers more to action than feeling—that is, we should act a loving part toward our enemies, whatever our feelings may be. This interpretation of our Lord's statement is countenanced by Christ's reference to God in connection with the mandate: "That ye may be like your Father, who sendeth the rain on the just and the unjust." We know by express statements that God does not love his enemies as he done his friends; he hates them (Ps. 5:5; 11:5). Yet he does them good for the time being, and does not render to them according to their works. But in the day of judgment he will give every man according to his work (Rom. 2:6, 16). "The Lord is good to all; his tender mercies are over all his works," and this, notwithstanding the evil of sinful men. God is, as Peter says, "long suffering." Now Jesus commands us to be like him. To do good is to love in the Bible sense (1 Jno. 5:2), for the conferring of benefit is the expression of love.

Sister A. J. Martin writes: "Bro. Bradley was with us for eight days, and in his able and convincing way delivered ten discourses. As I have said before, Bro. Bradley is a thorough master of his trade, and shows himself 'a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.' Oh, how we (my family) did enjoy hearing the precious 'gospel of the kingdom' preached. That is something we seldom have the privilege to enjoy. We certainly know how to appreciate it. I believe our attendance was some better this year than last, but there is so much prejudice existing among the people here I fear little good will ever be accomplished. I want to thank you again for your work and labor of love in giving us such a good paper as The Restitution. May the Lord bless you with all the good things of this life, and in the world to come everlasting life and an abundant entrance into his kingdom. Pray for us."

"Power over the nations" is divinely and fittingly restricted to those who have "overcome" themselves and the world. Who could object to the rule of such? Let world-burners give their objections, if they have any.

"I have no time to read," you say. But what did Christ say about Martha and Mary? What shall come first, is the question. Where the truth is the "treasure" people will "take time" to read.

"A fool rageth and is confident." A bad case. But what of the man who knows better, but has not enough confidence to go ahead? He is distressing and paralyzing. Such a one should study the heroic deeds of those worthies mentioned by Paul in Heb. 11, and ask himself how he looks standing by them.

THE KING'S WINE

Dr. Jowett preached a great sermon recently at Manchester. He preached with vigor and charm, the press reports, and the vast audience drank in every word. Taking for his text Ephesians 6:16, he spoke on "The Shield of Faith." The sermon showed marvelous insight and power of analysis, with sympathy and grip of life. It abounded in epigrams and striking sentences.

"Who spoke these words?" he asked. "Not one who lived in a garden or unsheltered spot. Paul's life was full of sufferings—witness the long list in 2 Corinthians—in labors abundant. His was a life of travail. He had a thorn in the flesh (malarial fever). But the apostle lived not in circumstance or incident, but in the soul. We live too much in circumstance. In the Lord's Prayer there is no petition against suffering, labor, sickness, death. Prayer is in the inward places.

"Like a screen which divides rays of light and lets in the bright rays, so faith is a screen between the soul and circumstance. It keeps back the deadly days. Faith is a shield, not against failure, but against pessimism; not against injury, but revenge; not pain, but murmuring; not difficulty, but fear; not against wealth, but petrifying the flesh to stone. Faith abandons the soul to God in dependence on him. 'When I find myself in the cellar of affliction,' said Mark Rutherford, 'I look about for the king's wine.'"

MAINTAINING THE SEPARATION: BUT SEEKING THE LOST

A brother is distressed over the cool manner in which friends are sometimes treated at our meetings. "I have thought," he writes in an exchange, "that this conduct goes a good way to explain our non-success in getting a hearing. Friends have come to our meetings, but have been so ignored by the brethren that on many occasions we do not get one to hear us. The truth may be very clearly presented on the subject taken up, but the effect is entirely lost by the indifferent attitude taken up at the close of the meeting. On many occasions I have seen friends come who were complete strangers to us; one visit seems to be enough for them, for we do not see them again.

"Is it not the duty of the brethren to spread the gospel net craftily, after the manner of Paul, who became all things to all men that he might gain some? And then we have his exhortation to Titus, to be 'gentle, showing all meekness unto all men,' for the reason that 'we ourselves were sometimes foolish', etc. (Titus 3:2-3). Then to the Colossians he says: 'Walk in wisdom toward them that are without, redeeming the time' (Col. 4:5); and then should we not endeavor 'to give no offense in anything, that the ministry be not blamed?' (2 Cor. 6:3). And there are many such passages. Some exception has been taken to my remarks in this direction, and the line of cleavage between the alien and the brethren has been enlarged on. This is good, but it is possible to make matters unnecessarily odious in the eyes of those to whom we wish to convey the truth. It seems to me the way to mantain the line of cleavage is not to act in an uncourteous manner, but to indicate courteously the true nature of fellowship as possessors of the truth and brethren of Christ. Should we not endeavor to make it plain to those who come to hear the truth that we are anxious for their submission, 'redeeming the time' instructing them, 'if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledgment of the truth, and that they may recover themselves,' etc. (2 Tim. 2:24-26). It grieves me very much that the truth does not get the hearing it ought to. I feel there is mismanagement somewhere. Then, again, as to prayer in the meeting. Should it not be extensively encouraged? I think we do not sufficiently follow the example of the early brethren, as in Acts 12:12. Should there not be a place and time where prayer is went to be made, as in Acts 16:13, where we might express to our Father our earnest desire for the effectual spread of the truth?"

As in all other matters, the course of true wisdom and kindness in this matter lies in the mean between two extremes. We must mantain the separation between truth and error. The extreme on the wrong side of this may be seen in revival enterprises, where all, believers and unbelievers, are welcome, and in 'bright hearty services,' lightened, perhaps, with 'Moody and Sankey's hymns,' the community agrees to utterly ignore all of God's distinction between those 'in Christ' and 'those without.' The extreme on the right side may be seen where those in Christ maintain this distinction with such harshness and severity, and such apparent absence of all personal interest in their perishing fellow-creatures, as to repel and discourage them. We say 'may be seen;' but surely this is not common. Christ's beautiful rule comes to our assistance: 'As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them.' We would not that men should deceive us to death with pretty fables; and we would not that they should deflect us from the way of life by harsh and unfeeling handling of the things of the 'Good Shepherd.' We would that they would tell us, kindly and plainly, of the danger we were in by fellowship in apostate Christendom, and that, recognizing clearly our freedom of choice and personal accountability to our Creator alone, they would, as Christ's brethren, invite us personally and kindly to forsake the service of the Devil and join their ranks; and would assist us in the always painful process of 'translation' or transition as best they might. We never know the force of a kind word spoken to an inquirer. As our brother says, quoting from Paul, we should remember what we once were ourselves, and 'have compassion' on people as Christ had. He is our model. The least spark of faith was kindled at once by his 'gracious words.'

As to prayer, doubtless it needs encouraging always. It will never be neglected by faithfull men. The place is immaterial. There is the meeting place, and there is the privacy of the home. Both are places for prayer, and what is appropriate in one may not always be in the other. The place of prayer, proseuche (Acts 16:13) was only analogous to the meeting place or synagogues of the Jews. The Alexandrian Jews called their houses of prayer by that name. The place by the river gave Paul his opportunity, and Lydia her point of contact with the word of salvation. She 'worshiped God' according to her light; but Paul showed her a more excellent way. And Lydia, 'whose heart the Lord opened,' 'was baptized and her household,' and constrained Paul to accept of her hospitality, which, with his companions, he was pleased to do. We never know who God may send to us; but we hope to meet these at the end. Let us be jealous for the truth; but kind and considerate to worshipers in the 'outer court.'"

ECHOES OF THE NEBRASKA CONFERENCE

The following is clipped from the Kennard Enterprise:

"The twenty-eighth annual conference of the Church of God closed last Sunday evening, which was one of the most successful ever held. Hundreds attended during the week, and every moment of the time was enjoyed by the visitors and the local church. The speakers were all good. Robert G. Huggins, of Cleveland, Ohio, was the principal speaker, and was pronounced by many who heard him as the most clear, forceful and deepest Bible student they had ever heard. He is editor of The Restitution, and a man of rare ability. This was Mr. Adams' twenty-eighth conference with the Church of God."

At the conference the following resolutions were passed:

"Resolved, that we in Conference assembled extend our sincere thanks to our friends in and about Kennard for the hospitality and courtesy they have shown us while we were among them.

"Be it further resolved, that the foregoing be published in the local paper."

After printing these resolutions The Enterprise makes the following remarks on Hospitality

"Usually when an organization of a city or town succeeeds in bringing a convention of some kind that is State-wide and more the business men get together and make preparations to decorate their windows with the word 'WELCOME,' signifying to the strangers that they are welcome in their midst, sending them out over the State and into other States with the thought that they had visited an up-to-date and enterprising town, with a lot of courteous and obliging people in it. But such was not the case (onlyamong their own people) last week, when Kennard entertained several hundred people, and outside the organization that was instrumental in bringing them here we doubt whether the hospitality of Kennard people was strong enough to be identified by the strangers as 'hospitality.' Some people did recognize it as 'snobbishness' and 'ignorance.' Will Kennard ever wake up to the fact that a town is known by its enterprise and hospitality toward strangers? Hospitality doesn't mean standing on the street or in the home 'rubbering' and making remarks, as if you had never seen a stranger before, calling them the 'outfit,' etc. If such people can read, Webster's dictionary gives a splendid definition for both 'manners' and 'hospitality.' Oh, for a broader minded Kennard!"

CONFERENCE ANNOUNCEMENT

The annual conference of the Church of God in Indiana will be held at the Roll church in Bedford county, beginning Thursday evening, Oct. 9, 1913, and continuing over the Sunday following. The brethren of the Roll church desire to extend to others of like precious faith an earnest invitation to attend this meeting and lend them their aid in making it a success. A number of brethren have already signified their intention to be present, and we bespeak a goodly representation from the various churches in the state. This church is situated away from the railroad, and it will be well for those who go to write Brother T. R. Swindler at VanBuren, and he will meet you at Montpelier; or Brother Cantwell Drabenstott at Hartford City, who will meet you at that place. Isolated brethren are especially invited to come and meet the brethren and worship God together.

OBITUARY

"He Giveth His Beloved Sleep"

Fell asleep on September 3, 1913, Sister Mary Jones Wilson, the beloved wife of Brother Samuel Wilson, of Jersey City, N. J.

Words of hope and sympathy were spoken by H. V. Reed to the sorrowful friends in Chicago, where they were visiting at the time, and further services were held at the place of burial in the east. She leaves a noble son and his little family, besides her devoted husband, who are thus left to walk alone after a loving companionship of more than forty years.

Sister Mary was a beautiful character who was dearly loved by those who knew her well enough to appreciate her brilliant mentality and her moral charm, but we mourn not as others who have no hope, for "those who sleep in Jesus will the Lord bring with him when he comes." "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in the day when I make up my jewels." None can be lost and none forgotten, for both sea and land must yield his treasures up, when the trumpet call shall rend earth's graves and cleave the sapphire walls of ocean's depths.

Our sister is sleeping on her armor, waiting the dawning of that glorious morning when "all tears shall be wiped from off all faces." Thank our God for the golden promises which reach down into the very depths of the grave, and hold our dear ones in loving clasp, for this never failing chain is anchored to the very throne of God. "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me." Surely "the valley of the shadow" must be very sweet and restful with such company. And to us who mourn, even the furnace of affliction is a blessed place to be, when "the form of the fourth" is with us!

The night is far spent; the dawn will soon illuminate the hill tops of prophecy and promise, for "He who shall come, will come and will not tarry."

"When a darkened world shall brighten Underneath a bluer sphere,
And a softer, gentler sunshine
Shed its healing splendor here;
When earth's barren vales shall blossom,
Putting on their robe of green,
And a fairer, purer Eden
Be where only wastes have been;
When a King in kingly glory,
Such as earth hath never known,
Shall assume a righteous sceptre,
Claim and wear the holy crown
Brother, we shall meet and rest
With the holy and the blest."

ELIZABETH A. REED.

AMONG THE BRETHREN

Elder C. C. Maple

In company with Brother Frank E. Siple and Brother S. J. Lindsay we left the Adrian Bible School and journeyed to Oregon, Ill., for the Bible School and Conference of Illinois.

While there we taught one session of the Bible School daily, and spoke part of the time evenings. We had the pleasure of baptizing three at Oregon.

On Monday afternoon we journeyed to Waterloo, Ia., where the Iowa conference was in session.

We enjoyed a stay of several days with the brethren of this state, spoke several times and assisted in social services. Brother H. V. Reed, of Chicago, joined us here for several days. On our return we had the pleasure of spending a day at Brother Reed's home in Chicago. While there we also spent a day with Elder Wilson and family. A number of our Chicago brethren gathered in on Monday evening and gave us a very pleasant welcome.

On Tuesday evening we spoke to the church at South Bend, Ind., and found a number of interested brethren in that city. Wednesday was spent in the beautiful city of Battle Creek and Thursday at Dutton.

We are now ready for a meeting of days at East Hinton in Mecosta county. Our next meeting of the conference will be held in this section at Millbrook church, October 10, 1913.

We have found many good, interesting things to report from the fields visited, but space forbids mention of them here.

We trust that our young people may take up the Berean work more in our Michigan conference during the coming year. The prospect is good for the coming year in this field.

REPORT OF ANNUAL BEREAN BUSINESS MEETING

The fifteenth annual business meeting of the Illinois Bereans was held at Oregon, August 22, 1913. The meeting opened with a report by the president of the Berean work as gained by her visit to the various points in the state. No new societies were reported, but there were two new organizations.

The following reports were heard:

As we have not the use of a hall, except for preaching, we hold our meetings every Sunday at the homes of members. We held one meeting in September last and did not meet again until Feb. 9, 1913. We pay our dues into the state treasury and assisted the helping fund $2.50. We paid for three Berean Bible books. The interest has been very good and the attendance larger than usual.

Adeline Society

The Adeline society meets at the homes of the different members on Sunday mornings at eleven o'clock. We are studying the lessons in the new booklets. We have no new members, but while losing two members by removal, we have gained two. We have helped deserving ones during the past year and try to do our part whenever the occasion arises. MRS. MARY GESIN, Sec.

Chicago Society

The Chicago Bereans meet twice a month on the first and third Sundays of the month. We use the Berean books, our last lesson being Lesson 14.

On the first Sunday of the month we pay our dues and send one-fifth to the state treasury, but on the third Sunday we take up a collection, thus adding to our treasury.

We have written 53 letters to isolated members, distributed 925 tracts and given away nine books. Almost all of the tract work was done by two members. We have a membership of 8 with an average attendance of 6. Each member takes a turn in leading the meetings, and there has been a great deal of growth in that work.

We distribute dinners and money to the poor at Christmas and buy dolls for the Jewish mission. When a call comes for help we respond. We send a delegate to conference, send flowers to the sick, and send our dues with some extra to the state. JESSE N. WILSON, Sec.

Such a good report was given of the self denial of last year that the motion was made and carried that we make September our self denial month again this year.

It was decided that the president be sent again this year to all points of interest where her work is needed.

The following officers were elected for the coming year:

President, Anna A. Drew, 629 N. Galena Ave., Dixot, Ill.

BE OF ONE MIND

"Be of one mind" (1 Peter 3:8). "Speak the same thing" (1 Cor. 1:10). How can a number of persons of different temperaments be of one mind and speak the same thing? Only by having the mind of Christ. And how can we learn the mind of Christ? By meditation upon Christ's words. Those words cannot teach one thing to one person and another to another. Christ had one mind, which was harmonious with his Father's mind, and this mind is the same toward all persons. Then what shall we say of those who claim that it was "not intended that all should see alike in matters of religion"? The time is coming when "the Lord shall be king over the earth; in that day there shall be one Lord, and his name one" (Zech. 14:9). Since there is one God, and one Lord, and one gospel, and one faith, and one hope (Ephes. 4:4-6), it must have been the intention that all who are related to these unities should be of one mind and speech.—The Faith.

IF SHE HAVE BROUGHT UP CHILDREN

In the primitive church there were not only elders and deacons who had the care and charge of their interests, but there were also deaconesses like "Phebe, a deaconess of the church of Cenchrea;" and there was also an order of widows whose names were inscribed upon the church roll, and who were, to some extent, supported by the church, and who devoted their lives to the service and work of the Lord, like Anna who departed not from the temple, or perhaps like the windows of Joppa who showed the coats and garments which Dorcas had made "while she was yet with them" and was apparently engaged in caring for those who were in need.

Not all windows were to be included in this select company, but the apostle directs, "Let no widow be taken into the number under three-score years old, having been the wife of one man, well reported of for good works, if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work." 1 Tim. 5, 10.

Among the leading qualifications and prerequisites to the reception of a widow among this chosen company was this, "If she have brought up children." The same principle which forbade a man to be an elder or a deacon in the church unless he ruled well his own house and had faithful children, not accused of riot or unruly, also excluded any woman from this select circle unless she had had the training and experience which is only found in bringing up children. It does not say that she is to be the mother of children, that matter is in the Lord's hands, but she must have had a motherly heart, a heart which, looking out upon pain, poverty, and wretchedness, upon helpless infancy and neglected childhood, would go out in loving sympathy and yearning to save and bless them.

Not only do women bring up children, but children bring up women. They strengthen, broaden, and deepen their whole lives. The energy that before was spent upon trifles and fancy work, embroidery and ornamentation, finds a more healthful and more useful outlet in bending in tenderest affection over the suffering and helpless, ministering to the wants of those who do not even know the hand that feeds them, bearing with their petulance, enduring their waywardness, wiping away their tears, and comforting them in all their sorrows.

The man who has never trained his own children in the fear of God, who does not know how "a father pitieth his children," or who, if denied the blessing of offspring, has never reached out the hand of sympathy and love after some homeless child, is, according to the Scriptures, thereby debarred from exercising the pastoral office in the church of Jesus Christ. He may be talented and intellectual, he may be able and influential, but he is likely to be stubborn, opinionated, and unmerciful; he is likely to be a man who lacks the patience which a leader in the church of Christ should possess, and who has never learned in the school of affliction the lessons which are indispensable to the management and oversight of the flock of God.

So, also, that woman who has never brought up children, may be delicate, refined, aesthetic, and pious, but she is likely also to be nervous, fidgety, precise, angular, prejudiced, erratic and fanatical. She needs to have "brought up children," to have been balked in her undertakings, discouraged in her endeavors, outwitted in her plans, and made to comprehend the limitations of human will and human authority, that she may thereby learn to deal patiently with those around her, and to avoid that spirit of self sufficiency and self conceit which unfits her for a responsible position in the church of Christ.

It is only when her heart has been broken with sorrow and her eyes have been filled with tears; it is only when she has known the caress of motherhood, and duties of hospitality, and sympathetic ministration, that relieves the afflicted, and diligently follows every good work; that she is fitted to take her place among those honored servants of the Lord and his church whose lives have been more effective than the eloquence of orators and the controversies of theologians, and whose prayers to God have been mightier than armed legions and bannered hosts.—H. The Restitution

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:16, 18) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:28), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

"WITHOUT ME YE CAN DO NOTHING"

No. 2

ALICE B. CURTIS

Thou the vine art and we are the branches,
Help us ever in thee to abide;
For without thee we can do nothing,
But are worthless, and so cast aside.
May we bear much fruit for the Master,
And if sometimes he purge us full sore,
It is that we might be strengthened
And bear precious fruitage the more.

Dear friend, if you're trying to travel
This wearisome journey alone,
Remember the trials before you
Are greater than those you have known.
There's a friend that is more than a brother,
Who is yearning to call you his own;
And you can not afford to reject him
Who is heir to a kingdom and throne.

O what will you do without Jesus,
When summoned before the great throne,
And the Judge shall require you to answer
For deeds in this life you have done?
It is then you'll be helpless before him,
No name but his name will suffice;
He has promised to purchase your ransom,
And the loss of his life was the price.

Come out on the Rock, Christ Jesus,
Find the path God's people have trod,
That leads to the heavenly city
Whose builder and maker is God.
He will write his name in your forehead,
And give you the glad, new song;
And you'll see the King in his beauty
In the midst of his glorified throng.

PRAYER

Our Father, regard the unspoken desires of our hearts, we beseech thee, and may they come up acceptably before thee. If any of us have any special burdens today, if our minds are harassed by any perplexity, if sorrows of any kind weigh upon us, if those whom we love and whom thou lovest are sick, or if any of us are proving the weariness and the weight of this mortal life, we beseech thee that thou wouldst draw night to us, and strengethen and calm and comfort us, and listen to our desires, in so far as the granting of them may be good for us, and lift away the burdens that are pressing upon us, or upon those that are dear to us. And lead us into an enlarged place. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

No. 2

Chas. A. Goss

On the third day (Gen. 1:9-13) the dry land appeared by the gathering of the waters together "unto one place." This makes quite a different geography from what we have now. One vast continent is brought to our view. And so it continued until after the flood, for about one hundred years, and then in the days of Peleg "the earth was divided." "Peleg" means division, as we may learn from the margin of Genesis 10:25; he was named in commemoration of that great event. How consistent and reasonable the whole scripture account. In view of such vast and stupendous changes in the earth, how foolish for skeptical scientists to try to tell us about things about which they know nothing. We need no theories if we let the Scriptures be our guide and teacher.

At the fourth day God said: "Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven, to divide the day from the night, and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and for years" (Gen. 1:14). Thus were the sun and moon "set" to rule and measure the seasons and years; constituting the great Clock of the Universe; a time keeper that never runs fast or slow, never varies even a second from absolute accuracy. God set them right, giving each its special orbit, and the most accurate calculations of time only serves to confirm the literality of Moses' record. Wonderful as it may seem, nothing is more capable of demonstration than the exact time of the beginning of the "cycles" which began with the first week of human history. Based upon the infallible accuracy of the God given means of reckoning time, chronology teaches us that each of those "days" was one of our common twenty-four hour days. The cycles form an unbroken chain, reaching from the present time back to creation week without a break of a single day. Nothing can break this record, for those cycles reverse through them without error. No skeptic can explain away the astronomical fact that at the beginning of the second week of the Mosaic period of creation, the sun and moon were just seven days from their ecliptic emplacement. By these great bodies, which God gave to record "days," and "years," and "seasons," we see he has made their record confirm the written word of his servant Moses. They are in such a position in their orbit, and relatively to the earth, as they should be if their motions began with the command: "Let there be light," on the first day of creation week—a week of seven twenty-four hour days. On the sixth day Adam was created, and the record of Moses shows that Adam lived one hundred and thirty years before Seth, his third son was born, and that not only Seth but both Cain and Abel were also born after Adam was driven out of Eden. It shows also that "All the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years and he died" (Gen. 5:3-5). Hence it cannot be that the "days" of the creation period were any longer than the common days which succeeded them. Evening and morning succeeded in an unbroken sequence right down through all past time.

But some will say: "It looks too great a work to create all this great universe in six little days of twenty-four hours. Hardly reasonable," they say, regardless of what the record may say. Such objectors are apt to call on skeptical scientists who tell us that the "world" is millions of years old. We don't want to destroy any one's confidence in scientists unless we can give him something better. We are told to prove all things and hold fast that which is good.

It will be admitted, of course, that each "day" of the seven of creation week was of the same length; just as all weeks are, whether of days, weeks, months or years. But we must not include in the reckoning of that week anything which happened previous to the command, "Let there be light." What vast ages of time may have preceded that occurrence we have no means of knowing, and scientists can only conjecture. Regardless of the length of that period, all is covered by the first two verses of the first chapter of Genesis. Scientists have full liberty to speculate as to the duration of that period during which Moses tells us that the earth was "without form and void" or empty. "But," says the objector, "does not the Apostle Peter, in his second epistle say, 'One day is with the Lord as a thousand years?' Why not believe that the days of creation were something like a thousand years, then the length of time would seem more reasonable." The objection has very small semblance of reason if the whole of the text from Peter's epistle is quoted, for Peter also adds, "And a thousand years as one day."

Now if the text means anything at all it is evident that time, as men reckon time, is no limitation to the great creator, God. The trouble with many is that they don't begin at the beginning to believe the Bible. Who are we to say how long a time the Almighty creator of the heavens and earth must have to bring the void and empty earth into a habitable condition? The Psalmist agrees with the account given by Moses. At each day we read in Genesis: "And God said, Let there be, _____ and it was so." Read the 33rd Psalm. The Psalmist says: "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth. He gathered the waters of the sea together as an heap: he layeth up the deep in storehouses. Let all the earth fear the Lord: let all the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of him. For he spake, and it was, he commanded and it stood fast."

The power and glory of the creator is exalted throughout the 148th Psalm; and in the 5th verse he exclaims: "Let them praise the name of the Lord; for he commanded and they were created." What limitations shall man's mind set to the power of God, who can speak things into existence?

The Apostle Peter, to whom we allowed an objector to appeal, was just simple enough to believe the testimony of Moses and David, for he says: "The scoffers of the last days are willingly ignorant that by the word of God the heavens were of old and the earth standing out of the water and in water" (2 Peter 3:5). Read the word to Jeremiah (Chap. 32:27): "Behold, I am the Lord, the God of all flesh; is there anything too hard for me?"

Now let us pass on to the next, the fifth day. The great work of this day begins with the twentieth verse: "And God said, let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life (margin, soul), and fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven." The true "origin of species" lies in the words, "each after his kind," not in the Darwinian theory of evolution and the survival of the fittest. We have God's word for it that he made "the beast of earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and everything that creepeth upon the earth after his kind; and God saw that it was good" (verse 25).

The work of the sixth day—the whole animal kingdom—was crowned in the formation of man: "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness;" "So God created man in his image in the imagoe of God (Elohim) created he him; male and female created he them." We need not enter into a lengthy argument about the words "image" and "likeness" used in verse 27 in reference to the creation of man. A little exercise of reason, unbiased by theological traditions, will permit any student of the Bible to see that the image or likeness of anything only pertains to the appearance—to what appeals to the eye, not to any other qualities which may or may not be possessed by the image equally with the original. Hence all may see the folly of attributing an immortal soul to the man made in the image or likeness of the Elohim. The nature of man is distinct and separate from any question of his appearance; and we have man specifically called "mortal" throughout the Scriptures. And in harmony with this view the Apostle Paul says: "God will render to every man according to his deeds: To them who patiently continue in doing well, seek for glory and honor, and immortality—eternal life" (Rom. 2:7). Not all even of those who seek for immortality will get it, but those only who patiently continue in good works, and they only when God shall render to every man for his deeds.

That men are made in the image or likeness of Elohim or God is readily seen from Scriptures. In Gen. 18: "And the Lord appeared unto him (Abraham) in the plains of Mamre, and he sat in the tent door in the heat of the day. And he lifted up his eyes and looked, and lo, three men stood by him, and when he saw them, he ran to meet them from the tent door, and bowed himself toward the ground, and said, My Lord, if now I have found favor in thy sight, pass not away, I pray thee from thy servant." No one can read this chapter and not see that men and angels have the same form or appearance, and will appreciate what Paul says in Hebrew 13: "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." So, too, we find by reference to Philippians 2:6 that the second Adam, being in the form of God, did not seek equality with God, as so many now do by claiming a divine or immortal nature.

Genesis 2:2: "And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it, because that in it he had rested from all his work which God had created and made."

This may seem a strange thing that the creator should sanctify that day in which nothing was done above any of those of the great creative period. That he had some wise purpose we may be sure, for "He doeth all things well." Looking into his word for the reason, we find that he had first of all in mind the institution of a frequent and constant reminder to men of himself as the great creator. Secondly, he was mindful of his creatures' need of rest from labor and an opportunity to receive spiritual instruction and enlightenment of the mental and moral faculties of his nature.

In Exod. 20:10 we read: "But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt do no work." "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it." Here we see a continual reminder of his work of creation and a prescribed manner of recognizing him in the very observance of it. And as concerning the time in which the creation work was finished, mark that he says it was "six days." And man shares in the blessing of rest. Sabbath means "rest," and God gave them "Sabbaths" of various kinds, all pointing forward to the grand Sabbatic period - the rest that remaineth for the people of God (Heb. 4:9)--the seventh thousand years of human history and the great arch-type of all the Sabbaths.

May we all live so as to have a share in that grand consummation of all God's plans and purposes, to fill this earth with his knowledge and glory as the waters cover the sea.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPARTMENT

Witnesses for Jesus

Jesus had many witnesses, some of which bore witness of him thousands of years before his birth. The prophet and Old Testament believers, by their doing and suffering for God, gave testimony to Jesus. The apostles call them clouds of witnesses (Heb. 12:1).

The apostles are still more witnesses of the coming, the mission, the doctrine and the resurrection of Christ. Peter says: "We are witnesses of all things which he did in Judea and Jerusalem."

God himself bore witness of his Son in signs, wonders, divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Spirit, according to his own will. The angels also bore witness of him in various ways.

The Psalmist says God promised the house and kingdom of David shall be established forever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. As the moon is a faithful witness of God's covenant of the night (Jer. 33:20), so the house and kingdom of David shall be a faithful witness for Jesus. As the moon is subject to eclipses and manifold changes, yet abides in heaven, as a witness of God's covenant of the night, so shall the house and kingdom of David, who was a type of the Messiah, continue forever as a witness, notwithstanding the changes and calamities that befall it. The Lord says: "Ye are my witnesses whom I have chosen."

Dear brothers and sisters, let each of us strive earnestly to be one of those witnesses and chosen servants of the house of David. Let us search the Scriptures daily, and find how we may become a witness and servant for the Lord. We must believe or have faith, then the works, for faith without works is dead. Believe and be baptized into Christ, for as many as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ, and if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. Heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together. If we are joint heirs of Christ we shall share with him the throne of his father David, upon whose throne he shall sit (Luke 1:32). The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. My prayer is that we may all be faithful witnesses, do his will in all things, and let our light so shine before men, that they may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven.

Your sister in Christ, ROSA BOOSE.

When anyone is being tried for crime in the courts, witnesses are always called to testify, or tell what they know concerning the person and his crime. These witnesses are always those who have first hand knowledge; those who have either seen or heard directly. They are the proofs for or against the accused one.

The word comes from the Latin word videre, meaning "to see;" and means, first, one who beholds or has personal knowledge of any thing; second, to see or know by personal presence. By keeping strictly to the meaning of the word, no one can be a true witness of Christ but those who actually saw him on earth and talked with him personally. They alone furnish proof to the world that Christ existed, that he died and was resurrected, and that moral laws, given us by God, will work in us the perfect character he requires. They saw all these things accomplished in Christ, and therefore can testify of him that he is what he claims. Their testimonies or proofs are found today in God's word, stamped with his approval; and through the book they are just as much the only witnesses of Christ and his teachings as they were while alive. They accomplished their work of establishing the truths of Christ once and for all time, and there is no danger of these truths ever being obscured to those who want to see. Their testimonies are too strong and clear. While the privilege of being witnesses of Christ was given to his followers and associates, the privilege pointing these witnesses out to the world is given to us who see and accept their testimonies as truth. Our work is just as important as theirs was, for they are silent and helpless now before those who would destroy the truth unless someone points to their written testimonies.

In this secondary sense we are witnesses of Christ. How we should strive to be worthy of this privilege, being always careful to express the exact thoughts expressed by the witnesses originally. How little the world could accuse us then of trying to force our opinions, of being bigoted, etc. We should not be saying "My creed, my doctrine, my belief," etc. The "my" implies the right of ownership, and they are not ours but Christs. We can simply express our belief in them. In our work of keeping his witnesses before the world, let us be careful that we do not overshadow him with ourselves. Keep self in the background.

Just a few words now as to how we can be witnesses in the strictest sense of the word as the apostles were. We hear the teachings of Christ from his witnesses, and by applying these teachings to our daily lives we can know first hand how much worth there is in them. We can know if his moral precepts are practiced, if the hope we have of his return and the hope of gaining eternal life and the hope of working in his kingdom furnishes enough stimulus to induce us to purify ourselves from sin. "He that hath this hope, purified himself, even as he is pure," says one of the witnesses. We can gain first knowledge of this by trying it on ourselves. After getting this knowledge we can tell it to the world by words and deeds. In fact the deeds will have to come or we have no proof that the hope does the work. This is the kind of witnessing Christ needs now. There are many who have the form of godliness; they can tell all the rules of conduct and the articles of belief given to us by Christ, and profess belief in them; but by their everyday lives, they deny that these rules and this belief works in us the freedom from sin Christ promises. They have the form of godliness, but deny the power thereof. Let us be among those who have the form of godliness and affirm the power thereof by daily lives of right living, and thus be true witnesses of Christ and his power to save from sin and death.

ALTA KING.

WHERE SHALL WE SEEK PLEASURE?
1 Chron. 29:17

"I know also, my God, that thou triest the heart and hast pleasure in uprightness. As for me, in the uprightness of my heart I have willingly offered all these things, and now have I seen with joy thy people, which are present here, to offer willingly unto thee"

Brothers and sisters, this question is one that is asked very often, especially by the young people. We seem to think that because we are young but once, that we must take in pleasures that those belonging to the world would. But dear ones, let me tell you that when we are young is the time for us to fit ourselves for what is in the future. As one grows old, he or she follows in the way that they started in during their early life. Often I feel like David when he says in Psalms 5-3:4: "My voice shall thou hear in the morning, O Lord, in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up; for thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness, neither shall evil dwell with thee." Proverbs tell us that "He that loveth pleasure shall be a poor man." To be content with God is worth far more than money, for with money one is led astray and brought to the path that in time will bring them to destruction. We know that "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold. What greater pleasure could we find anywhere than in the law of the Lord? "Blessed is he that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth on the seat of the scornful, but his delight is in the law of the Lord, and in that law doth he meditate day and night." We can find comfort any time in the Lamb's book of life if we are true Christians.

Sometimes we feel discouraged and think that God has forgotten us; we have more sorrow than others. This is not so, dear friends. This shows that we are God's chosen ones. He is trying us, testing our faith and ability, for he is preparing us for a work in the future age. But dear ones, when temptations are put up before us, we should not go to earthly friends for comfort. Such comfort is for a short season only. Let us go to our dear heavenly Father in a meek and reverent way and ask him through prayer for comfort. If we are true Christians, as we should be, this prayer will be answered and we shall be one step nearer the throne of grace. What did Christ do when he was on earth and was tried for 40 days in the wilderness? Did he go about seeking men and women of the world to tell his trouble to? No, he ran the race with patient care, and today is seated at the right hand of God, as a mediator between God and man. If Christ, who was a man of sorrow, found joy in solemn prayer, why can not we do the same?

To me there is no greater pleasure than to study the word of God. For in it I find peace and joy. Luke 12:32 says: "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Paul tells us something about lovers of pleasures in 2 Tim. 3:4. He says they are traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof, from such turn away." For the Lord taketh pleasure in his people; he will beautify the meek with salvation. Therefore brothers and sisters, let us forget these earthly pleasures and keep ourselves firm on the foundation, which is Christ and the things to come, for the future life is what we are striving for. The poet says:

"Be quick to praise and slow to scorn,
For what the future holds, who knows?
Today the vine has but a thorn;
Tomorrow brings the rose."

Let us so live that we can say: "For I am now ready to be offered and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me, a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." Amen.

WHERE IS MR. FIDELLE?

J. August Smith

"Mr. Fidelle is dead:" so we all believed and so the papers reported, stating that Mr. Fidelle had fallen from a ladder and in the fall his neck was broken and he was killed. This report all believed to be true until we came to the church-house when those having the funeral services in charge said: "Mr. Fidelle is now in heaven with God." Also at the grave it was said, "We lay our comrade here to await the resurrection of the dead."

I do not know what was thought of these contradictory statements, this duality of Mr. Fidelle; being located both alive in heaven, and also dead and buried; for surely Mr. Fidelle was not twin personages, but a unit, just one person—one man. After the burial, some one asked the question: Where is Mr. Fiddle? but no answer came. Then again the question was propounded to others, "Where is Mr. Fidelle?" "Is he yet alive, and in heaven above, as we heard in the meeting house? or is Mr. Fidelle in the cemetery?" "Well," said one, "I suppose his spirit has gone to heaven and his body is buried."

"But," asked the same questioner, "Is the spirit of Mr. Fidelle Mr. Fidelle?" No reply came. The same question was put to another, on their way home, who replied rather evasively, "I will tell you after I eat my supper." Then I thought, why is this so? are they afraid to locate Mr. Fidelle? Did they not know him in life for years? and had they not been his comrade during the civil war? Most certainly. When Mr. Fidelle was living they could locate him here, there, and yonder, as the case might be; but now that he is dead, his locality had vanished as by magic. If one Mr. Fidelle is dead and buried, and one Mr. Fidelle is alive in heaven above, the once one Mr. Fidelle has become multiplied or divided into two beings; so that it has become very difficult to locate Mr. Fidelle. One Mr. Fidelle was killed in the fall, and was buried; and one Mr. Fidelle escaped the stroke of death and ascended alive to heaven to be with God.

So the question "Where is Mr. Fidelle," has become so complicated that they are entirely unable to locate Mr. Fidelle. If the spirit-Mr.-Fidelle is alive and is now in heaven with God, the body-Mr.-Fidelle never saw his counterpart; and the spirit-Mr.-Fidelle never saw his twin, the body-Mr.-Fidelle. Mr. spirit-Fidelle would be an entire stranger to himself, if he is alive and in heaven with God; and never having seen himself until the body-Mr.-Fidelle died, he would be a stranger to himself, and would have to ask: "Who am I? and from whence came I?"

This immortal spirit entity, and an immortal soul entity in man, is enough to confuse every intelligent inquiring mind. It is no wonder that reasoning people are confused and do not know what to believe! The ministers of that belief have been so taught, and for certain reasons best known to themselves, repeat the same fairy story they learned in the schools as though it were true. But some of these days the monument to be erected in the cemetery where Mr. Fidelle is buried, will tell us the truth, and locate Mr. Fidelle in the grave, and point out to us the day of his death.

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again,
The eternal years of God are hers."

But why not believe the Bible history of man? which says: "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7). "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was (before man was formed) and the spirit ("That is, the breath which God gave him." So reads the margin of Job 27:3) shall return unto God who gave it" (to Adam) (Eccl. 12:7). All that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth" (John 5: 28, 29). "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust" (Acts 24:15). "For if the dead rise not then is not Christ raised. * * * then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished" (1 Cor. 15:16-18).

Not to make this article too long, I will just repeat what is written in the book of Gen. 49: 29-31. "Bury me with my fathers, in the cave that is in the field of Ephron the Hittite; in the cave that is in the field of Machpelah, which is before Mamre, in the land of Canaan, which Abraham bought with the field of Ephron the Hittite for a possession of a burying place. There they buried Abraham and Sarah his wife; there they buried Isaac and Rebekah his wife; and there I buried Leah." "And when Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons, he gathered up his feet into the bed and yielded up the ghost, and was gathered unto his people." "For his sons carried him into the land of Canaan, and buried him in the cave of the field of Machpelah, which Abraham bought with the field for a possession of a burying place, of Ephron the Hittite before Mamre" (Gen. 50:13).

What is here said of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, their burial and location in Machpelah's cave, may as truly be said of Mr. Fidelle, as to his burial and location in the east side cemetery, in the family lot chosen by Mr. Fidelle before his death. There he is, as there they buried Mr. Fidelle. —Our Hope.

Katabole is associated in every instance of its use with the term "kosmos" (world); while themilios is never so used. In other words, the term "Foundation of the world" is exclusively associated with katabole, never with themelios. Not only so, but it is found that the phrase "foundation of the world" is always governed by one or other of two prepositions, pro (before) and apo (from). So the ten instances where katabole is used with kosmos are divided into two groups, viz: "From the foundation of the world," and "Before the foundation of the world." Thus we have a dividing of time.

In Job 38:4 the Septuagint uses thermelios.

EDITORIAL

Brother O. J. Allard writes that his address this winter will be Chatsworth, California. Brethren concerned, please take notice.

Brother J. H. Anderson writes that he is engaged to hold a debate with a Seventh Day Adventist minister. Panoplied with the "perfect (whole) law of liberty" (Jas. 1:25), we know that our Brother Anderson will prove a David to this Goliath of the Philistines.

Brother R. H. Judd, refering to an article by himself, which recently appeared in The Restitution, says: "I would like to point out to our New Zealand friend he will find the same peculiarity of language that he mentions in Gen. 19:24 is more than once used. A careful reading of Gen. 18 and 19 chapters will show this, and the incongruity of our friend's construction. "Three men appeared." Have we, then, any right or reason for supposing one of them to be God himself? Angels, sometimes in scripture, are represented as men, but does scripture anywhere apply this term to God? The angels are of God's creation, but the Lord Jesus was divinely begotten. If this be so, none of the three visitors could be God.

"One of the strongest proofs (to my mind) against the trinity doctrine, is the fact that Paul tells us 'He (Christ) now liveth by the power of God,' that is, by virtue of his resurrection. He owes his very existence, he liveth now by the power of another, namely, the power of God."

Infidels masquerading as higher critics think it is incredible that Peter, impulsive and erratic, should speak and write infallibly. But it is written that Peter was filled with the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:4; 4:8). Of what advantage was it to his readers and hearers if that gift did not prevent a mixture of truth and error? Some designing critics tell us that the admixture of error was in a mild form—not sufficient to negative the truth. Wild assumption! Hard unbelief! Flies in the ointment of the apothecary cause it "to send forth a stinking savour" (Eccl. 10:1). The compromising critic that inoculates the word of God with error "in a mild form," would not drink a cup of tea if it had one fly in it! One fly would spoil the whole cup of tea for him, but he will drink, he pretends, "the water of life" full of dead flies and errors of all kinds! He is more concerned about his tea than God's word! Friends, let us reason diligently. A part of the spirit's work with Peter was to "testify and exhort" (Acts 2: 10; 1 Pet. 5:12); therefore his testimony and exhortation were infallible. Why haggle about that which Christ decisively settled? Speaking of the operation of the spirit upon the apostles, he said: "When the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth." "All truth" must necessarily exclude error. "But," says the critic who is bent on corrupting the word of the Lord, "The text you have quoted does not refer to personal matters." Bald assumption again. Did not Peter and the other apostles when cited before kings and rulers refer to personal matters? Why should not the spirit have guided them in these matters? The Lord says it did so guide them: "It is not ye that speak but the Holy Spirit" (Mark 13:11). Oh! that men had more faith in God, and a less exalted idea of their own blundering intelligence; more concern for the word of God than for their own tea!

BIGAMOUS

Mrs. Wood had been indoctrinated from her youth with the cardinal doctrines of orthodoxy, heaven at death, consciousness in death, etc. She had married a pious man from her standpoint, and she had raised her only child, a daughter, after the strict sect of her religion. Unfortunately for her, but fortunately for her husband, he was smitten with an incurable malady and died, or rather went to heaven. Notwithstanding this event called death had crowned him with glory on the throne of God, Mrs. Wood was excessively sorrowing her husband's demise, and wore black to give public expression of her grief. As she sat silently in mourning she heard footsteps approaching her from the dining room, and Nellie, her only child, sweet and curly headed, came in with smiles on her face.

"Mother," she said in a cheerful, childish tone, "there was a big fuss in the city last night. I have just been reading about it in the paper."

"What was it, my dear," asked Mrs. Wood as she wiped away a tear that came stealing down one of her cheeks.

"Why," said Nellie, "the big fuss was about John. Smith. The paper says that he has two wives. Why does a man, in having two wives, cause a big fuss, mother," asked the little daughter, innocently and anxiously.

"Let me have the paper, love, for you have evidently mistaken some word in reading the report. Yes, I see now, the paper says John Smith is bigamous. That means that he is guilty of bigamy."

"Bigamy," repeated Nellie; "what does that mean?"

"That means a person who has two wives or two husbands at the same time. Such a person is called 'bigamous,' not because he causes a big fuss, as you supposed, though that sin always causes a fuss."

Satisfied with her mother's explanation, Nellie went back to play.

Next morning early Mrs. Wood said to Nellie: "Come, Nellie, go with me to my husband's tomb. I have some flowers that I want to place on his grave."

"Is my papa your husband, mother? Is he out in the cemetery?"

"To be sure," said Mrs. Wood, slightly distressed by the question.

"But I heard the minister say the day of his funeral," Nellie persisted, "that papa, who you say was your husband, had gone to heaven. Do you believe that, mother?"

"Most certainly, child. You amaze me, Nellie."

"I am a little confused, mother," Nellie went on; "for you said when we left home for the cemetery that your husband was there, and you were going to place flowers on his grave. Now you say he is in heaven. Are you bigifuss, mother?"

"You mean bigamous," said Mrs. Wood, in a spirit of criticism.

"Yes," replied Nellie; "that is the word; you said it meant a person who had more than one husband at the same time. Now if you have one husband in the cemetery, and another in heaven, and was married to both of them at the same time, it seems to me that you are bigifuss. It is awful to be bigifuss, mother," said Nellie, as her mother disappeared on the side of the street, remarking that the forest and grass were very beautiful.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Restitution:

I was at our conference held at Havanna, Ark., beginning August 14. Brotherly love was manifested, and the coming glory and increase of God's kingdom was beautifully set before our minds by able speakers. It was my privilege to be present from Thursday noon to Monday noon. Three services were held daily until Sunday evening, when Brother Morgan, after preaching, led the way about three-fourth of a mile to water, and there he baptized six more into Christ, making eleven in all. Thus we left the meeting in progress.

R. A. HUMPHREYS.

Dear Brother in Christ:

In the paper of August 12 Sister Rena Endsley has voiced, to some extent, my ideas on the important subject, the support of the spreading of the gospel. Of all people in the world, why should we be backward or stingy in this respect? It seems to me we could not be if things were arranged as they should be.

It may be that most of those holding these truths are poor, but many littles make much, and constant systematic giving even of what the poorest would not miss, would count up, and surely the faithful workers would not be stinted as they are. I do not believe we are under the same rules that governed Abraham, or the Israelites under the law; I believe that we ourselves, with all that we have, belong unreservedly to him who bought us. God has left it to our own hearts what we do for him, and I do hope that we may say truthfully that of "all our silver and our gold, not a mite would we withhold" from the one whom we adore with our whole hearts. Still, tithing seems a good, well-tried method of giving, and would not rob even the poorest. Even a tenth is better than nothing; and put all together and managed right, would work wonders as others have proved. I believe we need a way opened. It is easy to bring gifts, such as we have, into the treasury, if we knew, as did the Israelites, where the treasury is. It is true we have the poor always with us, but some of us are as poor as anyone we know; and if the truth were known sometimes, much poorer than the beggars who are so eager to gather in all we can give them. To those of us who are really in the race for the prize of our high calling, nothing the world holds can be compared to it in value, and we only want to know our duty in this as in everything, and how we can do it, I believe. If a general fund were established, and all who are willing would give each week according as we had been prospered, such fund to be distributed by faithful brethren wherever it was determined the need was greatest, much could be done where now the work drags.

I know how foolish suggestions from one like we may sound, but a thought awakened may be worked over by wiser heads and grow into something better. Though I have a hand to mouth existence, dependent on daily toil, with very poor health, I feel that I ought to give, and I have felt for a long time burdened with a sense of duty undone in this respect. I enclose a mite, which I hope will reach you in time to go into the Nebraska collection for work there, as Nebraska was once my home.

In hope and much love to all, and wishing you every blessing for all time,

Your sitser in Christ,

ALICE ADAMS.

(This letter was written for the Nebraska Conference, and was read before the meeting there. It was ordered published by the Conference, but Sister King forgot to include it in her report. Hence it appears belated and somewhat inopportune.—Editor.)

Dear Brother Huggins:

Please allow me space in the dear old Restitution to make a short report of the work that has been done by our brethren in the states of North Carolina and South Caroline this summer. On July 17, Brother J. H. Anderson, of Troy, Ohio, remembered his brethren and sisters in the state of North Carolina with a visit. He was among them about one week, comforting them and strengthening them with the word of God. From North Carolina Brother Anderson came to South Carolina and visited with the church of God at his old home place, Guthrie Grove. Here Brother Anderson was met with a hearty welcome. His stay among us was a pleasant one, every brother and sister being glad to see his face once more and to hear his comforting words concerning the kingdom of God soon to be established on the earth.

As a result of our meeting this year our pastor, Elder A. N. Durham, has had the pleasure of baptizing ten into the all-saving name of Jesus; eight at the close of the meeting conducted by Brother Anderson and Brother Durham, and two others later on. The names of the persons baptized are as follows: David Bowen, Eddie James, Tommie Pack and our pastor's son, George, Sisters Mrs. Hicks, Mrs. Mattie Chandler, Mrs. Cleo Williams, Miss Othello Pack, Miss Neva Chandler and James Harris, Jr. We hope and trust these dear ones will hold out faithful unto the end of their journey through life, and find peace and rest unto their souls at last.

The writer, with other brothers and sisters, visited two of the churches of God in North Carolina this summer. We hope our visit did good. There were eleven of our party who visited the church at King's Mountain: Elder A. N. Durham, Bros. J. S. Brewez, J. H. Pack, Frank Chandler, Prof. G. M. Pack, James Pack, Sisters Lulie Chandler, Lala Pack and myself, and two friends, Mr. Shirley Garrett and Truman Smith. We were all truly glad to find the brothers and sisters at that place so earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, also glad to find our dear old Brother Ball, who has been an invalid for several years, still able to be carried out to church to hear the comforting words of the holy scriptures explained. Their pastor, Elder Jeff Waters, was with them for three days and gave some very interesting discourses. He was compelled to leave the services in the hands of Brother Durham on account of his appointment at another place. Brother Durham preached some of his best sermons to these people; and we feel sure great good has ben done by his earnest efforts to hold up the truth.

At the close of the meeting at King's Mountain Brother Durham, Brother Brewer and Brother J. H. Pack returned to their homes, while the rest of our party made their way to Liberty, N. C., where we enjoyed ourselves for two days and nights among the brothers and sisters of that place. We arrived at Brother Clabe Freeman's Friday evening, about six o'clock and spent the most of our visit with his family. On Sunday we went to church, where we met many others of our faith, whom me had never met before. We were truly glad to meet Elder Lida and hear him preach. Brother Lida is getting old, but is still faithful at his post, preaching the word. We were sorry our visit was too short to see the homes of all the brothers and sisters around old Liberty. But we are farmers and our work called us home. We hope to have the pleasure of visiting those brethren again when we will have more time to stay.

Your sister in the one faith,

EMMA L. PACK.

REPORT OF THE IOWA CONFERENCE

The twenty-sixth annual conference of the Church of God met at Waterloo, Ia., August 23-31. The weather was delightful and the camp grounds prettier than ever. The people of Waterloo have built around and beyond us and the camp ground property has become quite valuable.

The meeting was unusually good and intense interest and enthusiasm was manifested from the beginning to end. The sermons were glorious, inspiring and instructive, and all left with a determination to do more for the Master this coming year, and to live nearer and more in harmony with him than ever before.

There were about 225 in attendance, 11 States being represented: Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, South Dakota, Illinois, Ohio, Kansas, Indiana, Louisania, California and Ontario, Canada.

Many faces were missed that had been in attendance for years, and it made our hearts sad to note that some were kept away on business; some of our young folks have married and moved far away; some were kept away by sickness, and some have gone to their long rest, and we will see them no more until Jesus comes. On the other hand, many faces were new; some who were there for the first time, and others who had not been for four or five years, and it encouraged us greatly to see so many new faces.

It is to be regretted that every member of the Church was not in attendance. The Conference Board tries to get the best speakers available, regardless of expense. Men who have made the study of the Bible their life work, who are deeply religious and whose only aim in life is to teach the gospel in its purity, to help and encourage those who have taken on the name of Christ, and to bring others to see these precious truths; and all should make an effort at least once a year to hear these speakers.

The daily program was carried out as announced. At 8:30 a. m. a children's meeting was conducted by Alma Roose and Adella Starbuck. The stories were taken from the book of Genesis and the lessons of obedience to God and parents were taught. The children were very much interested and happy in the class, and Sisters Roose and Starbuck did very good work with them. However, the girls say they hope to improve on their methods next year, and make it even better.

At 9 a. m. a business meeting in which the work of the last year was reported, and best methods of doing the work for next year was planned.

10:30 a. m., a sermon.

1:30, a Berean class for young people was taught by Brother Eldred Marsh. The lessons were taken from the Berean book, and not only were the doctrines taught but it was requested that the young people be taught how to teach lessons. There was quite a large class, and the interest very good.

2:30, another sermon followed at 4 p. m. with a question box conducted by Sister Todd, in which questions of interest, not only on doctrine but on practical living, were discussed. The discussions were very interesting and of a great deal of value, and considerable light was thrown upon different subjects.

The social meetings at 7 p. m. were of unusual interest. Good leaders and subjects on practical daily living made many of us examine ourselves to see if we were doing all that we should as Christians. The day closed with another sermon at 8 p. m.

Seven preachers were in attendance, besides Brother A. J. Eychaner, who will always be first in the hearts of the people of Iowa for his many years of excellent teaching, his devotion to the principles of Christ and his noble example, and Brother Eldred Marsh, of whom we are justly proud in his rapid advancement in his life-work, and O. J. Allard, our president, all of whom gave excellent discourses. We had with us: F. L. Austin, of Fonthill, Ont.; C. C. Maple, of Ohio; Frank Riple, of Louisiana; Anna Drew and H. V. Reed, of Illinois.

Brother Austin was no stranger to us, having been here before and all who heard him then were looking forward to a spiritual feast when he came; and in this they were not disappointed, for he is the same brilliant and logical speaker he was before. His sermons were a series of thought, commencing with "What Made Us Christians," showing how we become new creatures in Christ, the work of the church and our responsibility as the first born, and the glory of the bride of Christ in the age to come. Brother Austin is a deep Bible student, and brought many new ideas to us that will be food for thought for many days to come. It is hoped by his many friends in Iowa that he will be with us often.

C. C. Maple, the evangelist of Michigan, gave some valuable sermons on first principles, commencing with "What Shall I Do to be Saved?" He showed the importance of believing the gospel and of obedience. Brother Maple is an earnest, logical and convincing speaker, setting forth the evidence of the doctrines so plainly that any one can comprehend them. He is a sincere and devoted Christian; willing to do anything in the Lord's work to make a meeting a success in the spiritual way. His willingness to help in the different meetings, his good cheer and enthusiasm did much toward making our conference a success. Michigan is to be congratulated in getting Brother Maple for their evangelist.

Brother Frank Siple gave one discourse on the "Race for Life," a splendid sermon and full of thought, especially for the young people who are starting in the Christian life. Brother Siple has unusual talent for a man of his age, and it is to be hoped we can keep him in the ministry, as few beginners are so well qualified as he is for this work.

For years we have hoped to have Brother H. V. Reed with us, and this year we were not disappointed, neither in the manner in his sermons, for Brother Reed won the hearts of all present from the first. He is a speaker of marked ability, a pulpit orator that few if any can excell, combining in his personality that rare trait of fire and enthusiasm with gentleness and sympathy. He gave three excellent discourses: "The Man of Galilee," "The Glory and Gloom of Jerusalem" and "The Three Worlds," and each was a masterpiece in itself. He has a deep knowledge of the Bible, history, science and archeology. His delivery is easy and natural, and yet magnetic and inspiring. With rare skill and power, truth after truth is brought out in such a way that it is not easily forgotten. He has been in the work sixty-one years, and is a man among men. His heart is in his work, and out of his eyes shine one sublime purpose—to help and elevate humanity and raise the standard of the Christ that all seeing and believing might be saved. It was a great pleasure and honor for us to have Brother Reed with us, and we hope the Lord will give him many more years of usefulness and that he may be with us soon again.

A vote of thanks was given to all the preachers and Anna Drew and all other visiting brethren who contributed largely to the success of the conference; also to the Table Committee for their work and their splendid management in entertaining the brethren. Also to Mrs. G. P. Allard, Jr., for the excellent music and her untiring efforts with the choir which rendered the best music we have ever had as a choir at the conference; to Eldred Marsh for the exceptionally good services he gave us the last year as evangelist, and to O. J. Allard, our president, who leaves nothing undone that will add to the comfort and pleasure of the brethren, who is cordially at the command of all and who does everything for the good of the conference.

I would like to give a synopsis of the different sermons, but lack of space forbids it in a report of this kind. However, it was an exceptionally good meeting; all who went were fully repaid; the loss was to those who were not present. It is to be hoped that everyone will try to be present next year and receive their share of these spiritual blessings.

Submitted in faith, hope and love.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:16, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3.21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints condjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:28), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

THE GOSPEL TRAIN

A Memorial of Brother J. S. Hatch

The gospel train is coming! I hear it just at hand,
I hear the car wheels moving and rumbling through the land;
I hear the bell and whistle coming around the curve,
She's plying all her steam and power and straining every nerve.

O, see the gospel engine, she's heaving now in sight;
Her steam valves they are steaming, the pressure is so great;
No signal for another train to follow on the line -
O sinner, you're forever lost, if once you're left behind.

O see the engine banner, she's fluttering in the breeze;
She's sprinkled in the Savior's blood, but yet she floats with ease;
This is the gospel banner, her motto's new and old;
Salvation and repentance are burnished there in gold.

She's nearing now the station, O sinner, don't be vain,
But come and get your ticket and be ready for the train;
The fare is cheap and all can go, the rich, the poor are there,
No second class on board this train, no difference in the fare.

I think she'll make a little halt to mood upon the line -
And give you all a chance to go, but yet she'll make her time,
She's coming around the mountains by the rivers and the lakes;
The Savior he's on board this train controling steam and brakes.

PRAYER

Teach us to pray, O Lord, breathe thy holy desires into our poor hearts, and when we come to thee may it not be to bring our own wishes or to try to force them upon thy providence, but may we bow ourselves before thee, and the deepest meaning of all our prayers be "not my will, but thine be done." We thank thee that there is so much of which we can be sure, that when we ask it we are asking according to thy will, and pray that we may most earnestly wish for and aim at such things as we are certain thou dost delight to give, and dost delight when we wish them. May we have Christ in our hearts, may our characters be daily becoming more and more conformed to his soverign and perfect beauty. Amen.

PRAYER

"Be not anxious about anything; but in everything let your petitions be made known to God by prayer and supplications with thanksgiving" (Phil. 4:6, Diaglott version).

We are surely living in a remarkable age; intense activity prevails on every hand. The prophet Daniel declares that in the latter days, or the "Time of the end," knowledge shall increase and men shall run to and fro. Never in the world's history has this prophecy been more fully realized than now. On every hand we observe men rushing here and there, with a feverish anxiety, strivingt o surpass their neighbor in the accumulation of wealth and fame. Remarkable inventions and discoveries in the scientific world are opening up new and larger spheres of activity that our forefathers of a generation ago never dreamed. Many and diversified forms of charity, institutions and seats of learning are being established and endowed that seem to suggest to the thoughtful mind the dawn of a better and glorious day.

This intense spirit of activity is contagious, and we of the church of God, who have been begotten by the Spirit of the Truth, to walk in "newness of life," taking our dear Redeemer and elder brother Jesus as our example, are liable if we permit this spirit of unrest and activity in worldly things to come into our lives, of disregarding and forgetting our relationship and connection with the unseen and eternal. Nevertheless, each of us must perform our part faithfully in the great drama of human life, and in doing this influences will flow into us as well as out of us, influencing and in turn being influenced by all that we become associated with. Our hearts should always be aspiring for higher and better things. To accomplish this we must realize the presence of the spiritual as well as the material. While our hands are performing the duties of our daily lives in providing things honest in the sight of all men, we should lift up our hearts and voices in prayer, praise and worship to the unseen Eternal—the Eternal God, our loving heavenly Father and Savior.

Our Lord declared that "God heareth not sinners;" and the prophet tells us that God is "Angry with the wicked every day." So then he who prays must be in harmony and fellowship with God, or God will, as the prophet also declares, cause a cloud to come between himself and the petitioner, so that "his prayers may not pass through."

But what is prayer? Prayer, my beloved brethren, is to ask God for what we need, to return thanks for what we receive, to implore forgiveness for our sins. It means seeking from God guidance in every difficulty; strength when we realize our weakness; wisdom as we appreciate our ignorance in seeking to know God's mind and will as revealed in his word. Prayer is seeking aid in discharging our duties towards our fellow-man, so that we may know "How to do good unto all men, but especially unto those who are of the household of faith." It means to invoke God's blessing upon our endeavors to spread the knowledge of the truth as "the truth is in Jesus." It means to abandon ourselves and all whom we love, trustfully to our loving heavenly Father's care and protection.

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire,
Uttered or unexpressed;
The motion of a hidden fire
That trembles in the breast.
Prayer is the burden of a sigh,
The falling of a tear,
The upward glancing of an eye,
When none but God is near."

How often when our daily task is done, and we lay the cares of the day aside as we retire in secret to be alone with God, then prayer seems to us to be our very life; it brings God into our very presence, and like a child in the presence of its parent, we pour out our hearts to God, in language simple, yet freely; so confidingly, yet joyously; so naturally, and yet so real. And as we pray we find it begets in us the spirit of devotion, so that he who finds his very being filled with this spirit, knows what it is "To worship God in spirit and in truth," striving to do with all his might whatsoever his hand may find to do.

Prayer will, if faithfully and constantly exercised, enable our minds to rightfully divide the word of truth. It will fill our hearts with warmth as we meditate on the love of God, as the various features of his great plan in selecting a people for his name unfold themselves to us.

Prayer helps us to form and keep our good resolutions. It enables us, in the hour of trial, to overcome temptations, and it will help us to be patient towards all men, developing the spirit of love in our hearts, so that day by day we may manifest the spirit of Christ; for if we have not his spirit we are none of his.

Prayer brings to us the sense of God's presence, so that we strive hourly to put away from us all low, unworthy, selfish purposes and desires, and endeavor so earnestly to fill our minds with noble, lofty, holy and pure desires and purposes.

How often our sensual passions and appetites have ruled us with such desperate power; how often we have fallen; how often we have cried out like our beloved brother Paul: "Oh wretched man that I am; who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" But as we prayed relief came, and rising from our knees we exclaim: "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God but with the flesh the law of sin." And then when victory is ours we still pray, and before long we realize in all its beauty by actual experience, that "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit. For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."

If we could but realize the value and importance of prayer as the channel through which God waits to bestow upon us his blessing and the consciousness of his approbation, we would by faith feel that his almighty hands lift us up, inspiring us by his own sweet gentle spirit to strive to do better. How often his word reminds us, as we pray, that he is more willing to give good gifts to those who ask him, than earthly parents are to give good gifts to their children? Beloved brethren, God is able to do all this and much more if we will but ask him in simple and trusting faith. Our God, the almighty and eternal one, has by the word of his power created all things, and surely the earth is his and the fulness thereof and the glory of the firmament also. God has invited us to "Ask and ye shall receive; seek and ye shall find; knock and the door shall be opened unto you."

When we were baptized into the death of his dear Son, when his glorious name, "the Lord our righteousness," was placed upon us, even as we arose out of our watery grave, God by his spirit filled our hearts and minds with new aspirations and hopes, and do you think our dear heavenly Father will mock us by refusing to recognize the simple and loving child-like trust we place in him, as the result of these hopes and aspirations moving and directing our prayers? No, never! Blessed be God, he will and always does honor the simple trust of the humblest and weakest of his children.

Sometimes we feel that our prayers are but a poor effort. If we could but pray and take hold upon God like brother or sister so and so, then we think the blessing would be ours. Dear brethren, prayer, like all the graces of the Holy Spirit, is a gift; it must be sought for; we must feel our need; and at first, like a child, our request may be expressed by a few simple words. Frequent exercise will develope this gift of prayer. We must spend much time in secret alone with God. Our beloved Master spent all night in prayer, alone with God, upon the mountain side. Sometimes we wonder from whence came his wonderful power that enabled him to pass through every city and village, preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God, which moved men to say: "Never man spake as this man." It was because he spent so much time alone with God in prayer. Beloved brethren, let us resolve to do likewise. Let it be known that we are those who pray, and then I am sure it will be said of us, as it was of old, "They took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus."

To work for human appreciation is to court hurt and disappointment. Ingratitude, misunderstanding and unjust criticism are sure to meet us sooner or later, however generous our purpose may have been, or however pure our motive. We must work for a higher wage than human approval or we shall find ourselves poor indeed. To do right for right's sake, for Christ's sake, holds the only assurance of reward that shall not fail.

A LETTER TO A SEVENTH DAY ADVENTIST

Your letter is received. It finds us about as usual, but nearer the end of the race. Was glad to hear that you and family were well, and are able to enjoy all of the good and perfect gifts (that never were in heaven); but as Jesus, our best gift, cometh down from the Father of lights, I am sorry that we can't agree on this Bible subject, as we always did on any other dispute that came up. We have never failed in coming to the same conclusion by reasoning together. I think the only reason that we can't do the same on Bible subjects is that you have perfect faith in Ellen White's vision (or dreams), and I can't believe them.

You say (partly through her): "There is just as good evidence of a personal devil, that at one time lived in heaven, at peace with God, as there is of a personal God." Again, you say: "There is just as much evidence of the personal pre-existence of Christ as there is of God's existence." As it is difficult for me to write, not being able to sit up much of the time, I will only give in a brief way, a few of the many obstacles that arise from such belief.

First, if there was actual war in heaven (where you expect to live for a thousand years), would it not be just as well for you to stay here where you belong (Prov. 10:30), for you may get to heaven just in time of another war. Another obstacle is that mortal beings that are subject to death should live in heaven where God's throne is located, and being cast down to earth by the time man was created, and have, regardless of being mortal, gained many times as many followers as God and Christ have gained. We must believe the devil is mortal, for we read that he and his works shall be destroyed. We read in James 1:14: "Every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his lust and enticed."

Now a few obstacles that are in the way of believing that Christ had a personal pre-existence before he was born of the Virgin Mary. John 1:12: "In the beginning was the (unlucky for your theory it says the word instead of Christ) and the word (not Christ) was with God, and the word (not Christ) was God." 14th verse: "And the word (not Christ) was made flesh and dwelt among us." If the word was Christ before it become flesh, read it Christ instead of the word and see what sense (or nonsense) you make of your reading. Regardless of the awful threat in Rev. 22:18-19, against him that adds to God's word, you take chances of adding to, and calling the word Christ, before he was born of the Virgin Mary. Justly, according to that addition, you say that Christ created and made all things, by himself and for himself, thus leaving God the Father nothing to do with the things of this planet. But speaking of Jesus in Luke 1:32 we read: "He shall be (not always has been) great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David." How plain, but extremely foolish, if Christ (instead of God by his word) created and made all things by himself and for himself. Luke 12:32: "Fear not little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Is God like some men, very free and generous with things belonging to another, or does everything that he created by his word (not Christ) belong to him? 1 Cor. 15:24: "Then cometh the end, when he (Christ) shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father." This sounds as though all things did not belong exclusively to Christ.

Another obstacle is that a mortal could be the creator of all things. We both believe that Jesus died—all there was of him—hence he was wholly mortal. You say (without Bible authority) that he was immortal, but took on him the nature of mortal man. If I believed that an immortal being was subject to death from any cause, I would not make the effort that I do to get immortality. According to your theory of Christ's personal pre-existence, you reasonably say that it was Christ (called God) that wrote the ten commandments on the tables of stones, and gave all of the rest of the law to the fathers by or through the prophets, which is proper and right for a creator and owner to do Now see what is said of the law giver in Heb. 1:1-2: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by (or through) the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." A different source than when he was giving the law. According to your theory of Christ, words could not be spoken to make it more plain that Jesus had a Son, which neither of us can believe. But to say that God the Father was the creator and giver of the law, all is plain and harmonious, no adding to or subtracting from it is necessary. You ought to see what your theory leads to by saying that God's word was Christ, before it became flesh. The false theory puts me in mind of a man that tells a lie and then has to tell a score or more lies, trying to get out of the first lie; but he fails, for each lie adds to the difficulty and makes a bad matter worse. It is surely easier to believe the truth than it is to believe error; that is, if one tries to build on either; for the material that is cut to fit perfectly cannot be used successfully when building on error.

I hope you will quit trying to build on Ellen White's dreams, which are so very belittling to God the Father; even though she found by her dreams that Christ is the creator of all things, she also found that he made some mistakes while on earth, and she has succeeded in getting many to believe he did make mistakes; such as his words to the inquiring lawyer (Matt. 22:37-39) who asked: "Which is the great commandment?" Jesus told him that love to God was the greatest, and the second is like unto it, "Love thy neighbor as thyself." In one of Mrs. White's dreams she saw the ten commandments on the tables of stone in heaven, and the Sabbath command shown out much brighter than any of the others. Here is one of Jesus' mistakes, for she found that the Sabbath was the greatest command.

Another mistake was that Christ failed to tell people to keep the fourth commandment. I would be glad if I were able to tell you of the many plain statements of scripture that are impossible to harmonize with the theory that God's word was Christ, and had a personal pre-existence, no telling how many thousands of years before he was born. With you I at one time said it is no difference what one believes on that subject. It was surely great ignorance, for it is a mistake to say or think that of any Bible subject. It may not make much difference how frail and defective our foundation is if we never build on it, but it is every Christian's duty to build and know what they are building on.

I will stop for this time, hoping that you will take no offense at my plain way of writing, for I have written with lots of love for you and the truth. Hoping the time will soon come when we shall see eye to eye, I remain as ever, your true friend. G. W. CALDER.

IN THE LIGHT OF THE CROSS

We all started upon our journey of life in darkness. Are we still gropping about in the same darkness, or are we now traveling in the light of the cross? If still in the dark, let us hasten our footsteps in these last days, and in meekness and humility fall at the foot of the cross, and seek forgiveness at the willing hand of God.

As soon as we accept of Christ we are forever guided in his footsteps, which lead us into the marvelous light. Life without him is a journey down a rugged path full of briers and thorns; yea, even the valley of the shadow of death. With Jesus as our guide, life is a primrose path where the thorns are covered with roses, and flowers upon the thistles grow.

As we travel on showers of blessings come to us like streams from living fountains, and from the Master's smiling lips comes the reply: "Lo, I am with you always." In the valley God's promises spring up beneath our feet like fragrant flowers blossoming into truths.

The more we travel in the divine light of the cross the more we can exercise mercy, tenderness, and forgiveness, blended with equity and justice, and the more clearly we can see infinite love revealed. Without Christ it is impossible to escape from the chasm of sin into which we have fallen. He became a "man of sorrows," suffered and died, that we might be partakers of everlasting life.

Christ says: "I am the way, the truth, and the life." If we are not walking in the way which he leads, we are going away from eternal life; if we do not believe the truth he teaches, we do not believe the word of God, and if we are not seeking the life he sought we shall never reign with him. Can we look upon him, while on the cross, and be willing to despise his sacrifice?

Beloved, let us go to him and pray that he will wash us whiter than snow, that we may be able to put on the white robes of righteousness and sit on "the great white throne."

"Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputed not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile" (Ps. 32:1-2).

Let us, therefore, keep in the light of the cross, whose path leads to glory and the throne which has the sure foundation of righteousness and judgment; and when our journey is over may the hand that was nailed to the cross lift us up that we may dwell with him in light and life forever.

DIALOG ON IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL

Mr. Oracle—How is it, Mr. Christian, that you claim that there is no immortal soul in man, when the whole Bible is full of the idea?

Mr. Christian—I question your assertion that the Bible is full of the immortal soul idea. Can you give me a few references which will prove what you say?

Mr. Oracle—Oh, you know I'm not a preacher and can't give chapter and verse like you are always doing. But all the denominations get their belief from the Bible, and their most talented preachers preach sermons to prove that doctrine of the soul.

Mr. Christian—Well, Mr. Oracle, I used to think as you do that the Bible was full of the idea, that the soul is immortal. I had such confidence in the preachers learning and knowledge, and such faith in their honest convictions that they were preaching the true Bible doctrine, that I was willing to accept their word for it without personal investigation—just taking it second hand. But when you come right down to it, is there such an expression as immortal soul in the whole Bible?

Mr. Oracle—As for the matter of that, I can't recall one just now. Still the idea must be there.

Mr. Christian—I have a number of different translations or versions of the Scriptures, including the Diaglott, the Revised and others, and also Young's Concordance, and in none of these have I been able to find such a thing as an immortal soul referred to.

Mr. Oracle—Perhaps not, Mr. Christian, perhaps not! although I had never thought it possible. Still, it may be that the idea is there, nevertheless. It may not be positively asserted and dogmatically set forth, you know, but clearly implied and understood, being taken for granted as a premise too well established to require such enforcement.

Mr. Christian—I see you have the very common impression that some kinds of knowledge are simply absorbed and don't have to be taught like other things.

Mr. Oracle (interrupting)—Yes, that's it exactly. Why we are born with the idea of being immortal, I believe. It just seems reasonable that it should be so, being a natural endowment. Why I think the soul is everything. All our mental attributes are but functions of the soul. It is that which works within us to will and to do; it's the man himself—the personality pertains to the soul.

Mr. Christian—I hardly think you are keeping in sight of your first propostion. You started out with the bold assertion that "the whole Bible is full of the idea" that man has, or is an immortal soul. Now you are practically admitting that you had just supposed that to be the case because of the fact that many others believed it and preached it. How do you know that they had any better foundation for their view than you had? Isn't it quite likely that they, like yourself, and just as I at one time did, omitted to get their religious convictions from the Bible direct?

Mr. Oracle—Perhaps you are right about my not studying my Bible enough. And, as you say, I've taken others word for it. When I come to think about it, there is something strange and unreasonable in the assumption that man is inherently immortal, for when we consider that it is a fundamental doctrine, it would only seem reasonable that we should have no need to assume that it is true, or get it by inference.

Mr. Christian--Your reasoning is quite correct from a Bible standpoint. If we have a Scriptural view on any subject we can express the same in Scriptural language. The Word is a lamp unto our feet and a light to our path. It's the only source of our light on any subject.

HOLIDAYS

Eccles. 5:18-20

1. The writer of Ecclesiastes was a disappointed man. He had craved life's joy. He had found little of it. Wealth, position, leisure, and keen desire had been his; but they had brough him little satisfaction. Partly this was because he lived in an uncertain age, when the rapacity of rulers and the suspicions of neighbors embittered all with doubt and dread and loss. But, chiefly, human life is not designed for mere pleasure and the satisfaction of natural appetites. It is designed for higher things, and the pleasure seeker and joy hunter is inexorably thwarted, coming at last to feel that "all is vanity and vexation of spirit." The experience of Ecclesiastes, like that of all other sincere souls, finds its full expression and explanation in Jesus Christ. "He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it" (Matt. 10:39).

2. The practical teaching of Eccles. 5:13-20 is rather obscure. But it seems to be this: Wealth, a "portion," labor, a career and income as we might say, are one thing; the power really to get joy out of them is quite another thing. The two do not by any means always go together. Enjoyment is a special providence, "it is the gift of God." But when that divine gift of real joy does come, then all the varied toil, and disappointment, and hardships fade from the memory. The music in his heart banishes all the dulness and pain before. And in fact this is true. The mother who has suffered, stinted herself, toiled, watched, and been racked with anxiety during many years for the sake of her son, when she sees him strong and good and pure, taking his due place honorably in the life of the world, finds that all the past burdens were light, and darkness vanishes in a glorious sun-rising. Old suffering and the recollection of toil is benumbed under the influence of God-given joy. Indeed, the previous hardship is a condition of real zest in happiness. The pampered youth who has never labored, but always pursued pleasure, finds nothing to delight him. On the other hand, the honest worker's few holidays glitter with a beauty, and fill him with a satisfaction which cannot be measured.

3. What has been written above is not to be taken as a full exposition of the true relation between life, with its toil and disappointments and joy. It is only a small and limited bit of the truth. Ecclesiastes is very narrow in outlook and one-sided in teaching. The whole truth would have to set out that larger Gospel doctrine that life, in all its ranges of experience, in its toil as well as in its holidays, may be full of joy. Christianity makes the astounding discoverey that a man may "rejoice always" (1 Thess. 5:16). Jesus declares that we may be so reconciled to God as to find even poverty, ill-treatment, and reproach states full of bliss. What we have to do is to bring the two great truths together and to see that while communion with God makes all precious, we may also have times and occasions of special joy and refreshment, holidays in which God answers us in the joy of our hearts.

4. All true holiday joys are God-given. Last week I was crossing the Baltic from Trelleborg, in Sweden, to Sassnitz, in Germany. It was nighttime, and the train in which I lay in a sleeping car had been thrust bodily into the huge ferry-boat. Unable to sleep, I went on deck. It was a wonderful, still night of marvellous beauty. The sea slept, as did my fellow-passengers. A crescent moon rode majestical in the heavens. There were no clouds, and innumerable stars shone out as though greeting one another across immeasurable vastness. One star of greater brilliance than the rest cast a path of silver on the sea, not so bright as that of the moon, but delicate, wistful. To the west winked a lighthouse, and to south and east were lightships. After hours the dim white cliffs of Rugen showed, and the dark forest-clad slopes. All was a silent, mystic beauty, that seemed to have some strange and happy secret to tell. It was not dead but living, that vast surrounding world. And the joy of it slid into my heart, and I knew it was God answering. All true holidays are of this order. Nature, companionship, solitude, whatever makes a holiday, is not only God's gift, but God's presence.

5. The most obvious limitation of the outlook of Ecclesiastes is his pre-occupation with himself. That explains his despair and disillusion. The selfish person cannot hear God's answer fully or completely. For much that God tells the leisured heart is told to be passed on. It has as its theme the wider world and the salvation of the suffering, and the eternal pity. People who have no pity and no desire to save miss these exquisite messages as an untrained ear misses the subtler harmonies of great music. God's holiday message is a message of love, and it can best be received by lovers and those who love with the love of Christ hear most of it. It was on a holiday journey that Jesus revealed himself as Messiah to his apostles, and also told them of his approaching sacrifice (Matt. 16: 13-23).

EDITORIAL

Believe what you will, it does not change the facts. God's word is the only authority.

Look to your self, and you despair; look to God, and you hope.

Word from Sister Juergensen reports that Brother Juergensen is recovering from his operation nicely. We all rejoice at the good news.

It is always more easy to remain ignorant than to learn. At first it is more pleasant, but in the end it turns to shame and pain, while knowledge is the way to swetness, honor and life.

If you pile on too much fuel you are in danger of quenching the fire. Moral: smother not the awakening interest of the stranger by an over display of your knowledge of the truth.

We are saddened by the announcement just received that Sister Mary C. Railton, wife of Brother Albert Railton, of Fonthill, Ont., died Sept. 21, in the fifty-sixth year of her age. Funeral was held at the Church of God in Fonthill September 24. We are hoping the obituary may reach us in time for publication next week. We join the numerous band of brethren, who know Brother Railton, in expressing our love and sympathy in his great loss. Let us remember him, his family, and the many relations of Sister Railton, in fervent prayer.

There is at least one preacher in Akron, Ohio, who has, in our western vernacular, good sense. The Ministerial Association has given an invitation to Billy Sunday, the baseball evangelist, to hold meetings there, and "Rev." F. C. Sherman, the sensible pastor of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, protested, and said: "Sunday may do some good for a brief while but in five years the town and churches are worse off than before he came. The people miss the excitement. Their pastors can't talk slang like Sunday, they can't take off their coats; their people begin to call them old fogies, and drop out of the church. I have more faith in the men who are working for the salaries we ministers get than in the vaudeville evangelism of a man who is a millionaire."

FELLOWSHIP AND FORBEARANCE

The Church is the house of God, the pillar and ground of the truth (1 Tim. 2:15), the sanctuary and the true tabernacle, which the Lord has pitched and not man (Heb. 8:2). It is God's building (1 Cor. 3:9). He has reared it in the midst of a waste, howling wilderness of unenlightened humanity, in a desert where death holds supreme sway on every side. It is on a journey toward the promised land. Its constituent elements are men and women in the flesh, all, more or less, instructed in the truth of God; all, more or less, endeavoring to perform the will of their Father, who has called them out of the surrounding darkness in which they were born, into the glorious light of his salvation, all, more or less, failing, through the infirmity of the sinful nature they have inherited from Adam, to keep the commandments of God. Such is the ecclesia during its wilderness probation, its portable, tabernacle phase. A community of men and women enlightened in the purpose of God, having in their midst faith, hope and charity, in living manifestation, although there may be associated with them those who are weak or sickly, or even asleep, is a divine institution, ordered and appointed of God—in fact the only organization at present upon the earth with which the eternal Jehovah is interested. They are his sons and daughters and he is their Father, and Christ their elder brother and high priest.

To be admitted into such a community is no light matter. No man can of himself enter; he must be called to the membership by God. To turn one's back upon an ecclesia of the living God is a step so grave and momentous that it is not to be taken unless the case is clear beyond peradventure that all spiritual life has departed from it, that it has openly and in a most flagrant manner time and again repudiated the doctrines and commandments of Christ. An ecclesia may become as corrupt as that of Sardis, which had a name to live only, but was dead, yet for the "few names" it may contain who "have not defiled their garments," it is to be carefully considered. Jehovah would have spared Sodom, a great city, and with it the cities of the plain, had there been found only ten righteous men in it; how much greater consideration he bestows upon a congregation of men and women who hear his name, even although they offend in many things, is seen in his dealings with Israel—long-suffering, patient, tender, kind—and in those words of Christ to the ecclesia at Sardis.

To understand the almost inexhaustible patience and carefulness one must have for an ecclesia, let him read the epistles of Paul to the ecclesia at Corinth. When he penned these two remarkable letters the conditions of affairs among them was so grievous, so full of trouble and bitterness, so antagonistic in many instances to the precepts of Christ, that many brethren, now-a-day, did such a state of things exist in the ecclesia of which they were members, would consider themselves justified in remaining away from the meetings to commemorate the death of Christ, and would do so, having taken personal offence at the matter, or they would withdraw themselves and form a separate meeting.

Paul's attitude to the ecclesia in Corinth is a guide for us. Turbulent and factious as the ecclesia had become, yet Paul writes them, "Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building" (1 Cor. 3:9), and in his salutation he sends them "grace and peace from God and from the Lord Jesus Christ," and remembers with thankfulness their good parts and prays for them that they "come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 1:7, 8).

From Paul's letters we learn that the ecclesia in Corinth was divided into four distinct parties, each one claiming to be right in the name of its chosen head. One claimed Paul, another Apollos, a third Cephas, while a fourth declared themselves to be of Christ, and they, evidently, were the smallest and least influential in the meeting. The apostle expostulate with them in the effort to induce them act in accordance with the truth. "Now I beseech you, brethren, by our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." They had in active operation among them, convulsing the ecclesia daily, "envying, strife and division" (1 Cor. 3:3). They were proud and arrogant (1 Cor. 4:6, 7, 8); they permitted a notorious act of fornication to pass unrebuked, and even condoned it (1 Cor. 5:1, 2). They wronged one another and went to law one against another, and that before the unjust (1 Cor. 6:1, 6-8). They maintained, in some instances, an open connection with the idolatry which they had left when they became Christ's (1 Cor. 8:7-10, 14); they turned the Lord's Supper into a season of feasting and debauchery (1 Cor. 11:21, 22); "some among them said there was no resurrection of the dead," even although the resurrection of Jesus was the case in question (1 Cor. 15:12-20).

Notwithstanding these grievous offences against our Lord Jesus Christ, Paul did not withdraw himself from them. He did not rail against them. On the contrary, his letter, in which he prefers these serious charges, involving both doctrine and walk, is full of anxious, loving care, solicitation, and without presumption. He pleads with them in all wisdom, seeking their reclamation from the errors. He praises them fully whenever he gets the opportunity, and when he learns that his first letter has produced a change in them of a godly sort, he sends them a second in which he declares them his "epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men; forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God.

No comment is required here to make manifest the true way to act when an ecclesia is involved in the question of fellowship. It is the house of God, and where it has only two or three who come together in the name of Christ to commemorate the great love wherewith he has loved his friends, there Christ has said he would be present, and although anger, strife, envy and bitterness fill the minds of those who may have also come to keep the feast, yet their feeling and attitude cannot affect those who worship God in spirit and in truth. The "wood, straw, hay and stubble" of an ecclesia lie for the present in intimate relationship and connection with its "gold, silver and precious stones" elements, and the day of Christ alone will make their true characters manifest. So, says Paul, "Judge nothing before the time, until the Lord comes, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts, and then shall every man have praise of God" (1 Cor. 4:5).

When Moses raised in the wilderness the tabernacle of the congregation, he placed within the veil of the ark of the covenant, on which he put the mercy seat, and over it the Cherubim of Glory; and the angel spake these words to him: "And there will I meet with thee, and there will I commune with thee from above the mercy seat, and from between the Cherubim" (Exod. 25:22).

Christ is our mercy seat, and between the Cherubim of glory he communes with us, when we come to meet with him in our ecclesial capacity, the anti-typical tabernacle of the congregation. Our fellowship is with him; we go to meet with him to our accustomed place Sunday after Sunday. We do not go because brother this or brother that is going; and when we go, we should remember that Christ is present, and our minds should be filled with the solemnity of the occasion, and our hearts fit before him whose eyes are as a flame to penetrate their secret depths, and our attitude should be one of devoutness and godly fear. The presence of Christ is a solemn occasion, and into that presence we come when we assemble in one place to commemorate his sacrificial death. "There will I meet with you, and there will I commune with you."

Editor's Reply

Above remarks on "Fellowship and Forbearance" are ably, interestingly and sweetly written by a loved writer. It may be that the disparagment which this article gives to hasty withdrawals of fellowship will have a sobering effect upon some who need it. Every Christ-minded brother and sister will gladly respond to the definition of the church as a divine tabernacle pitched "in a waste howling wilderness;" they will give a hearty "Amen!" at the suggestion of "almost inexhaustible patience and carefulness" in dealing with such an institution." Heartily as we endorse the first part of our writer's article, yet we feel that some words of caution are needed lest some of our readers draw wrong deductions from Paul's attitude towards the Corinthian church. The writer of "Fellowship and Forbearance" has argued on that attitude in a way which nullifies Paul's express directions in other cases. Much as we admire the spirit and intention of our correspondent, we cannot close our eyes to the fact that much plausibility has been used that is purely speculative in foregoing remarks.

Now as to Paul's attitude toward the Corinthian church, we say, to partly use the language of another, that Paul had authority which he could use with decisive effect in case of need. It was authority he had received "not for destruction but for edification" as he said; but still it was authority which he has prepared to use, "since ye seek a proof of Christ speaking in me" (2 Cor. 13:3). He could say: "If any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man and have no company with him" (2 Thess. 3:14). We all know that men having authority in any matter to fall back upon, are naturally patient and gentle to a degree not so easy where there is nothing but argument and equal influence to set against the teaching of opposition. This has to be considered in judging of Paul's tone and attitude towards an ecclesia in so corrupt a state as the Corinthians. But as to the right attitude towards such corruptions in the abstract, we must gather them where that is the subject in hand.

Paul recognized the original character of the Corinthian ecclesia as "God's building," and argued against the various corruptions and doctrine and practice that prevailed at the time of his writing. But he did not mean that these corruptions were to be disregarded in fellowship. On the contrary; in the case of fornication referred to, he said: "Put away from among yourselves that wicked person" (1 Cor. 5:13). He found fault with them at their indifference, and that they had not "rather mourned that he that hath done this deed might be taken away from you" (verse 2). His argument goes powerfully against retaining such: "Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? Purge out therefore the old leaven" (verse 6).

When he says, "Judge nothing before the time" (1 Cor. 4:5), he is speaking of the brethren's personal judgment of himself—a thing forbidden concerning all brethren, and a thing that cannot accurately be done. He is not speaking of ecclesial attitude to wrong doing. He does not mean that we are to shut our eyes to manifest disobedience or denial of the truth in our own midst. On the contrary, he makes the enquiry as if to something well understood and notorious: "Do ye not judge them that are within?" (1 Cor. 5:12), that is, in the cognisance of manifest evildoing, to the extent of refusing to eat with any man called a brother who is a fornicator, etc. (verse 2). So, though he argues with some who denied the resurrection, we are not to conclude that he regarded such a denial as compatible with a continuance of fellowship if persisted in. We must judge on this point by expressions directed expressly to the question of how error persisted in is to be dealt with. On this he does not speak ambiguously. Even to the Corinthians, referring to an approaching third visit, he expresses the fear that he should be found such as they would not like. He only writes in the tenor of apparent toleration, "lest," says he, "being present, I should use sharpness according to the power which the Lord hath given me to edification and not to destruction" (2 Cor. 13:10). "Shall I," enquires he, "come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness?" (1 Cor. 4:21). Being absent now, I write to them which heretofore have sinned and to all other, that if I come again, I will not spare" (2 Cor. 13:2).

In other epistles, the indications are quite explicit (and it cannot be that he contemplated our ignoring what he says in one epistle because of what he has said in another). To Timothy, he plainly says, "Withdraw thyself" (1 Tim. 6:5) from a class of professors whom he describes as "proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words," who "consent not to wholesome words even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ." He also says: "Avoid profane and vain babblings and oppositions of science falsely so called, which some professing have erred concerning the faith" (verse 20). He also advises him to shun certain "babblings" personated by Hymenaenus and Philetus, "who concerning the truth have erred, saying the resurrection is past already." To Titus he says: "A man that is a heretic after the first and second admonition, reject" (3:10). To the Romans: "Mark them who cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned and avoid them" (26:17). John speaks plainly to the same effect: "If any man bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house" (2 Jno. 9-10). And the messages of Jesus to the seven Asian ecclesias are all more or less in the same strain.

It is all according to reason; for if we were at liberty to ignore departure from the faith and practice of the Gospel, it would certainly happen in the long run that both must vanish from our midst. Friendliness would indispose a man to be critical; decay would set in as the result of the indifference. Thus the ecclesia would prove the reverse of the pillar and ground of the truth. No community can ever hold together that winks at the denial of its own principles. It cannot be that the foregoing article is intended to advocate such a thing, or to inculcate anything opposed to something so obviously scriptural and reasonable as the maintenance of the faith and practice of the Gospel by the refusal of fellowship where they are denied.

What must be intended is the discountenance of individual secession from an ecclesia on insufficient grounds. Against this mistake the argument is powerful, and will be upheld by every discriminating friend of the truth. We perpetrate a wrong against Christ if we separate ourselves from his brethren on the ground of some personal grievance against one or more in their midst. There is a right remedy for this; and if from any cause, we cannot apply it, let us forbear. In such things, we are to practice the "almost inexhaustible patience and care" spoken of, and even in matters of error, we must be quite sure the wrong is espoused, and give every one an opportunity of repudiating the wrong, before we resort to the extreme and irrevocable remedy of separation, by which we throw the issue entirely on the final judgment of Christ. There may be cases in which we have no alternative, but it is far better if we can settle differences before we meet him.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Restitution:

I am thankful to God today that I again have the wherewith to send for the continuation of our good paper, The Restitution; for in all the land there is none like it for pure Bible doctrine. If all of our brethren enjoy its weekly arrival as I do, they have a feast. As I am alone here, looking for the coming of the Lord, and though I am far away from the good brethren, yet they are brought very near to me by the paper. I feel the good cheer that comes from all along the line, when they all show their faith in the coming of the Lord. Let us all be faithful that we may enter into the Lord's blessed rest on Sabbath.

NEXT ZION CONGRESS IN JERUSALEM

Pittsburgh, September 15.—Palestine for the Jew is no dream-bubble and that the next biennial Zionist conference will be held in Jerusalem was the message to several hundred Jews in the Zionist Institute by Rabbi A. M. Ashinsky of the Washington street synagogue.

"We do not do enough to bring about the ideal Zion," said Rabbi Ashinsky. "You are a great people and with a great strength—all you need is more self-respect. You have had great men, but the Jewish race did not receive the credit for them. Their works are lost to our race under the names of their adopted countries. Zionism has accomplished more in the past thirty years than it did in the 1,800 preceding years, and the Zion is no idle vision. We will realize part of that dream when we hold the next biennial conference in the city of Jerusalem."—Jewish Independent.

WAS PHARAOH DROWNED?

The concurrence of opinion on this question seems to be that Pharaoh escaped death in the Red Sea while his army was utterly overthrown. The principal evidence given is that the king's body has been found in the valley of the kings near that of his father (Rameses II).

Notwithstanding this evidence of the king's escape, the writer is inclined to believe that the ruler of Egypt shared also the fate of his army. The following reasons are given:

1. Pharoah left Egypt at the head of his host. "And he made ready his chariot, and took his people with him" (Ex. 14:6).

The king in person commanded the army and his foolhardy conduct during the plagues leads us to expect nothing better than an insane act at the Red Sea.

2. Victory would have been incomplete without the death of Pharaoh.

In ancient times the capture or destruction of the king in battle was the crowning event of victory, therefore if the ring leader in Israel's oppression escaped, their triumph would have been only partial.

Again, if God executed judgment upon all the gods of Egypt (Ex. 12:12, the person of the king did not escape, for he was an object of worship.

3. The Psalmist plainly says that Pharoaah was destroyed. "But overthrow Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea; for his mercy endureth forever" (Psa. 136:15). Ex. 14:30 reads: "And Israel saw the Egyptians dead upon the sea shore." It is not therefore difficult to see that Pharaoh's body could have been recovered and placed in the tombs of the kings.—Crisis.

TALES FROM ROMAN "APOSTATES"

Priests who "apostatize" by leaving the Roman ministry, whether or not they join some Protestant denomination, tell the same sordid story of priestly simony, debauchery and immorality. Chiniquy, Rosenberg, Crowley, Fraydryssa, et. al., brave and brainy with morals clean as a hound's tooth, do not vary one sentence in their testimony before our court of public opinion. This agreement is the more strange, if their stories, as Romanists allege, are a tissue of lies. Stranger still is the fact that victims of such slanders never seek justice in a libel court, nor give to the public, in their denials, reasonable grounds for these tales told out of school. One thing is true; these so-called slanderers are not liars in other matters, and why are they such falsifiers only when Romanism is concerned?

But let the case be reversed. Suppose Romanists told such "lies" on Protestants, what do you think would likely happen? Enough to fill many pages of some court journal. You may be sure many Catholic editors and priests would flee the country, or file a petition of bankruptcy mighty soon. Romanists' cowardice or indifference to justice, of a libel court, the bulwark of every outraged American citizen, is hard to explain; for the reason that no explanation, unclouded with deep guilt, can be made.

Another fact in this matter is very noticeable by any one who reads both sides of every question. When a Protestant preacher joins the Roman priesthood, they never give, as a reason for so doing, the licentiousness and corruption of their former associates. If Protestant denominations are as low in social and moral standards as the Roman Catholic, why don't Roman converts tell the same tales as do their apostates? But who ever heard of a Catholic convert writing books to expose Protestant morals? No one. If the Roman church is infallible, as she boasts, in religion or morals, why this eternal exclusiveness and opposition to public investigation and criticism? No form of justice suffers from the sunlight of public investigation, and he who turns on the light is a friend to liberty and justice. Rome's most unanswerable logic to these facts is in the form of a brick from the back alley, and he who argues with her must be prepared for unfair blows dealt below the belt.—Menace, Sept. 13, 1913.

PAUL'S DOCTRINE OF THE ADVENT

G. L. Young

Paul was a mighty man, profound, logical, spiritual. He was the great theologian of the New Testament. He taught profound things concerning sin, justification, regeneration, adoption, resurrection and the like.

But there was one theme that delighted his soul, that thrilled him with a glad transport of holy joy. This was the doctrine of the advent, of the return of his Lord from heaven. As to this doctrine, we may see that—

1. He believed it, heartily, firmly, gladly. This is manifest throughout his writings.

2. He taught it. He did not hold back this great truth. He did not consider it something to be held lightly in the secret recesses of his own heart as a source of gratification to himself alone. Rather by voice and pen he instructed others concerning its reality, beauty and utility.

3. He taught it as real, personal and visible. No impersonal advent, no mystic or secret coming, no invisible spiritual presence filled his vision. He had seen his Lord. He expected to see him again, coming gloriously and personally from the skies. Thus it was the Lord himself who was to descend from heaven (1 Thess. 4:16).

4. He loved it. Of this there can be no doubt. It was then that he expected his crown, together with all others who likewise have loved their Lord's appearing (2 Tim. 4:8).

5. He viewed it in its practical bearings. (a) As an object of hope, as in Titus 2:13. (b) As an incentive to holiness, as Rom. 13:12-14; 1 Tim. 6: 13; Titus 2:11-14. (c) As an incentive to Christian activity, as Rom. 13:11; 1 Cor. 15:58; Gal. 6:9.

6. He taught that it was to usher in the resurrection (1 Cor. 15:53; 1 Thess. 4:16, 17) and the judgment (Rom. 2:16; 1 Cor. 4:5), to bring the righteous crown (2 Tim. 4:8) and introduce saints into glory (Col. 3:1). Truly with this great theologian, the doctrine of the advent was a great doctrine.—Crisis.

"To be a strong hand in the dark to another in the time of need, to be a cup of strength to a human soul in a crisis of weakness, is to know the glory of life."

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-53); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

A NEW VERSION

Suggested By Some Modern Methods of Church Support

"Make not my Father's house a house of merchandise" (John 2:16).

O Lord, I come to thee in prayer once more;
But pardon if I do not kneel before
Thy gracious presence, for my knees are sore
With so much walking. In my chair instead
I'll sit at ease and humbly bow my head.
I've labored in they vineyard, thou dost know;
I've sold ten tickets to the minstrel show;
I've called on fifteen strangers in our town,
Their contributions to our church put down:
I've baked a pot of beans for Saturday's spree,
An old-time supper it is going to be;
I've dressed three dolls, too, for our annual fair,
And made a cake which we must raffle there.
Now, with thy boundless wisdom, so sublime,
Thou knowest that these duties all take time;
I have no time to fight my spirit's foes,
I have no time to mend my husband's clothes;
My children roam the streets from morn till night,
I have no time to teach them to do right.
But thou, O Lord, considering all my cares,
Will count them righteous, also heed my prayers.
Bless the bean supper and the minstrel show,
And put it in the hearts of all to go;
Induce the visitors to patronize
The men who in our program advertise.
Because I've chased these merchants till they hid
Whene'er they saw me coming—yes, they did.
Increase the contributions to our fair,
And bless the people who assemble there;
Bless thou the grab-bag and the gypsy tent,
The flower table and the cake that's sent;
May our whist club be to our service blest,
The dancing party gayer than the rest;
And when thou hast bestowed these blessings, then
We pray that thou wilt bless our souls. Amen.

PRAYER

O Lord, our loving Father, who hearest every cry from thy children's lips, and dost satisfy all desires which thou thyself hast implanted, help us we, beseech thee, truly to draw near to thee; and to our waiting spirits may the heavens be opened and the sight granted of Jesus at thy right hand. May we reverently bow before thee and lovingly long after thee. In our praises may our hearts rise in gratitude to thee, and in our meditations may the light of thy Spirit shine upon thy Word, and in our spirits. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

PRAYER

No. 2

He continued all night in prayer to God" (Luke 6:12).

We sometimes hear this remark: "Brother So and So is a man of prayer." Jesus was emphatically so. The Holy Spirit was "poured upon him without measure," yet he prayed.

We often wonder and ask ourselves the question: "For what did Jesus pray?" Rarely, indeed, are we admitted or made the confidant of the secrets of his inner life, yet we know that all his public acts were consecrated by prayer; his baptism, his transfiguration, his miracles, his Philip Henry has well said that his last breath Philip Henery has well said that his last breath "was praying breath." Our dear redeemer's life may be said to be one in which he prayed without ceasing. The habitual attitude of his heart and mind towards God was one of continual prayer. How deeply sacred the prayerful memories that hover around the solitude of Mount Olivet and the shores of Lake Tiberias.

He seemed often to turn night into day to redeem moments for prayer rather than lose the blessed privilege. What power this continued attitude gave him with God! Of whom can it be said, as it is said of him: "Jesus lifted up his eyes and said, Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me; and I know that thou hearest me always." And why did God always hear him? Because he was always seeking to do the will and work the works of him that sent him. Often the blush of shame rises to my brow, as I recall how constant and unremitting was Jesus in the service of his loving heavenly Father.

Beloved brethren, listen to the reading of the record: "He rose a great while before day;" and after a season of sweet communion with God in prayer he went forth into the world, to faithfully perform the duties of the hour, whether it was seated in a boat on the bosom of the deep, or standing on the mountain slope preaching the glad tidings of the kingdom of God to thousands, or in the desert alone with his disciples, or seated at the well side unfolding to one anxious, attentive ear the deep truths and gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth, everywhere, and under every condition and circumstance we find him redeeming the precious time, because as the result of his continued attitude of prayer, he was filled with the spirit of him whom he delighted to own and loved to call "my Father."

Even in the hour of his death, his enemies bore

this remarkable testimony of his wonderful life: "He trusted in God that he would deliver him." Even during his life, when the storm raged around him, and all his companions were sore afraid of sinking in the deep; he was fast asleep. Surely it could be said of him that God fulfilled the prophet's declaration and promise: "Thou wilt keep him, O God, in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee." This entire confidence and trust in his Father never left him; even his last prayer was one of child-like trust and confidence: "Father, into they hands I commend my spirit?"

What was the secret of such tranquillity in such a moment as this? This, beloved brethren, is the key to it: "I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work thou gavest me to do." Jesus always practiced what he preached. In Luke 18:1 we read: "Jesus spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint." So then if he prayed always, and exhorts us to do the same, we enquire for what should we pray?

Let me first offer a word of encouragement, my dear brethren. We should have no fear that God is too busy with matters of such grave importance that he cannot or will not hear us; God's ear is always open to our cry. It was to assure us, our dear redeemer's footsteps followers, that our Lord spoke the parable of the importunate widow.

First, we should always pray for more and more of the Holy Spirit. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" (Luke 11: 13). Our friends who believe in the teachings of "orthodoxy," viz., that the Holy Spirit is one of three co-equal Gods, of course, can hardly appreciate the deep and helpful suggestion of praying to God for his Holy Spirit, which is the spirit of the Lord, the spirit of holiness, the spirit of the truth, as the truth is in Jesus, the spirit of Christ, the anointed one, the spirit of a sound mind, the service, the spirit of joy, the spirit of love, the spirit of fellowship with those of like precious faith, the spirit of the glorious coming kingdom so soon to be established upon the earth. This spirit—the Holy Spirit—means all of these things; and to be made a partaker of this spirit is the greatest blessing that can be bestowed upon us this side of the vail. for when he, our beloved bridegroom shall appear, we shall be like him, and hence then have this blessed Holy Spirit even as he has it, in all its fulness. Let as then, dear brethren, pray and wrestle with God "even unto the breaking of the day" for more and more of his Holy Spirit; and if God sees that we are willing to make every sacrifice necessary to obtain this, he will surely not withhold it from us.

We should next pray for wisdom. For, beloved brethren, we are exhorted that with all our getting, be sure and get wisdom, for it is the principal thing. Solomon declares that "The commencement of wisdom is the fear of the Lord; and the knowledge of the most holy one is understanding" (Prov. 9:10). Lesser James, in his first epistle, points out that if any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him. In the third chapter he tells us what the quality or character of this wisdom is: "But the wisdom which is from above, first, indeed, is chaste; after that peaceable, considerate, compliant; fraught with mercy and good fruits; without partiality, without hypocrisy. But a crop of righteousness is peace, and is sown by those who make peace" (James 3: 17, 18, Rotherham).

Wisdom is really the working of God's Holy Spirit upon our hearts and minds, or as the apostle Paul expresses it: "Being led by the Spirit" (Gal. 5:18). The antithesis of "led by the Spirit" is "under the law." It will help us to understand the principle in its religious application if we consider it operates in the domain of common experience. There is a rule for everything we have to do, and we must understand the rule and practice it; but we are never fit to play our part until the rule becomes an unconscious instinct. Think, for instance, of the navigator. He must know the rule of the road which prescribes what course a ship should steer when she is meeting or overhauling another. There is little difficulty on the open sea, but in a narrow and busy fairway the helmsman must not merely know "the rule of the road," but he must have it at his finger-ends. A sudden emergency requires instant action, and disaster would be inevitable if he had to pause and consider what the rule prescribes or consult his "Navigators' Manual." It is not enough that the rule is written in a book; it must also be written in his heart. The principle runs all through life. It is what is written in the heart that makes the real man; and, however it may be held in check, it inevitably breaks loose and asserts itself in a moment of forgetfulness or surprise. This is the infallible mark of a true "Christ-man" or gentleman. He is never taken by surprise, or betrayed by a sudden start into unseemly behavior.

How many of us can measure up to this requirement? Jesus could. Some one has truly said "That Jesus was the first true gentleman that ever breathed." He was never taken by surprise; in every embarrassing situation he bore himself with unruffled graciousness and unerring discretion.

Now when the Apostle Paul speaks of being "led by the Spirit," or possessing the wisdom that comes down from God, he is formulating this principle as it operates in the religious life (the only life the new creature should know); so if a man be led by the spirit, or has received the wisdom that is from above, he is no longer under the law. He acts by instinct and not by rule; but according to the promise: "This is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after these days, saith the Lord; I will put my law in their inward parts, and in their hearts will I write it; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people" (Jer. 31:33). Probably this scripture in all its fulness applies more particularly to the coming millennial age of blessing; but all down the ages the saints have had an earnest and experience of this, by the indwelling and leading of God's Holy Spirit or wisdom, bestowed upon the faithful ones from time to time.

The more we realize the presence of Jesus by his spirit, as the result of our constant attitude of prayer for wisdom, the more he will influence our lives and make them like his own. He loves and trusts us; and if only we keep letting our hearts go out to him in faith, prayer and desire, and realizing that whatever part we play, he is the audience, the thought will enoble all our speech and behavior. His spirit will be the atmosphere of our lives, and will give them color and fragrance We shall do his will instinctively; not at the prompting of "impressions" or "impulses" of our flesh. GEO. B. ALLDRIDGE.

THE INSPIRATION OF THE BIBLE

Christ's Estimate of the Old Testament

In what estimate, then, did Christ hold the Scriptures of the Old Testament, of which Scriptures, Josephus, a Jew of the first century, speaks thus: "How firmly we have given credit to those books of our own nation is evident by what we do; for during so many ages as have already passed, no one has been so bold as either to add anything to them or take anything from them, or to make any change in them; but it becomes natural to all Jews, immediately and from their very birth, to esteem those books to contain divine doctrine and to persist in them, and if occasion be, willingly to die for them. For it is no new thing for our captives, many of them in number, and frequently in time, to be seen to endure racks and deaths of all kinds upon the theatres, that they may not be obliged to say one word against our laws and the records that contain them" (Jos. 5 Ap., book 1, par. 8).

Christ alludes to the Old Testament under various names. He speaks of "the Scriptures," "Moses and the prophets," "the word of God," "the things that are written," etc. But, whatever be the form of the allusion, he never speaks of them without recognizing their divine authority, expressly or by obvious inference.

1.—He makes the fact of a thing being written in the Scriptures always a sufficient reason for its reception as divine.

His answers to the tempter in the wilderness were all of this character, e. g.: "It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve" (Matt. 4:10). Of John the Baptist, he says, "This is he of whom it is written, Behold I send my messenger," etc. (Matt. 11:10). Justifying his violent expulsion of mere traders from the precincts of the temple, he said: "It is written, my house shall be called a house of prayer, etc." (Matt. 20:13). He supported his doctrine concerning the holy character of the true children of Abraham by saying: "It is written in the prophets, they shall be all taught of God" (Jno. 6:45). He referred to his approaching sufferings in Jerusalem as the accomplishment of "all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of Man" (Luke 18:31). He combatted an objection of the Pharisees by saying: "What is this then that is written" (Matt. 20:17). Explaining the meaning of his sufferings to his disciples after his resurrection, he said, "Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer," etc. (Luke 24:46).

The apostolic record shows as Jesus using this phrase on many other occasions, but these are sufficient. The use of it could not be accounted for except on the principle that he regarded the Old Testament as a divine document. His refernces in the form of this phrase extend from Moses to Malachi, taking the historical books and Psalms between.

2.—His statements concerning the writings of Moses and the prophets are all of a character that recognise them as divine.

These statements occur in various connections, but they are all of one character. When he said "I am not come to destroy (the law and the prophets) but to fulfill" (Matt. 5:17), it was as good as saying that the law and the prophets were divine, for with man there can never originate anything for the Son of God to "fulfill." He expressly said: "All the prophets and the law prophesied till John" (Matt. 11:13). This affirms the matter in question. He made Abraham in parable say: "They have Moses and the prophets: let them hear them" (Luke 16:29); which he could not be imagined to have done on any supposition but that Moses and the prophets were divine. He accused his disciples of being "slow of heart to believe all that the prophets had spoken" (Luke 21:25), which would not have been a ground of accusation unless "all that the prophets had spoken" was divine. After his resurrection, on the journey to Emmaus, he began at Moses, "and going through all the prophets," he expounded to the two disciples "the things concerning himself" (Luke 24:27).

"Moses, the prophets, and the psalms" (thus endorsed by Christ as divine) are practically the whole Bible. The historical writings are not distinguished from the prophets, because they were all the work of prophets—Joshua, Samuel, Nathan, and the inspired seers and scribes. That Christ's recognition extended to the whole Scriptures will appear more particularly from the next proposition.

3.—Jesus constantly evinced a reverence for the Scriptures of the Old Testament, and an anxiety that men should understand them which cannot be understood unless he recognised them as of divine origin and authority. We may go further under this heading, and say that he referred to them as the source of divine knowledge of an authority so great that he plainly said they could not be broken.

The evidence of this is partly comprised in the statements quoted already. But it is found more particularly in those that refer specifically to the Scriptures as a whole. In his arguments with the Sadducees, he said: "Ye do greatly err, not knowing the Scriptures" (Matt. 22:29). What is this but saying that the Scriptures are an unerring guide to divine truth, and how could they be so if they were not wholly divine? On another occasion he opened the understainding of his disciples "That they might understand the Scriptures" (Luke 24:45). Taking such pains to make his disciples understand the Scriptures, is proof of his recognition of their divine character; why should he be so anxious for them to understand the Scriptures, if the Scriptures were, in any degree, of human origin? He said, on another occasion, to the Pharisees: "Have ye not read the Scriptures, etc." an interrogatory carrying with it the recognition of their authority. Such, also, is the character of the words, "as the Scripture hath said," with which he introduces the prophecy of the gift of the Spirit (Jno. 7:38). He surrendered himself, at last, into the hands of his enemies, for this reason: "The Scriptures must be fulfilled" (Mark 14:49). In no plainer way could Jesus have asserted the divine character of the Old Testament, unless it be in his parenthetical declaration in an argument with the Jews concerning a quotation he had made: "The Scripture cannot be broken" (Jno. 10:35).

What the Apostles Thought

In next introducing the testimony of the apostles, it is not with the idea that the testimony of Christ needs any confirmation, but because the matter in hand is of such vital moment as to make every support valuable, and because Christ has placed the authority of the apostles on an equal footing with his own in saying: "It is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father that speaketh in you." "He that heareth you, heareth me."

Their teaching on the subject runs in exactly the same channel as Christ's. The fact of a thing being written in the Scriptures was with them an end of all doubt. "Then remembered they that these things were written of him" (Jno. 12:16). "His disciples remembered that it was written of him, the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up" (Jno. 2:17). When they had fulfilled all that was written of him, and they took him down from the tree" (Acts 13:29). Paul defined his faith by the standard of what was written. "I worship the God of my fathers, believing all things that are written in the law and in the prophets" (Acts 24:14). His letters are full of allusion to what is written in support of what he himself says. Nearly 10 times does he say "As it is written"—his quotations ranging throughout Moses, the prophets, and the psalms. We give a specimen in each section: Moses: "As it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations" (Rom. 4:17). The Prophets: "As it is written, Out of Zion shall come the deliverer" (Rom. 11:26). The Psalms: "As it is written, For this cause I will confess to thee among the Gentiles and sing unto thy name" (Rom. 15:9).

These allusions to what is written in the Old Testament, recognise its authoritative, and therefore its divine character, as a whole, for if it were not divine, it would not be authoritative. What they do thus for it, as a whole, they do for its parts. This follows; but as in the case of Christ, so in the case of the apostles; they not only endorse the Old Testament as a whole; they speak of its parts in a way that expressly asserts for them a divine character. Peter, interpreting to a Jewish audience the recent opposition of Jewish people to Christ, says: "Those things which God before had showed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled" (Acts 3:18). Zacharias, filled with the Holy Spirit, said, of the birth of Christ: "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for * * * he hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began" (Luke 1:69, 70). "The mystery * * * now made manifest, and by the scriptures of the prophets according to the commandments of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith" (Rom. 16:26). "Being witnessed by the law and the prophets" (Rom. 3:21). "Well spake the Holy Spirit by the prophets" (Acts 28:25). "Persuaded them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses and out of the prophets" (Acts 28:23). "We are built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets" (Eph. 2:20). "God spake unto the fathers by the prophets" (Heb. 1:1). "The prophets spake in the name of the Lord" (Jas. 5:10; "As he hath declared to his servants the prophets" (Rev. 10:7).

Further, the apostles speak of "the Scriptures" in the same way as Christ does—as an unquestionable and divine authority in all things of which they speak. They do this both in an express manner, and in the inferences arising out of the form and purpose of their general allusions. Paul's custom was to "reason out of the scriptures" (Acts 17:2), which implies that, in his estimation, the sanction of his Scriptures was conclusive. If they were divine, this is intelligible. If there was a human (i. e., an erring) element in them it would to that extent, not be so. Apollos "showed by the Scriptures that Jesus was Christ," which he could not have done unless they were of divine authority. The people of Berea "searched the scriptures daily" to verify apostolic declarations, which they could not have done with any conclusiveness of result on the supposition of the Scriptures having a human origin and character. The description of a sound and useful brother is one "mighty in the scriptures" (Acts 18:21). "What saith the scripture?" is Paul's appeal in an apparent logical dilemma (Rom. 11:2; 4: 3; Gal. 4:30). He also speaks of "The scripture forseeing that God would justify the heathen," which identifies all Scripture as a divine unit (Gal. 3:8), so also "The scripture hath concluded all under sin (Gal. 3:22), and "the scripture saith, thou shalt not muzzle the ox" (1 Tim. 5:18). "The scripture saith unto Pharaoh, etc." (Rom. 9:17). "Do ye think the scripture saith in vain, etc." (Jas. 4:5). Peter thinks it a conclusive way of presenting a matter to say, "It is contained in the scriptures, etc." (1 Pet. 2:6); also Paul, "The scriptures saith whosoever believeth, etc." (1 Rom. 10:11). To say that a matter is "according to the scriptures," is with the apostles the highest and most authoritative manner of introducing it (1 Cor. 15:3, 4; Jas. 2:8). So to "wrest the Scriptures" is with them the highest offense in spiritual things (2 Pet. 3:16).

In addition to these general allusions, implying in the strongest manner the authoritative character of the Old Testament Scriptures, the apostles designate them in a way that expressly affirms their divine authority. "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God" (1 Pet. 4, 11). "Ye have need that some one teach you which be the first principles of the oracles of God" (Heb. 5:12). "Unto them (the Jews) were committed the oracles of God" (Rom. 3:2). This designation—the oracles of God—of itself excludes the supposition of a human (i. e., an erring) element having entered into their composition; so also does the apostolic command to speak according to them, and to abide by their first principles.

Of the same force is the description of these Scriptures (both by Jesus and the Apostles) as the word of God, e. g., "Handling the word of God deceitfully" (2 Cor. 4:2); "The word of his grace, which is able to build you up and give you an inheritance" (Acts 20:32); "The sword of the Spirit which is the word of God" (Eph. 6:17; "To whom the word of God came" (Jno. 10:35); "Have made the word of God of none effect" (Mark 7:13); "They preached the word of God" (none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come)—(Acts 12:24; 13:5, 44; 26:22). —Selected and revised by the Editor.

NOVELS

Nothing else than a vacuum can begin to approach, in emptiness and diluted nothingness, of the average novel. How any well-organized brain can find satisfaction in the persual of the trash which fills the bookshelves of the school and circulating libraries, and, we are sorry to say, occupies quite too large a place in the libraries of Sunday schools and of many of the so-called Christian homes, it is indeed difficult to understand. Certainly it is only a taste which has become in the highest degree vitiated and perverted that can experience any other sensation than disgust, in reading the nauseating descriptions of the idiotic performers of the imbeciles who are made to be the chief actors in these delineations of what is called "real life," but whose conduct is as far removed from real or genuine human living as the imagery of Dante's "Inferno" is by contrast removed from Milton's presentation of "Paradise Restored."

We said these books are as empty as a vacuum. So they are, so far as properties of value are concerned; but they are pregnant with mischief the most virulent. The simpletons, the sycophants, the liveried apes, the rakes and rascals of the deepest dye, who figure in these noisome books, are made to speak and act in so life-like a manner that the reader is impressed almost as vividly as if he had been in their immediate presence and the effects upon him are not far different than if he had actually associated with them. Do fathers and mothers ever think of the character of the personages with whom their children associate in the seculsion of their sleeping rooms, when they may, perhaps, be supposed to be fast asleep?

A modern writer has given the following as a resume of the average novel, and certainly no novel reader will deny the accuracy of the formula: "Moon light night—shady grove—two lovers—eternal fidelity—young lady rich—young man poor—very handsome—great obstacles—young lady's father very angry—won't consent—mother intercedes—father very hard hearted—lovers won't part—die first—moonlight again—garret window open—rope ladder—flight—marriage—father in a rage— won't forgive them—disowns them—gets sick—sends for his daughter—all forgiven—father dies—young couple get all the money—live in the old mansion—much happiness. Finis."

Now this is all insipid enough to an unperverted or well organized brain; but unfortunately, all brains are not well organized or unperverted, and the possessors of such brains apparently find infinite pleasure in tracing this worn out formula through the labyrinth of verbiage which the modern novel writer strings out, at so much a line, for the edification of that vast army of shallow brained individuals who spend a good part of their lives in devouring this senseless twaddle, with an appetite which must be insatible, if one may judge by the vast quantities of unhealthful literature yearly placed upon the market.

One of the most pernicious effects of novel reading, is to be recognized in the mental deterioration which it induces. The mind of a person who has been long addicted to novel reading, may be aptly compared to a sieve, which allows whatever is refined and useful to escape, and retains only a mass of course and useless rubbish. Novel reading also leads to mental stagnation. The sentimental moralizing of the so-called "religious novel" (a misnomer), and the cobweb theories of the "philosophical novel," are not the sort of mental diet calculated to encourage intellectual activity. The novel reader's mind is likely to become like a stagnant pool into which flows a filthy stream. The pure water soaks into the earth, leaving behind a miscellaneous accumulation of bugs and vermin, dead fishes and writhing reptiles, decaying carcasses and floating rubbish. The water of such a pool becomes more and more putrid, both by accretion and the want of activity. Turn a lively brook into such a pond, covered with its green slime and teeming with filth, and send the putrid water dancing over the pebbles, boiling in a thousand eddies, rolling over and over upon the sandy bottom, rubbing against the banks and dashing over waterfalls, and soon it becomes pure. Activity is life; stagnation is death; moral as well as mental and physical.

When the habit of novel reading is once thoroughly fixed, it becomes as inveterate as the use of liquor or opium. The novel devotee is as much a slave as the opium eater or the inebriate. The reading of ficticious literature destroys the taste for sober, wholesome reading, and imparts an unhealthful stimulous to the mind, the effect of which is in the highest degree damaging.

When we add to this the fact that a large share of the popular novels of the day contain more or less matter of a directly depraving character, presented in such gilded form and specious guise that the work of contamination may be completed before suspicion is aroused, it should become apparent to every careful mother that her sons and daughters should be vigilantly guarded against this dangerous source of injury and possible ruin.

We unhesitatingly pronounce against all this trash, as an unmitigated evil. The possible good that the few not positively pernicous works of this class might accomplish, provided they might fall into just the right hands at just the right moment, is vastly more than counterbalanced by the amount of mischief which is certainly wrought by the wrong coloring, the graphic portrayals of vice and shame, the education in the ingenious devices of intrigue, the distortion of principles and confusion of motives exhibited, to say nothing of grosser influences resulting from the persual of books which emanate from the erotic brains of authors whose lives are not less sensual than their books.

There is enough good literature still unread, to make unnecessary the resorting to this class of books for either entertainment or instruction.—Selected.

Embyro Sister Gladys Bates reports that Brother Adams immersed Harvey Krogn September 23. We rejoice to hear this good news.

Wicked men torment themselves, for wickedness destroys peace. "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but joy and peace in the Holy Spirit."

In this issue a sister advertises that she will give a home to a girl. Read the advertisement on page 11, and help her find a girl if you know of one that is available.

"There is a way that seemeth right unto man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." So wrote the wise man, and he knew. Beware, then, of following your conscience; it may lead you astray.

It costs more to avenge injuries than to bear them. The vindictive man punishes himself more than the object of his wrath. Hence the wisdom and excellence of Christ's law which requires submission and the doing of good to the evil doer.

IN CREEDLAND

No. 1

Alexander Campbell's Opposition to Creeds

It is the merest ignorance that opposes "creed" as a means of present improvement and future salvation. The men and the sects that have most bitterly opposed and fought articles of faith have been forced by exigence of circumstances to approve and write statements of faith themselves. Alexander Campbell is a notable case of logical necessity undoing his theory against creeds. Mr. Campbell has, says Mr. Ray, from his beginning as a reformer, waged unmitigated warfare on all creeds, whether they were true or false, scriptural or unscriptural; and from his fancied elevation he has hurled his thunder-bolts of wrath against all the creed mongers of the ecclesiastical universe. He denounced in the strongest language all churches which were united by creeds as in the Romish apostasy. Of them he said: "The worshiping establishments now in operation throughout Christendom, increased and cemented by their respective voluminous confessions of faith, and their ecclesiastical constitutions, are not churches of Jesus Christ, but the legitimate daughters of the mother of harlots, the church of Rome" (Mil. Har. Vol 3, p. 362).

But on what ground does Mr. Campbell oppose all creeds so vehemently? He says: "Our opposition to creeds arose from a conviction that whether the opinions in them were true or false, they were hostile to the union, peace, harmony, purity, and joy of Christians, and adverse to the conversion of the world to Jesus Christ" (Chr. Sys. p. 9).

How the truth expressed in what Mr. Campbell is pleased to call a creed could be "hostile to the anion, peace, harmony, purity and joy of Christians, and adverse to the conversion of the world," is not easy to explain. No doubt all true creeds are hostile to the union which he proposed, and to the conversion of men to the Christian doctrine. But that true sentiments, written as a summary of belief, are hostile to the union of Christians and the conversion of the world, is not true. This would be to contend that truth is opposed to Christian union!

I can not better express myself on the subject of creeds than in the language of Mr. Jeter. He says: "Every intelligent Christian has a creed, written or unwritten. There are certain facts, truths, and principles which he believes and maintains, and the belief of which he deems essential to the existence of true holiness. He may or may not write these articles of his belief; but they are equally his creed, and equally efficacious in controlling his conduct, whether they are written or unwritten. The writing of them is merely placing in a visible form what previously existed in his mind, and doing so contravenes no law of Christ and violates no moral obligation. But what is here affirmed of an inidvidual may, with equal clearness and propriety be affirmed of a church of Christ. They have, and of necessity must have, a creed—it may be latitudinous or rigid, may comprehend many articles or few, may be written or traditional—and this creed is their bond of union. This remark is as true of the churches organized by Mr. Campbell as of any churches in Christendom" (Campbellism Examined, p. 34).

It must be borne in mind that the opposition of Christians to creeds does not arise from their wantof conformity to the Bible, but from the opposition of these creeds to the reformed plan of union. But, it is asked, "is not the Bible a sufficient creed?" Yes, and all the professed Christian denominations in the land claim to take the Bible as their creed, and yet they are in complete antagonism to each other. The oneness or unity recommended in the scriptures is something more than a union in form or profession. It is a union of mind and judgment, of doctrine and practice, and not merely the profession to be governed alone by the Bible, while we are as wide apart as the poles in doctrine. Some seem to think that the prayer of Jesus Christ has been answered in regard to the oneness of Christians if they can only induce professors of religion to come together in the same society and agree in the use of a few scriptural expressions, while they are as different in doctrines as the sects from whence they came. Jesus prayed for believers "that they all may be one, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me" (John 17:21). And Paul exhorts the brethren thus: "I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment" (1 Cor. 1:10). And again: "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God-speed; for he that biddeth him God-speed is partaker of his evil deeds" (2 John 1:10). Thus we learn that God requires that brethren dwell together in unity of mind and judgment, and not merely of outward forms. But as the so-called Christian world is broken into almost a thousand fragments, with as many different doctrines, it now becomes absolutely necessary for those who wish to dwell together as churches of Christ to express their belief or creed concerning the doctrine of Christ. It is not enough for one to say, "I believe the Bible," for this is said by Roman Catholics, Mormons, Universalists and Quakers, with all other professed Christian sects. Then, as our summary of faith must be expressed in order to Christian union, it can be no more harm to write it than to express it orally.

I am no apologist for authoritative creeds, as courts of appeal in cases of litigation. That man who presumes to dictate or write laws for the government of the Church of Christ, has partaken of one of the main features of Antichrist. But there is a vast difference between making laws to govern the Churches of Christ and expressing or writing a declaration of our faith, as a means to promote harmony in action. And as to the "Baptist Creed," so often abused by Mr. Campbell, he ought to have known that the Baptists do not recognize any creed except the New Testament, to which they appeal in cases of discipline. But each individual or Church, if they choose, may express themselves in a summary of Christian doctrine, that they may know when they are all of "one mind" and "one judgment," and that others may know what they believe the Bible to teach concerning the plan of redemption. And also this expressed abstract of principles will stand as a monument to future generations, showing to the world what has been the faith and practice of Baptists. The ancient Waldensian Baptists published a confession of faith to vindicate themselves from the slanderous charges of their enemies, more than seven hundred years ago. This simple creed of these persecuted Baptists stands as one of the brightest gems in Church history, serving to identify the Baptist Church amid the darkest period of Romish superstition. Nothing could be certainly known of the faith and practice of any Church or society, one hundred years in the past, without some written expression of its doctrine. No association, convention, nor any other body among Baptists, has the slightest authority to impose any creed upon any church or individual for their adoption. A church may or may not write a summary of her faith and practice, as she in her wisdom may deem fit. I have found in all those expressions on the part of Baptist churches, called, by some "confessions of faith," that the leading article runs thus: "The Bible alone is the only rule of faith and practice to us." Either this, or something of the same import, stands at the head of Baptist articles of faith. But Christians preach up a crusade against this expression as a part of the Baptist creed, not because it is false or wrong, but because it is adverse to their own proposed plan of Christian union. Let them remember that the world knows what the Baptists believe, because they have given it out as a summary; but to this day no one knows what a Christian may believe, because lacking a creed, they lack unity and distinctiveness in doctrine.

PAPAL CLAIMS

It is a favorite claim of the Futurists that Papal Rome does not fulfill Paul's prophecy about the man of sin. His words are: "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God" (2 Thess. 2:4). Futurists, ignorant of history, snuggle up to beer-soaked priests and say: "Paul's Man of Sin was to 'exalt himself above all that is called God;' Rome has never made this claim; even the Pope, the man above governments, presidents, and kings, and under whom are all priests, has never made the claim that he is 'above God.'" But these words from a Baravian priest in 1872 show that God is small and insignificant as compared with an ordinary priest—is in fact a mere slave to do the bidding of these beastly and presumptious men:

"We, the priests, are high above the governments, emperors, kings and princes of this world as the heavens are above the earth. Kings and princes of this world are as much beneath us as lead compared to the finest and purest gold. Angels and archangels are far beneath the priests, for we can forgive sins as God himself, which faculty angels and archangels never possessed. We stand above the mother of God; for as she has given birth to Christ only once, we priests produce and create him every day. Yea, the priests may be said to stand above God himself, because he must be at their service at all hours, and in all places, and at our bidding, and at the act of consecration whenever made, must come down from heaven to serve us. God has created the world with the words, 'Let there be light' but we priests make God himself with three words."

THE LYING WONDERS OF THE PAPACY

A correspondent writes thus in an Australian paper: "Those who have visited Rome may have noticed in St. Peter's Church an enormous chair or throne, held up by four great figures (representing four fathers of the church, wearing mitre and cope). Well, hidden within this immense throne is a chair, which is called St. Peter's chair. In Bower's 'History of the Popes,' volume 1, page 7, we find the real pedigree of the famous chair, as follows: 'The Romans had, as they thought, till 1662, a proof not only of Peter erecting the chair, but of his sitting on it himself. But previous to an anniversary festival, while it was being cleaned, the twelve labors of Hercules unluckily appeared upon it(and being thus shown to be a Pagan piece of furniture,) it had to be laid aside. Of course his Holiness was quite disconcerted by the discovery, trying to put as good a face upon it as they could.' Giacomo Bartoline, a Romish writer, in his sacred antiquities said: 'After it had been cast aside, the Holy See found a substitute, but this also proved to be an imposition, for while the former chair was from the Pagans, this one proved to have belonged to the Mohammedans. For when the French soldiers, under General Bonaparte took possession of Rome in 1793, they found on the back of it in Arabic: 'There is no God but God, and Mahomet is his prophet.' Therefore the hoary fable again exploded.'"

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN

By Alpha

We shall take a stroll through John's gospel. And we shall go in Greek. And since that language is a difficult one, we shall be very simple and explicit.

Those wishing to follow us should have a copy of a Greek New Testament. Wesscott and Hort's is the best. The price is $2.00. Any first class book store, or write to Editor Huggins.

"En" is the first word. It is a preposition. It should be (and is) translated "in." Over the "e" is the smooth breathing produced by putting the apostrope (') over the vowel "e." This leaves the "e" sound natural.

The next word is "apchee." It is a noun. To pronounce it we would say "archay." The accent is the circumflex accent, and is placed over "ee." So pronounce it "archay" with the accent on "ay." In noting the Greek "ee" you see a peculiar mark under "ee" it, don't you? This is called the "iota subscript." It is the sign of the dative (case) and singular (number). It is rendered "beginning." It is then plain "In beginning." There is no definite article "the" in the Greek. This "en archee' is translated in Acts 11:15, as: "at the beginning."

DIALOGUE NO. 2

Mr. Oracle—Well, Mr. Christian, I have concluded that when I made the statement that the Bible is full of the immortal soul idea that I made a mistake. I overstated the fact.

Mr. Christian—Do you mean, that you admit that the doctrine is not Scriptural?

Mr. Oracle—Oh no, hardly that, for I have found the doctrine clearly inferred in many passages. The difficulty I am having to find positive Scripture teaching of what our old minister called "a fundamental principle of Christianity" does surprise me, however, I admit.

Mr. Christian—Why don't you ask him for proof texts for it? That ought to be very easy if it is as he says. Surely a fundamental truth ought not to rest solely upon inferences, even though they be drawn from the Scriptures.

Mr. Oracle—So I thought too, Mr. Christian, and I told him I wanted something that needed no argument to make its meaning clear.

Mr. Christian—That was a reasonable proposition, I should think. And did he offer to assist you in your search for the truth of the soul theory he has been preaching?

Mr. Oracle—No, he did not. He seemed a little displeased, I thought, at my questioning, and intimated that what had been satisfactory to the "greatest divines" in our church history ought to satisfy me. So I have taken to studying my Bible every evening at home.

Mr. Christian—Well, I am glad to know you have adopted that plan. I went through a similar experience some years ago and am confident that if you continue to search diligently you will be rewarded by finding "the truth;"."and the truth will make you free."

Mr. Oracle—I wish I had some of your confidence. How can I be as sure of the truth of your views as you are?

Mr. Christian—By disregarding what so-called "great divines" say about the Bible and going to the Bible direct.

Mr. Oracle—Do you think, do you feel certain that there can be but one result as to my conviction on this question of the soul's immortality?

Mr. Christian—Only one is possible if you come to the study with an open mind and honest desire to know the truth. No one else has ever found Scriptural evidence of the immortal soul doctrine, for the simple reason that it has no part or place in God's plan of salvation. As you learn more of that plan, you will see the incongruity of such a view, with other doctrines of the Gospel.

Mr. Oracle—How is a man to know he rightly interprets the Word? May not my neighbor have as good understanding as I, and who shall say who is right and who wrong?

Mr. Christian—"No prophecy of scripture is of any private interpretation," says Peter; and the Apostle Paul tells the Church at Corinth: "Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God." As "private interpretations" are ruled out by Peter, we are safe in making our rule to let God be his own interpreter. And as Paul, another man working under divine inspiration, makes it clear that we are expected "to know things" concerning our salvation, we are bound to search the Scriptures daily as those noble bereans of old, to see whether things are so or not.

Mr. Oracle—I am glad that you recommended Bible study so heartily, for I have the greatest respect for the Bible and believe in it as I understand it, though I admit I have greatly neglected the study of it. But what puzzles me the most is that all denominations practically believe alike on this doctrine, and cite many texts in support of their views, and yet you assert that it is not Scriptural.

Mr. Christian—True! they do quote many texts and apply them with specious reasoning in support of this dogma of the immortal soul, but they dishonor the Bible as the Word of God by quoting a passage and interpreting it in such a way as to prove a doctrine which is positively contrary to the plain, clear teaching of another passage.

Mr. Oracle—That sounds like pretty strong language, and I am hardly prepared to follow in charging the churches or their ministers with intending to dishonor God's Word. Practically all Christendom has received this doctrine, and do you mean to say that it is positively denied in the Scriptures?

Mr. Christian—Yes; I mean just that; and if I show you numerous plain Scriptural passages for it, I must ask that you allow them their natural force and meaning, and that you accept as a fixed rule and principle that the Bible as the inspired Word of God cannot be interpreted so that it contradicts itself.

Mr. Oracle That seems fair and right; I agree with you.

Mr. Christian—Very well, then, Mr. Oracle. Take your Bible and read as I give you the references, but keep in mind what you said in our former talk about the soul being the real man, and the body only a house or tabernacle for it. Now in the tenth chapter of Matthew we find Jesus saying at the 28th verse: "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both body and soul in hell."

Mr. Oracle—Our minister referred to that verse; particularly the expression "not able to kill the soul;" and he made it appear that to "destroy the body and soul in hell" was a proof of the soul going to hell at death.

Mr. Christian—We can't use the word "destroy" unless the "soul" ceases to be a soul, just as the body laid in the grave is utterly destroyed in time, as it is no more a body. An immortal soul would be indestructible, or the words have no meaning.

Mr. Oracle—I see your position exactly, and would like to follow you further.

Mr. Christian—Now turn to the Epistle of James. In the 5th chapter we read in the 20th verse that "He which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death." If this statement is true, the soul is liable to death and therefore not immortal, which means not mortal, or not subject to dissolution.

Mr. Oracle—That may be true in the natural sense, but we think of that as one of those texts that mean a spiritual death, or separation from God's favor; not literal death, but to be banished into the "outer darkness."

Mr. Christian—Spiritual death is not a Scriptural expression, neither is it death at all, and you agreed that we were to take these passages in their natural sense—not to spiritualize their meaning out of them.

Mr Oracle—I suppose it has become a habit with me to put that meaning to it, because some such way of understanding it was necessary from our teaching about the soul being immortal. I admit you have the advantage of me in taking the word litreally.

Mr. Christian—In the eighteenth chapter of Ezekiel and 20th verse we have this positive assertion: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die;" so you have either got to find another kind of soul besides your immortal soul and one which can and does die, and which is the responsible personality, just as you claim your immortal soul is, or reject the testimony of Ezekial who spoke for God in these words.

Mr. Oracle—That certainly is a strong passage in favor of your views. I have read it a number of times, and yet did not see the logical force of it as I see it now. I just passed over it with my faculties dulled by long disuse and unable to see that this death which was threatened the sinner could mean nothing but the second death, since the first or Adamic death has passed upon all men, saints and sinners alike.

Mr. Christian—That is perfectly true. Your mind was so full of the old Platonic philosophy, and so habitually had you let your preachers do your thinking that you really had no independent thought. If you are beginning to see light on this subject you will be interested to note that exhortations by the prophet Isaiah: "Incline your ear, and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David." If we then turn back to the 49th Psalm we can learn what David hoped for. After showing how helpless and hopeless the rich and mighty ones were to accomplish their own salvation, for their beauty and strength "shall consume in the grave," David says: "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave; for he shall receive me."

Mr. Oracle—That passage is familiar to me, but your talk puts a different meaning to it. I have always supposed that it simply meant that God would receive him, that is, his soul at his death; and as to your quotation from Isaiah, the words "your soul shall live," were understood to mean the same thing.

Mr. Christian—Well, my friend, you must admit that yours is a forced construction, an inference entirely due to your own understanding in consequence of your early teaching. The words of Isaiah clearly indicate that not to obey that call, not to "come," not to "hear," would result in death to that soul. And now as to David and what happened to him at his death, we may be absolutely sure he did not go to heaven, for the Apostle Peter, in the 2nd chapter of Acts, says so in so many words. Peter tells us that David is both dead and buried, hence he is not yet redeemed from the power of the grave. Now if you will turn to Hebrews 11:32, you will find that David, like all the patriarchs and prophets named there, "died in faith, not having received the promises," "but having obtained a good report through faith received not the promise" (Verse 13); and for the reason which follows: "God having provided (or "foreseen," as margin reads) some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." They sleep in the dust only to awake in the morning of the resurrection (Job 7:21). Therefore he comforted himself with this thought: "As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep. O that though wouldst hide me in the grave, that thou wouldst keep me in secret until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldst appoint me a set time and remember me. If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call and I will answer thee; thou wilt have a desire to the work of thy hands" (Job 14:11-15).

So the Psalmist rejoiced in the hope of resurrection to life eternal and sang: "Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth; my flesh also shall rest in hope. For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell (sheol), neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption" (Psa. 16:9-10).

If I show that the doctrine is contrary to numerous plain Scriptural passages, I only ask that you allow them their natural force and weight, and that you apply the rule or principle that the Bible as the inspired word of God can not be interpreted so as to stultify itself by contradictory teachings.

Mr. Oracle—That seems fair and right and I will agree to accept as final whatever doctrine you can establish by clear plain declaration of the Scripture.

Mr. Christian—All right, Mr. Oracle, then come again soon and I will take you through the book and give you the testimony of many witnesses who are authorized to speak for God. In the meantime I would like you to reflect upon the words of Dr. John Lord, LL. D., in his lecture on Moses in the first volume of "Beacon's Lights of History." After saying "The comparative silence of the Old Testimony concerning immortality is one of the most impressive mysteries, and however dimly shadowed by Job and David and Isaiah, it seems to be brought to light only by the Gospel," Dr. Lord goes on to say: "There is more in the writings of Plato and Cicero about immortality than in the whole of the Old Testament. And this fact is so remarkable," says he, "that some trace to the sages of Greece and Egypt the doctrine itself; that is a necessary existence of the soul after death." And he concludes with the wise observation that "If immortality is not a gift, but a necessary existence, as Socrates supposed, it seems strange that heathen philosophers should have speculated more profoundly than the patriarchs of the east on this mysterious subject. We cannot suppose," says Dr. Lord, "that Plato was more profoundly instructed on such a subject than Abraham and Moses. And it is possible, after all, that the loftiest of the Grecian philosophers derieved their opinions from those who had been admitted to the secret schools of Egypt."

This intimates pretty clearly what Dr. Lord thought as to the Platonic theory of the immortal soul, and you need not be surprised, Mr. Oracle, if I demonstrate from history that the immortal soul theory came directly from Plato and crept into the Christian church solely by human teaching.

Mr. Oracle—Well, I am deeply interested in the subject and shall drop in again soon to hear what you have to show on it.

CHAS. A. GOSS.

AT THE TABLE

Luke 12:31-38

"But rather seek ye the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you." "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." Jesus came into Gallilee preaching the kingdom of God. Jesus called his disciples and sent them out to preach the Gospel of the kingdom, telling them to go without money, extra clothing or food.

I have chosen this lesson because Jesus is teaching his disciples to choose that which will stand forever. He teaches them that their mission is to tell of the kingdom of God, and if their trust is in God all things shall be added. Now we, if we trust in God; will have our needs supplied. In this lesson he first gives the parable of the rich man. His ground brought forth so plentifully that he must pull down his barns and build larger. He says: "I have much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry." No though for the poor; he gives no thanks to God who provided for him. But God said unto him: "This night is thy life required of thee." Then whose shall those things be? So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God." He said that he had much goods for many years. But Jesus says: "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall wear, for of the things of this life do the nations of the world seek after. And your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things. Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

This lesson which Jesus taught his disciples so many years ago, is full of meaning for us today. Yes, as the time is drawing near that we shall hear his voice, let us seek first the kingdom of God. Let us give no anxious though what we shall eat, or what we shall wear. We must be faithful in whatever our work may be, for we are commanded not to be careless, or trust in uncertain riches, not to give all our time and thought to those things that perish; but to learn and know of the things that are for eternity. "Wherefore brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure, for if ye do these things ye shall never fall, for so an entrance shall be administered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Brothers and sisters, we see all things are being fulfilled that were to come to pass. We have Jesus' word in this chapter that he will come again. He says: "Let your lamps be burning, and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for your Lord." "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching." Let us be ready and do those things that are pleasing in his sight. Be moderate in all things. Let us not follow after those things that the nations of the world are following after. Be temperate in all things, exhorting and helping each other, striving to be overcomers; laying up treasures in heaven, for where our treasure is there will our hearts be also. Let us stand fast in the truth that Jesus taught his disciples, asking help of him who has said: "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee," for in ourselves we can do nothing. Let our prayers be for strength and help, that we may be found well pleasing to him at his coming.

"Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly," is our prayer.

The Restitution

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

PRAYER

May sweetness fill our breasts, O Lord, and peaceful, happy thoughts of thee and of thy great love and ever present help be ours as we draw near to thee. We have sought for satisfying pleasures and sufficient strength and treasures elsewhere than in thyself. And we would thank thee for the experience that all such search in vain. We bless thee for the disappointment, for the sense of emptiness and need which runs through all human history when men dwell away from God. And we pray that we may not be of the fools whom it does not teach; but that we may be driven by our experience of the vanity of all things apart from thyself, and drawn by our imperfect recognition of the suitable blessedness to be found in communion with thee, and so may come to thee now in our prayer, and abide with thee always amidst the the distractions and the trials of our daily lives. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A WORD AS TO THE "MORAL UPLIFTING" OF THE STATE BY EQUALITY IN SUFFRAGE

Mrs. Flora A. Wood

The following quotations are taken from the editorial columns of one of California's leading papers. It is entitled, "Dry States that Are Moist."

"In spite of the fact that hundreds of towns throughout the country and several entire states have gone 'dry,' the consumption of liquor shows a steady increase. As stated in the recent report of the United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the American people consumed 143,000,000 gallons of whiskey and 64,500,000 barrels of beer in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913. This is an increase of 7,500,000 gallons of whiskey and 1,000,000 barrels of beer over the previous year. * * * We are confronted with the paradoxical situation that as the dry territory increases in area, the use of liquor also increases. We are almost forced to the conclusion that, after all, prohibition does not prohibit. * * * By the confession of the liquor interests, the closing of saloons has not seriously affected their business as a whole." On a sandy foundation indeed do they stand whose "only hope" is that the saloons may be shut up.

Here is another statement taken from the same paper I wish I could give the article in full but space orbids.

"Billions Yearly in Smoke and Drink

Astounding Figures for the Reader

"Frank Fayant, in the October number of Munsey's Magazine, shows that the smoking and drinking bill of the American people now reaches the enormous figure of $2,700,000,000 a year. Since the time when Columbus braved the unknown seas in search of the treasure of the Indies, man has dug out of the earth fifteen thousand million dollars of gold," he says: "Since the panic of 1907 the American people have spent for alcohol and tobacco fifteen thousand million dollars. Or to put these two statments in the form of a methematical equation: The product of four hundred and twenty years of human toil, sacrifice and bloodshed, of daring discovery and exploration of continental wildernesses, of cruel wars of aggression and conquest, of wonderful engineering triumphs in the never ending search for the precious metal, equals six years of easy going expenditure of the American people for the weed that soothes and the cup that cheers."

"What the Figures Mean

"If a thousand years before the time of Moses the lawgiver, the ancient Egyptians had begun hoarding a treasure of gold at the rate of a dollar a minute, and if ever since then (every minute day and night, these thousands of years) the accumulation of this treasure had continued, the golden hoard would today be five hundred years short of the twenty-seven hundred million dollars we spend in one year for alcohol and tobacco."

He says further: "More than half the total wealth of the United States is incorporated in manufacturing and industrial companies, banks and other financial institutions, railroads, telegraphs, telephones and other public service corporations. The combined profits of all these businesses are less than the expenditure for drinking and smoking. The twenty-seven hundred million dollars annual outlay is greater than the total cost of all our government, from the President's salary down to the crossroads schoolhouse. It is three times the national debt. It is more than all Europe is spending for war and preparation for war."

The folowing is taken from an editorial in the Sacramento Union of September 23, 1913:

"Crime and Its Great Cost

"The Union published on Sunday morning, statistics on the cost of crime in California, which are startling. These figures which are well within the actual facts, show that this state paid during last year the enormous sum of $37,000,000 in the fight against crime. * * * This means that the entire value of the orange crop of the state goes to pay for crime. * * * It should be borne in mind that these figures, great as they are, represent but a small part of the total cost of vice and crime. * * * The figures, when compared with the figures of other years, show that there is a steady increase in the cost of crime, indicate that in our battle with the forces of crime we are making a losing fight."

Here is more from the same paper of a later date:

"The Union prints this morning the second of the articles on the cost of crime, and the figures are so enormous as to be almost beyond belief. These remarkable complications show that the direct cost of crime in the United States in 1912 reached the enormous total of $4,463,683,882.00. Think what these figures mean. The cost of crime in this one year amounted to more than the savings bank deposits of the United States. If all the savings of all the men and women in this great country had been withdrawn from the banks and paid over to check the operation of the underworld forces, it would have fallen some twelve million short of meeting all the demands. The money paid out last year in one profitless war on crime, the cost of which is steadily increasing, exceeded the total volume of money in circulation in the United States. If all the money in the country had been applied to the payment of the nation's crime bill, we would have fallen a billion dollars short of payment. Ten Panama canals could have been built with the money that went during 1912 to defray the cost of the war on crime, and we should have had something left over. This red war cost an amount in this one year equal to one-third of the value of all the gold and silver produced by the mines of the United States from the discovery of America down to the present time. With the amount spent in this battle with crime we could have paid off the entire national debt four times, and we would have had a neat little surplus of $800,000,000 to put in the bank. Or we could have twice paid the national debt and the debts of all the states of the Union and kept a large sum for other purposes."

Here is another item from the same paper entitled

How Laws Are Set at Naught

"A few days ago a young man, who had been the companion of a dance-hall girl, brutally beat her on the street, and the testimony showed that the cause of the beating was her refusal to give him money. * * * Then the most pernicious power in American politics made itself felt. Influence was brought to bear. The city representatives were complaisant. The court sentenced the young ruffian to pay a fine of $25 and serve six months in the county jail. * * * The fine was paid. The sentence was suspended. * * * And the man now goes scot free. * * * If that man had been without powerful political friends he would have been punished differently." Evidently all is not well even with the recall of Wellar.

See the following taken from a large daily headed:

"British Suffragette Not Adverse to Murder

"Miss Joan Wickham arrived at New York today from Liverpool to prepare the way for Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the British militant suffragette leader. * * * Miss Wickham went to the Women Suffrage headquarters to meet Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont: 'We have never attacked human life,' said Miss Wickham, 'but if worst comes to worst, there is a strong likelihood that we will do so.'" Our Lord says: "They that take the sword shall perish by the sword."

Another person of eminence advocates a fine upon those who are entitled by the law to vote and will not. We ought to obey God rather than man (Peter). A writer says surely the hand of God is in this woman movement. Has Jehovah ever revealed himself to Gentiles as a savior of mankind? Salvation is of the Jews (Jesus).

And this most surprising statement from another: "I cannot see what right men and women have to life in our land who are empowered with the ballot and who neglect their civic duties." I wonder if the writer realizes how sweeping is this assertion. It would banish many who are "Israelites indeed;" it would take from us many whom God has placed over us as pastors, and whom he commands us to esteem very highly in love. Truly a tree is known by its fruits.

How do the words of prophesy accord with facts given in this article? They are in unison. "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come" (2 Tim. 3:1). Read second, third, fourth and fifth verses. Not much "Moral uplifting" for the world is shown.

"Suppose ye that I am come to send peace on the earth? I tell you nay, but rather division" (Jesus in Luke 12:51). "But evil men shall wax worse and worse" (2 Tim. 3:13).

The winds of strife will bear away all evil government. Not the purity of the ballot. Then will good laws be enacted, but not by a government "by the people," nor "of the people," but a One Man Power—the multitudinous Christ. Amen. May the kingdom soon come. Brethren, let us wait for the Lord from heaven, who will show in his own time, who is the only Wise Potentate.

"THY KINGDOM COME"

Chas. A. Goss

The division of the Hebrew nation into two kingdoms, and their ultimate dispersion into remote parts of the earth, and their scattering among all nations, were matters of prophecy years before these events passed into history.

But the same hand that scattered them will gather them and unite them again as one people and one kingdom. The things pertaining to that kingdom were taught by Jesus to his disciples throughout the forty days of his post-resurrectional sojourn on earth; and when he was about to ascend to his Father, the last question they asked was: "Lord, wilt thou at this time, restore again the kingdom to Israel?" When the kingdom is restored to Israel (Acts 1:6, 7), the kingly ruling power and authority will rest upon the shoulders of Jesus the anointed, as we may learn from Isaiah 9: 6, 7; Luke 1:32, 33). He will share his honors and glory with David and his twelve apostles and with all his saints, which things we read in Ezek. 37:24; Matt. 19:28; Rev. 2:26, 27; 3:21.

The kingdom will grow in power and extend its dominion until it fills the whole earth. Isaiah, in the eleventh chapter, gives us a grand pen-picture of how God will bring it to pass; and the prophet Jeremiah in chapter 23 gives more particulars of the same beautiful picture in verses 3 to 8 inclusive. God's faithful prophet Daniel says in chapter 2:44, that the God of heaven will set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all other kingdoms and "shall stand forever." Can anyone who believes the Bible read these wonderful and glorious prophesies and not feel moved to pray, as Jesus taught his disciples to pray: "Thy kingdom come, they will be done on earth as it is heaven."

These prophecies are not old, dead material that have been long ago fulfilled in one way or another. They have not been fulfileld, and cannot be as long as Israel and Judah are divided and scattered. Jesus is the righteous branch and king spoken of in Jeremiah 23:5; and in the days of his kingdom the prophecy says: "Judah shall be saved and Israel shall dwell safely." Verse 7 adds: "Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, The Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but the Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I have driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land." But Jesus does not yet sit on David's throne, and the apostles still sleep in their graves. The great life-giver must raise them to life, and awaken all his sleeping saints, to whom he has promised to share his rule and his glory.

The kind of rulers that God wants for his kingdom is shown in 2 Sam. 23:3: "The God of Israel said: The Rock of Israel spake to me. He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God." This high standard is not reached by mortal man when occupying a position of power. God once had a kingdom on earth which was called "the kingdom of the Lord over Israel" (1 Chron. 28:5; 29:23), but this kingdom was overthrown for disobedience of its kings and people.. When that judgment was pronounced upon both rulers and people, there was given a promise of a restoration in the person of a rightful heir of David's line (Ezek. 21:25-27). When Jesus was about to be born of Mary, the messenger of God, the angel Gabriel, announced his identity as the one who should restore the kingdom and fulfill the prophecy of Ezekiel, saying: "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the highest; and the Lord God shall give him the throne of his father David. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be not end" (Luke 1:32-33).

The result of the establishment of such a universal kingdom of righteousness has been forseen by God and foretold by his prophets from of old. The Psalmist refers to it saying: "All the ends of the world shall remember and turn to the Lord and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee." "For the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is governor among the nations" (Psalm 22: 27-28). And the prophet-evangelist sounds out some more of the gospel of the kingdom in Isaiah 2 chapter, saying: "For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem;" the result being an age of universal peace, when nation shall not lift up the sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

And if the reader has not yet read enough in the passages referred to, and partly quoted, to join in the daily prayer of all saints, saying from the heart: "Thy kingdom come," let him open to the 72nd Psalm, read it all through and assuredly he will exclaim in the language there recorded: "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name forever; and let the whole earth be filled with his glory."

REASON

Fred. Bidstrup

Reason: the faculty of judging, or its due exercise to argue rationally. Webster.

"Come, now, let us reason together, saith the Lord" (Isa. 1:18). And Paul writes in Rom. 12:1: "I beseech you therefore brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." So in serving God we are not only allowed but admonished to use our reason, or to argue rationally, as Webster has it. Some say that faith is, to believe blindly. In some instances it is. The Roman Catholic church is a good example, though the clergy do not believe in most instances what they teach.

Results: Ignorance, superstition and spiritual darkness. This is contrary to Bible faith. God wants us to come into his wonderful light and grow in knowledge and grace—quite different! There is nothing in the Christian religion, which is unreasonable. Said Jesus to Peter when they passed the withered fig tree: "Have faith in God," and what faith stands for is clearly defined in Heb. 11:3, viz: Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things, which are seen, were not made of things which do appear." This may be called blind faith but when we consider God's handy-work every spring and see how life is revived into the dead nature, is it more to believe that he is the Creator of same? This is reason, which we are admonished to use, still some prefer to believe in the unreasonable and the unaccountable.

In Gen. 3:15 God, speaking to the serpent said: "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." Now, notice it reads "his" heel, referring to Jesus, and is just termed "the seed of the woman." More correctly it should read "the offspring" of the woman, the first not being in existence. But this is of minor importance here; that which is to be shown is that which he termed "the seed of the woman," must come after, not before the woman. The following foolish question has been raised: "Which was first, the egg or the hen?" Without taking into account the record in the Bible, which reads: "God created every winged fowl" (Gen. 1:21), reason would tell us that the egg is of the hen; without her the egg would only remain an egg Now, in the same light of reason and common sense, let us raise this question: Which was first, the woman or (to use Bible language) "her seed?" We all believe that Mary, the mother of Jesus, descended from David, because the Bible states: "Of this man's seed hath God, according to his promise, raised unto Israel a Savior Jesus" (Acts 13:23). And David, too, must have lived previous to his seed or offspring without a shadow of a doubt; so we have two here mentioned, David and Mary, of whom came Jesus, regardless of his paternity. May it be mentioned here that the writer believes the Word, which states that Joseph, the husband of Mary, was "supposed" only to be the father of Jesus by those who did not know or believe, that it was through the direct "power of the Highest" that Mary conceived, and thus became the mother of God's Son? In Matt. 22:42-46 is a question recorded which Jesus directed to the Pharisees and which by some may seem to cloud the foregoing argument; it reads: "What think ye of Christ? Whose son is he? They say unto him, The son of David. He said unto them, How then doth David in spirit call him Lord, saying: The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou on my right hand till I make thine enemies thy footstool? If David then called him Lord, how is he his son? And no man was able to answer him a word, neither durst any man from that day forth ask him any more questions."

Why did they not answer? Because they were caught in the pit which themselves into a trap. They admitted that Jesus was the son of David; they knew his genealogy; but as they were among those who "supposed" Jesus to be the son of Joseph, we may see they even knew better, but would not allow or admit the divine sonship of God as David did, when he "in the spirit" called him "Lord." They were left without an answer. They, like many of our days, laid more stress on their own conclusions and supposition than plain, reasonable statements in God's word. Now then, brethren, if the Bible does not mean what it states we can all agree by shaking hands and admit here by that we do not know anything at all, but if it does mean clear and definite the writer can not see how the "son of David" could precede his father more than any other son, or the "seed of the woman"—the child—could precede its mother.

Just one more thought: God gave his Son for the salvation of the race. In Rom. 5:6 it is written: "In due time Christ died for the ungodly." This took place, as we all know, about two thousand years ago. Still, in Rev. 13:8 we read that "the Lamb" was "slain from the foundation of the world." Of course would try to prove this to be a literal fact, but only so in God's plan "from the foundation of the world;" so in the same manner could Isaiah exclaim seven hundred years before Christ: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given." God's foreknowledge brings harmony in all things. He never fails in his plans or purposes, so surely as he planned to create man he knew would be a failure without a Savior to atone for sin. He saw only his own beloved Son as the one who could accomplish this, the greatest of all accomplishments. He saw David and Mary as some of the agents through whom this plan could be a reality, but all in the future, but as plain as if was of already. In the same sense we all pre-existed. Before Rom. 8:29, 30: "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate, to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, then he also justified, and whom he justified, them he also glorified." Called and justified, praise God, for as many of us as who know, it has taken place with them; but Paul goes further. He says, "them he also glorified"—not yet! Still it is put down as in the past. Surely the writer, barely able to be above bed, sick and crippled, does not realize any of said glory, but he rejoices in the hope that he also, through grace, shall be a partaker in same, in a near future, this being still an unfulfilled part of God's plan. But in regard to God's part of its fulfillment, it is as sure as if it was fulfilled. It is in the same manner that Christ is spoken of from eternity, but in no other way. It is in God's plan only. Did Jesus pre-exist before his death in Bethlehem? As far as the writer can see, who sends his brotherly love to all, he did not.

ENVY
Gen. 37:3-11, 19, 20

1. We are told to "rejoice with them that rejoice." Envy is the exact opposite of this. The envious man is cast down when others succeed, and bitter resentment makes him sneer at the happiness of his neighbors. The root of envy is selfishness, which hankers after the enjoyments of good fortunes or reputation of others. Its fruit is malice, in which disappointment at lacking what another possesses expresses itself in a desire to injure that more fortunate person. Envy most generally shows itself in slander, innuendo and cynicism. It underlies much of that nasty gossip which so widely poisons social life. The envious person cannot bear to see others happy and successful without throwing out malevolent hints and suspicions. So it is that slanders inevitably surround prominent people. To believe rumor is to suppose every public man a drunkard, unhappy in his home, his speeches made for him by underlings. So, too, no man can be rich without being dubbed dishonest, no writer successful but that critics sneer at the public taste, no girl yet engaged but some of her "friends" asperse her motives.

2. The inevitable result of envy is therefore, the unhappiness of the envious person. That envy causes unhappiness to others is true enough, but the bitterest misery is that which the envious person himself feels. Envy cast Joseph into the pit and sold him into slavery, but it brought upon him no such inward suffering as was the lot of his brothers. For their plot to get rid of Joseph destroyed their own peace of mind, set them at loggerheads amongst themselves, made the father they loved miserable, cast a gloom over their whole home, and eventually resulted in their utter humiliation before Joseph himself. And although Joseph himself suffered much, first as a slave and then in prison, in the long run the envy of his brothers so overreached itself as to make him the mightiest man in all Egypt. Envy and jealousy are near akin—indeed, it is difficult closely to distinguish them, and it may be said that every envious man is jealous, too. To the bitterness of envy there is often added the pains of jealousy, that "green-eyed monster which doth mock the meat it feeds on."

3. Those gusts of envy which pass over a man's soul and destroy his happiness are due to an inward habit of mind, and those who would keep free from envy must find the means by which its roots may be extracted. We have seen that the root of envy is selfishness, and if envy is to be abolished, selfishness must be overcome. But how? By deliberately and constantly doing exactly the opposite of what envy desires. Envy must be resolutely faced, opposed, smitten. He is like a bully who can only be put down by brute force, but who can be so put down by the courageous. It is not merely by regretting, and hating, and arguing against, and mentally repudiating envy that we may be freed from it; but rather by practicing its contradictory, which is self-denial. If someone is trying to push to the seat you want to occupy in the car, step aside and let him take it. If a flatterer tell you of the failings or follies of a friend, defend that friend, and praise him even to your own disadvantage. Be jealous on behalf of others, so that you cannot envy their good fortune, and when tempted to a malicious word twist it into commendation; when greedy of another's possessions, make him a gift; when hate shows its grin in your heart summon the love of God to your aid.

4. Envy is the denial of God, for God is three things with which envy is utterly incompatible. God is first of all love; and envy is malevolence. God is consequently giving; he gives his works in nature, his image in our fellow men, and himself in Jesus Christ; but envy is eager to take, and giving means the death of envy. God is finally forgiving. When his love has been neglected and his gifts spurned he is nevertheless eager to welcome back to his home the poor soul that has ruined himself by his sin; but envy cannot forgive, for its last impotent and miserable satisfaction is to cherish rancour and spite and the memory of injuries. So the envious man is the real atheist. It is not with the intellect but in the heart that a man finally rejects God (Ps. 14:1). So for the Christian the real remedy against envy is God. God will help us to put into practice that self-denial which will slay envy. With God as companion we cannot envy, but must love. The life of prayer then gives the soul an atmosphere in which envy cannot thrive. Prayer is the oxygen of the spirit. Without it life languishes, whereas every breath of it we take fills us with energy, drives out disease, and brings joy. So to kill envy we need to practice self denial and live the life of prayer.

NEWTON H. MARSHALL.

IN JESUS' NAME

This is the name inherited by the Son of God, and the name above every name. This is the name by which the apostles were instructed to do all their work. We read in Acts 3:6 that when Peter and John went to the temple and saw the lame man that lay at the beautiful gate desiring alms, Peter said to him: "In the name of Jesus of Nazareth, rise up and walk."

When the Jewish Council called upon Peter and John to explain how the lame man was healed, Peter said to them: "Be it known unto you all that in the name of the Lord Jesus doth this man stand before you whole; neither is their salvation in any other; for their is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we can be saved" (Acts 4:12).

Think of it! The inspired Peter, speaking as he was moved by the Holy Spirit, the power given to remind him of all that the great teacher had said to him and guide him into all truth, says there is no other name given among men but the name of the Lord Jesus, whereby they may be saved.

The next instance recorded is when Philip preached to and baptized the Samaritans. The record says they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus (Acts 8:16); and again, when Peter, by special command went and told Cornelius words whereby he might be saved, about eight years after his first sermon at Jerusalem, he still continues in the same mind, guided by the same spirit; and after they had heard his sermon and believed he commanded them to be baptized.

It is before Paul and Silas that the conscience awakened jailor trembles. To them he appeals for information touching the question of his salvation. The first words in answer to his question are: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved and thy house." Listen to the words of Peter on the day of Pentecost. "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins" (Acts 2:38). At the house of the believing Centurian Peter commands that believers are to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.

Turning to Acts 19 we find the Ephesians, who had been instructed by Paul, were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus; and in like manner Paul himself had been baptized calling on the name of the Lord (Acts 22:16). When we study the life of Paul, after he was converted, with what zeal he guarded that sacred name! Listen to his words in Acts 20:24: "But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus," "I am ready, not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus Christ."

We will examine a little more closely the Son's name as given him by the Father. "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins" (Matt. 1:21). We do not wonder that the apostle solemnly declared that among all under heaven there is no other name given whereby men can be saved. Jesus directed his disciples to ask the Father for needed blessings in his name. It is through his name that eternal life is to be obtained. Not only did he have a name above all others; he also as man spoke in words of power to the sick, the palsied, the blind, the deaf, the dumb, the dying and the dead. When he said: "Lazarus, come forth, and he that was dead came forth. Jesus said unto them, Loose him and let him go" (John 11:44).

How can we read about these wonderful works of Jesus and not feel like David: "O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth." While we are waiting in this vale of tears, let these words comfort us. "His name shall endure forever; his name shall continue as long the sun." May he soon come that all nations may bless his holy name.

EDITORIAL

Called to a reign of benevolence it is but proper and right that we are called upon to cultivate that character in advance.

It is complimentary to the truth that it is "everywhere spoken against." It is public and universal testimony that it is something altogether distinct from popular theology.

"We, then, as workers together with him." Yes. God works with us, but not instead of us. The principle of co-operation is practical between divinity and humanity. It is both beautiful and wise.

During the week we have enjoyed another visit from Brother Jas. T. Auld. Sister Auld was with him this time, which added much to the pleasure of his visit. It is always cheering to meet other pilgrims who are marching to the kingdom of God.

Much as the need is, and the wants of writers require, and our desire prompts us to do, we simply cannot find time for private correspondence. Will readers please note this, and forgive our inability to respond to correspondence which really needs personal replies?

A note from Sister Whitehead reports that Brother W. H. Wilson is in the hospital in a very critical condition, having undergone an operation for appendicitis and peritonitis. Many brethren will be saddened by this intelligence. Sister Whitehead will, no doubt, keep us posted as to how he progresses.

Again we are gratified to report the baptism of two more to the gospel, Mr. Horace Harrison and Miss Nellie M. Alldridge, both formerly of the Church of England. The truth was more than a match for Episcopalianism. Sister Alldridge is a daughter of Brother Alldridge; her obedience is to him a cause of unbounded joy; and Brother Harrison is a young man of most worthly character, who has obeyed the truth alone so far as his family is concerned. The Lord bless him in making known to his relations "the wonderful words of this life." Let this dear brother and sister take 1 Sam. 2:30 as a motto for life, and they will be honored of God: "Them that honor me I will honor, and they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed."

IN CREEDLAND

NO. 2.

The Compbellites Have a Written Creed

The disciples of Mr. Campbell have probably convinced themselves and tried to convince the world that they have no creed except the Bible. They have deceived themselves on this subject, as we are prepared to show. They have a written creed as grossly human and unscriptural as the creeds of the sects so bitterly anathematized by them. When Mr. Campbell's little Brush Run society sought admission into the Red Stone association, they sent "a written declaration of their belief," drawn up by Mr. Campbell, as a proof of their orthodoxy; and they were received into the association on that written creed. And if it was lawful for Mr. Campbell to bear a written creed from Brush Run society to the Red Stone association, why do Campbellites make such an outcry against others for the same thing allowed by themselves. It may not be amiss in this place to repeat that Mr. Campbell was never a Baptist in sentiment. And as he confessed that he attached the name Baptist to his first periodical, from "expediency," as a "passport to favor," it can also be proved that he sought admission among Baptists for the same unholy purpose. This is confessed by Prof. R. Richardson, of Virginia, in an article which he prepared for the work entitled Religious Denominations in the United States and Great Britain. In this article he said: "For, although disinclined to a combination with any religious party, known as such, they deemed the principles of the Baptists favorable to reformation and religious freedom, and believed that as they had it in their power to preserve their own independence as a Church, and the integrity of the principles of their first organization, a connection with the Baptists would afford them a more extended field of usefulness. Accordingly, in the fall of 1813, they were received into Red Stone Baptist Association," etc. (Religious Denom., p. 226). This shows that the originators of Campbellism only sought admission among Baptists, not because they approved the Baptist doctrine, but because they thought that "a connection with the Baptists would afford them a more extended field of usefulness." The same is taught by Mr. Fanning, a prominent Compbellite, in his Gospel Advocate, of 1866, in his sketch of Mr. Campbell's biography. He remarked: "As intimated, he (Mr. Campbell) fraternized with the Baptists for quite a number of years, but while he was among them, it could scarcely be said that he was of them" (Gospel Advocate, page 353).

It seems that Mr. Campbell never hesitated to write a creed or declaration of belief, whenever it suited his policy, as a passport to favor. He wrote a creed of the belief of the "Disciples" in an article which he prepared for insertion in the "Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge" (Rel. Ency., page 462). He did this to show forth to the world what was the faith and practice of his "disciples." He not only wrote this summary of the history and doctrine of his reformation, but he refers those desiring a more particular acquaintance with the views of the reformation to the Christian Baptist and Millennial Harbinger. He does not refer them to the Bible, but to his own writings. Again he says "the Christian Baptist and Millennial Harbinger, being the first publication of these sentiments, contains history of this reformation, as well as a full development of all things from the beginning" (Rel. Ency., page 464). Mark it well; in this creed of Mr. Campbell we are not directed to the Bible for an acquaintance with the rise and doctrine of the current reformation, but to the publications of the reformer himself. He would have us to understand that his own were the first publication of these sentiments, as well as a history of all things from the beginning. But if Mr. Campbell published the sentiments of the reformation first, then it is certain that they were not published in the Bible.

But Mr. Campbell has, in addition to this former creed, written, for general use, a creed which he calls, by way of distinction, the "Christian System." And all Campbellites are as nearly agreed on the plan of union therein contained as the most devout admirers of the sects for their disciplines and confessions of faith. The Christian System is the arrangement into order or system those rough materials gathered by Mr. Campbell from the ruins of his Pedobaptist temple, and which had been promiscuously scattered through the various publications of the Reformer. But they are here polished and placed in the building according to the modern style of ecclesiastical architecture. So, this Christian System is a written creed; it is a human creed; it is an unscriptural creed; and the Campbellites agree as perfectly on the terms of union therein contained as any of the other sects on their creeds.

MELCHISEDEC

Who was the Melchisedec priest in the days of Aaron is a question that often is asked, but which has never been answered in harmony with the attributes of Melchisedec, or the facts pertaining to that priesthood. He is constituted a priest by the oath of Diety; he is without father or mother (no predecessor), the priesthood having an endless life, abideth a priest forever, hence can have no successor. These facts show conclusively that if a priest of that order actually existed in Aaron's time the same identical individual is Melchisidec priest today! All that is said concerning this order of priesthood sustains the idea of its absolutely endless character; once instituted it is as permanent and immutable as the oath of its infinite and infallible author. This brings us to the consideration of the question, did such a priest actually exist in Aaron's day? Since an affirmative answer would invalidate the right of the Lord Jesus to that exalted position, and flatly contradict the abundant testimony proving his right to that honor, we unhesitatingly respond the negative of that question. We are abundantly sustained in that decision by Paul's able argument in Hebrews on that subject.

ALMUS ADAMS, Evangelist.

A THOUSAND GENERATION'S

A correspondent asks the following question: "I should like your views on a portion of the Second Commandment: 'visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, upon the third and upon the fourth generation of them that hate me'—whether this was superseded in any way by New Testament teaching."

"Rev." D. Smith replies through an English exchange; it is so good that we gladly give it to our readers verbatim:

"This is a stern truth, and it stands immutable. It is a natural law, and no natural law can ever be superseded. indeed, so far from its being repealed, or even softened, it has been reaffirmed with terrible emphasis by the teaching of modern science. It is simply the law of heredity, and you know how potent and far-reaching it is. 'Especially,' says Edward Clodd, 'is science a preacher of righteousness in making clear the indissoluble unity between all life—past, present and to come. We are only on the threshold of knowledge as to the vast significance of the doctrine of heredity, but we know enough to deepen our sense of debt to the past and of duty to the future. We are what our fathers made us, plus the action of circumstances on ourselves; and in like manner our children inherit the good and evil, both of body and mind, that is in us.' Nevertheless, the law does not stand alone. If it did, there would be no hope of future betterment. But there is a companion law, and in it lies the possibility of the uplifting of the race. Moses stated the one law, and the other was stated by the prophet Ezekiel (18: 20, 21): 'The soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son; the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him. But if the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die.'

"The first is the law of heredity and the second may be termed the law of individualism. The statements seem contradictory, yet they are both true. They expose two antagonistic principles ever operative in human experience, and the law-giver and the prophet were justified in asserting only one. Each proclaimed the truth which his generation needed. In the days of Moses, Israel had just been emancipated and made a nation. She was beginning her career, and it was right that she should be warned of her responsibility. Therefore her law-giver appealed to the twin instincts of patriotism and parental affection, and set before his generation the debt which it owed to the generation to come. In the days of Ezekiel, on the other hand, the Israelites were captives in Babylon. They were suffering for the sins of their fathers, and they were disposed to despair. And therefore the prophet fitly reminded them that heredity was not the whole truth. It was possible for the stricken people, by hearty repentance and resolute endeavor, to cast off the burden of their fathers' sins and rise clear of it. This is the law of individualism, and it is the hope of humanity. The gracious fact is that the moment a man rallies his manhood, asserts his will, and sets himself, however feebly, to conquer his circumstances, the divine forces of redemption are enlisted on his behalf and co-operate with him. Observe how this is affirmed even by Moses. The passage which you quote continues (Exod. 20:6): 'And showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me and keep my commandments.' And indeed it is better than this; for the proper rendering is 'showing mercy unto a thousand generations of them that love me' (see R. V. marg., and cf. Deut. 7:9). The law of heredity has two sides. There is the entail of sin, and there is also the entail of righteousness; and the blessed truth is that the latter outlasts and outreaches the former. The judgment of God extends to the third or, at the farthest, to the fourth generation, and his mercy to the thousandth generation. This is more than a theological fiction; it is a fact of experience. Goodness is always stronger and more enduring than evil; and of this history abounds in illustrations. It is astonishing how short-lived are the consequences of a nation's follies, if only the nation repents in time. A few generations sufficed to recover England from the corruption of the later Stewart regime, and to heal the seemingly fatal wounds which her revolution inflicted upon France; but there is no heroic achievement in the annals of humanity which does not continue to this hour, an abiding possession, inspiring nobility and putting folly to shame. This is the other side of the law of heredity. The righteousness of the fathers no less than their iniquity is visited on the children, and righteousness is stronger than iniquity."

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brethren of The Restitution:

I will make a report of my work for the past two months. I held three meetings and one debate. First, a meeting at Staney, Dinton County, Texas, and a meeting at Almer, Oklahoma, and a meeting at Ardmore, Oklahoma. Baptised in all seven, with very good interest at all places.

At Ardmore I was challenged for a debate on the immortality question by the pastor of the Campbellite church of Ardmore, Oklahoma, and I accepted his challenge. We crossed swords at once in their church house on Broadway Street. He was a very nice fellow, but a very easy prey, as he affirmed that the spirit of all men is immortal. You can see what an easy time I had, and he could see that himself. The debate closed on Tuesday evening, September 9, and I came home Wednesday.

Brother A. S. Bradley will be here next Tuesday to hold a meeting, and as I have never met Brother Bradley I will be very proud to meet him. Love and best wishes for The Restitution and the Gospel trumpet, and all the readers. As Paul says to Timothy: "Let us fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life." I will write something for publication soon. Your brother in the one truth, W. J. PECK.

BEREAN DEPARTMENT

In the sixth chapter of 1 Timothy, beginning at the sixth verse, we read as follows: "But godliness with contentment is great gain. For we brought nothing into this world and it is certain we can take nothing out; and having food and raiment, let us therewith be content. But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness. Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses."

There is a lesson on contentment taught here that it would be well for us to follow. "Having food and raiment let us therewith be content." When we pause for a moment to think that we are looking for the coming of our Lord and Master at any time, why should we trouble ourselves to lay up money for the short time that may elapse before he comes? If we have enough to be comfortable and help others who perhaps have a worse struggle for life than ourselves, let us be content, for it says in the seventh verse: "We brought nothing into the world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out."

There is a disposition with many to strive after wealth, but we are here told that the love of money is the root of all evil." Not money itself, but the love of gain. When it once takes hold of a person it gets to be the paramount idea, and all other things become a secondary consideration. The habit grows upon one and they forget God and his teachings, and seek only their own pleasures. How much good could be done by those who have wealth if they were so disposed. We would not see the suffering among the poor that there is if all that could help generously would do so.

In Psa. 49:16 to end we are told what will become of the rich: "Be not thou afraid when one is made rich, when the glory of his house is increased. For when he dieth, he shall carry nothing away; his glory shall not descend after him, though while he lived he blessed his soul; and men will praise thee when thou doest well to thyself. He shall go to the generation of his fathers; they shall never see light. Man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish." There seems to be a class spoken of here that will never be raised from the dead at all.

In Matt. 19:23, 24 we have these words: "Then said Jesus unto his disciples, Verily I say unto you, that a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven. And again I say unto you, It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God."

I think Matt. 13:22 explains this: "He that received seed among thorns is he that heareth the word, and the cares of the world, and the deceitfulness of riches, choke the word and he becometh unfruitful." This shows that too much wealth brings cares with it, leaving no time for God's work.

There is another passage in Mark 10:23-24: "And Jesus looked round about, and saith unto his disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God. And the disciples were astounded at his words. But Jesus answereth again and saith unto them, Children, how hard it is for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God;" and then repeats the same statement about it being easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God.

Prov. 22:16: "He that oppresseth the poor to increase his riches, and he that giveth to the rich, shall surely come to want." In Heb. 13:5 we read: "Let your conversations be without coveteousness, and be content with such things as ye have; for he hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." Matt. 6:25 to end: "Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Behold, the fowls of the air, for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature? And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lillies of the field, how they grow. They toil not, neither do they spin; and yet I say unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arranged like one of these. Wherefore if God so clothe the grass of the field, which today is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith? Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or what shall we drink? or where withall shall we be clothed? (For after all these things do the Gentiles seek;) for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. Take therefore no thought of the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Many years ago I used to plan what I would do for months ahead, but I have learned by experience to live from day to day, for we do not know what a day may bring forth. Paul says in Phil. 4:11, 12, 13: "Not that I speak in respect of want, for I have learned in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content. I know both how to be abased and I know how to abound; everywhere and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need. I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

So it behooves us to cultivate a spirit of contentment; and although we may not have much of this world's goods, we should be content with our lot in life, and try and lend a helping hand to those less fortunate than ourselves. There are many among us who make this their life work; and they will have their reward. This life is only a fleeting shadow; we are here today and gone tomorrow; so we should put all our energies forth to lift up someone to a better view of the things which are to come. Show by our manner of life that we are content with what we have and that we are looking forward to something better, and a life that will be eternal. For when he who is our Lord shall come, if we are worthy, we shall enter into that rest that he has prepared for those that love him and have been faithful to the end. If we "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," all things will be added to us, and we will have a peace and content which nothing can take away. May this be the lot of each one of us.

OBITUARY

Mary C. Bouk

Beloved wife of Albert Railton died at her home in Fonthill, Ontario, Sunday, September 21, 1913, in her fifty-sixth year. Besides her bereaved husband; her daughter, Mattie; her son, John; her aged father, Peter H. Bouk; her brothers and sisters, Mrs. Wm. Platts, Sr., John Bouk, the widow of her late brother Simon Bouk, Mrs. David Ball, Mrs. Wm. Read, Miss Julia Bouk, Mrs. Edward Clark, Jesse Bouk, of Niagara Falls, N. Y., and Mrs. Eugene Lent; together with their families, she leaves to morn her death many uncles, aunts and cousins, her husband's many relatives, and a large host of neighbors and friends.

She was born December 10, 1857; baptized by R. V. Lyon at about the age of fourteen; married to J. Albert Railton November 9, 1886.

Sister Railton was one of whom faith and hope were living things. They were real; were all but tangible. Her faith in God's purpose to restore the earth and fill it full of his glory; to send his Son the "second time without sin unto salvation," and place him upon the throne of his glory to rule in peace and justice from seat to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth;" to raise the dead, small and great, through his Son, bestowing the unspeakable gift of immortality upon the faithful, making them "of all things" the "joint heirs with Christ;" her faith in God's purpose to accomplish these and other gracious promises was as that of the patriarchs. Accordingly, her life was a life of works. Realizing that her knowledge of God and his promises, her opportunity for obedience, and her encouragement to "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus," were largely brought about through the activities and sacrifices of others in her behalf, She in turn devoted much energy and service that others also might possess themselves, through faith in Christ, of those "exceeding great and precious promises" of God. And through faith and works came growth and ever increasing hope that she in due time would become one of those who shall make up the bride of our Lord and Master.

An indication of the esteem in which she was held by many friends was manifest by the large number of choice floral offerings presented, and by the large concourse of people which gathered (many of whom could not gain entrance to the church) to pay a tribute of respect and to hear of her expectation and hope through Jesus Christ.

After the funeral services, in which Dr. Wallace Mason, of St. Catharines, Ont., and Elder Jos. W. Oakley, of Buffalo, N. Y., participated, she was laid to rest in the Fonthill cemetery, less than three miles from her place of birth, to await the coming of him who is the resurrection and the life.

To this same mighty Savior we commend her loved ones all.

PRAYER IN DANGER

Jonah 2

1. It is well often to remind oneself that prayer is of the very essence of religion—not merely as a matter of theory, but practically. The desire for, and practice of prayer is a trustworthy index to the health of the soul. The man who finds the thought of prayer irksome, who habitually feels relieved when a good excuse offers to neglect prayer, for whom the events of the day pass without any sense of God's nearness and companionship, should beware; his soul is sick. Such a man's moral sense is likely also to flag, and his outward profession of religion may speedily become the merest hypocrisy.

As prayer is of the essence of religion, so it is its origin. Religion is intercourse with God. It began probably soon dawning in their need to the unknown power whom they dimly felt about them. It began probably with appeals to many gods, to demons even, to all the unseen powers with which primitive imagination peopled the outer world and especially the dark. And these appeals were the beginnings of prayer. They were also in general due rather to longing or to fear. When men dreaded evil storm, an enemy, disease or other danger they cried out to any god they knew to help them; they felt their weakness; they dreaded the [illegible] against them, and they [illegible].

[illegible] mistake to despise the primi[illegible] what the ancients did or be[illegible]. We are blood of their blood, and [illegible] as they knew them remain to [illegible]. We differ from them chiefly in superficial and unimportant details. We wear more clothes, travel more swiftly, cook our food more carefully, and spend more time over books but life and death, hope and fear, love and hate, God and sin, the great realities of destiny, are the same today as then. With all our many inventions we have not done away with the dangers of life. The vast, mighty universe is often grim and threatening. We cannot escape its blows. And it is the right and wise thing in all danger to turn to God in prayer for help.

2. What are our chief dangers? There is disease—uncanny and weird. It is true much has been done to mitigate its penalties. But it is still a mighty and inscrutable evil. Science helps us to understand something of its ways, but has not abolished the thing itself it has banished hobgoblins only to introduce us to bacteria. To know that I am beset with a myriad cruel and mean little bacilli is not more comforting than to believe myself tormented by an evil spirit! Then there is death—certain, inexorable, terrifying. Many people say they have no fear of death nowadays. That is probably because they lack imagination, or never give real thought to death. For any man who has learned to love another cannot face death without dread, if not terror, apart from God. Sin, too, is a danger. To waste life, to injure others, to outrage God's holiness and purity, to mar and deform one's own soul. This is awful. No one need be ashamed of fearing these dangers. Fear has a proper function in life, like the red lamp on the railway or the tolling bell on the buoy at sea. He who has no natural fear of these things, and especially of sin, is in the greater danger.

3. Prayer is the right way to meet all these dangers. It gives courage and fortitude in face of disease. The face of death, too, is changed for those who have learned the secret of prayer. But the keenest danger is sin, and it is in face of temptation that man needs God most. One of the greater things that the Lord Christ has done for us is the exhibition of sin as the most awful thing of all. According to Jesus, to be maimed or blind was not so much to be dreaded as sin; indeed, it were better for a man to die than to tempt little children into sin. This was not merely what he taught; it was also what he lived. Rather than sin, Jesus was ready to starve (Matt. 4:2-11. Rather than sin, he was ready to give up all prospects of wealth and political power (Matt. 4:8-10). Rather than sin, he even gave up the possibility of being recognized as Messiah by appearing from the clouds "the Sign from heaven" which he was repeatedly asked to give (Matt. 12:38; 16:1). So he persisted in doing his Father's will, and rather than disobey he faced the torture of the mockery and scourging and at last of Calvary. And he had power thus to suffer all things rather than sin. His Father saved him from the greatest danger of all. And the way is the way of prayer. God will not always save us from other dangers. Disease and death come to us. But he will always save us from the danger of sin. The soul that sincerely stretches toward God in temptation is never left unaided.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37), the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-53); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "The things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

TRUSTING THEE

MISS GEORGIA GAZELEY

Why should I hold my case so dear?
The work of training must be done;
I must be taught what I would know,
I must be led where I would go.
And all the rest ordained for me,
Till that which is not seen, I see,
Is to be found in trusting thee.

PRAYER

O Lord, may we be rigid judges of ourselves, however charitable of others. May we seek more and more to adorn the teaching ever by our poor lives and humble efforts. And do thou bless us with that inward consciousness of being knit to thee that shall make all things new and all things of God. And may we have increasingly working in us the power of that ministry of reconciliation which shall make us more and more conscious of they friendship. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

RESURRECTION AND JUDGMENT

No. 1

J. J. Heckman

There seems to be more confusion among religionists, and even among our own people, on these subjects than any others in the word of God. Some good people think that all men will be brought before Jesus at his appearing, and each one will have to go through a process of questioning, and then have his case decided by Jesus, the great judge. Such passages as Matt. 25:32 and 12:36 are quoted to prove this claim: "And before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats;" "But I say unto you that every idle word that man shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." Now, have they not a pretty good case made out, putting the two texts together? One says "all nations," the other "man," which might include all men as well as only a few. But let us stop here and consider some obstacles which fall in our way.

We find that there are now 1421 millions of inhabitants on our globe. Allow ten minutes for each to give an account—and what man could give an account of every "idle word" he has uttered in ten minutes? That would give 51,560 per year. Dividing this, we would have 27,618 years, or nearly thirty milleniums used in judging those who now live; and if we were to put in all who have ever lived we would have several times the age of the human family used up in the day of judgment. We could almost call it "eternal judgment," and not put much limit on the word "eternal," either.

(2) Those who are approved at the judgment are to "reign with Jesus a thousand years" (Rev. 20:1). But if it takes longer than a thousand years to find them out they who are not found out will miss the thousand-year reign, because it is to commence with the living again of dead ones, and not two or three thousand years after.

(3) We find many other scriptures opposed to this conclusion, such as: "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other" (Matt. 24:31, 31). From this passage we must conclude that judgment has taken place before the elect had been gathered together, or the angels would not have known the elect from the non-elect.

"Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left" (Matt. 24:40, 41). This again shows that judgment had taken place in these cases, because the angels knew who to take and who to leave, which would not be the case were all gathered into one great assemblage, as is taught by those who use only our first-quoted texts.

"The dead shall be raised incorruptible." While knowing the explanation some give of this passage, I am sure they are far-fetched, because it is "the dead" who are raised—not some who are alive by "mortal emergence," as they put it. If we say here that "raised" means being changed from mortal to immortality we say it is "the dead" who are changed; and then have a stronger case still against mortal emergence, as it is called. If, then, the dead are raised incorruptible they must have passed the decisive judgment before resurrection, or emergence, and hence would not be called to a great assize for judgment to find out their worthiness. That the word "raised" equals "making alive" we learn from Mark 12:26, 27: "And as touching the dead, that they rise," Have ye not read in the book of Moses, how in the bush God spake unto him, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living." That is, he is Abraham, Isaac and Jacob's God. They are now dead; he is not a God of dead ones. Hence, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob will rise to life again. Hence when one rises from the dead he becomes a living person, and if he rises incorruptible he comes to life with endless living existence.

"Jesus answering said unto them, The children of this age marry and are given in marriage; but they which shall be accounted (adjudged) worthy to obtain that age, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more, for they are children of God, being the children of the resurrection." This passage shows that judgment precedes resurrection, and therefore teaches that all men will not be huddled up in a bunch before a great assize after they are raised.

"Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just" (Luke 14:4). "The resurrection of the just" shows that God discriminates before resurrection who are just and unjust. Hence this text is against the great assize theory. Other passages could be quoted, but we think these are sufficient to show the interested reader that all texts are not in harmony with the theory we have been reviewing.

Another class of expositors come along and tell us that those passages refer to a certain responsible class of people who have been baptized into Jesus and have apostatized from the faith. These expositors usually also contend for mortal emergence, as they term it. They contend also that each one must appear personally before Christ and give account, as the universal resurrectionists have it, except these do not have such large crowds.

What they do with the texts we have just quoted I am unable to see, but I suppose they explain them away. They are apt at quoting Rom. 14:10 and 2 Cor. 5:10, which we quote here from the emphatic Diaglott: "But thou, why dost thou condemn thy brother? Or why dost thou despise thy brother? For we shall all be placed before the tribunal of Christ. Each one of us, therefore, shall give an account concerning himself to God. For we must all appear before the tribunal of the anointed, so that each may receive the things through the body, according to what he has practiced, whether good or bad." They also quote: "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the living and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom" (2 Tim. 4:1), and think their case is made out. We will notice the last text quoted first, and see if it teaches that the people are gathered in a crowd after the resurrection, or does it teach the judgment of dead ones? We might ask, does it teach the judgment of living ones? The answer comes from all sources, "Sure." How do we know? Because it says "the quick," which means living. Now does it not as plainly say "the dead?" Most certainly. Then let us let it stand just as it reads without alteration, amendation or prefixes, and all will be clear. I have as much authority to say "the living" mentioned here will be killed to be judged as anyone has to say "the dead" will be made alive to be judged. Both would be putting our ideas into the text, and both are mistakes. Let us read it as it is and believe what we read.

Now turn and read Acts 10:42 to corroborate this text. You will see that Jesus "was ordained by God to be judge of living and dead." If all are to be made alive and judged, how can he be judge of the dead? Would not all be living? If not, why not? Then let us conclude that Jesus judges both dead and living at his advent and kingdom, and the worthy ones of the dead arise incorruptible, and the living worth are changed in a moment, or twinkling of an eye, and meet Jesus the first time after the living are changed and the dead raised (1 Cor. 15:51, 52; 1 Thess. 4:15-17). Not much time for asking and answering of questions here.

But what about the account we are to render? Only two of the texts quoted mention the rendering of an account. One says we must give an account for every idle word which we have spoken. We have shown the impossibility of men doing that, allowing only ten minutes each for that purpose. Then again, men who repent and are baptized for the remission of sins have all past sins pardoned, "idle words" and all, and will not have to account for them. Again, we can speak and yet not utter words. For instance, Abel is dead, yet he speaketh. The souls under the altar cried unto God, yet they were slain, and will not live till the resurrection (Rev. 6:9-11; 20:1-5). The dead will so answer; their reward will be in accordance with their past lives, and not what they might say in a large assize including the whole world. The question with Jesus, the judge, will be, Were you "faithful unto death?" If so, you "will receive a crown of life." Their records will tell the tale. A verbal account from every person could not make it plainer. Jesus no doubt will gather the nations before his mental gaze as he descends, and will call the faithful through his angels, saying: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom," and they will enter life eternal by being raised incorruptible, to die no more.

PRAYER
No. 3
George B. Alldridge

"We give thanks to God, and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you, since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus and of the love to all the saints" (Col. 1:3, 4).

In a previous paper we endeavored to point out from the scriptures the necessity of praying for the holy spirit and wisdom. In this article we wish to call our reader's attention to the scriptural injunction and precedent established by our dear Lord and his apostles to pray for one another.

No one whose heart and mind is in attune with God can read the 17th chapter of John without being impressed with the wonderful love, sympathy and care for the future manifested by our dear Redeemer for those he delighted to call his own. How intensely interested he was in everything prtaining to their winning a place in his glorious kingdom. Listen: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for those also which shall believe on me through their words, that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou has sent me."

In these verses Christ interceded for all believers in every age, even until the time when "he shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation;" and in this view of them they are replete with instruction and consolation to us. Doubtless our continued faith and confidence in him is in answer to his continual intercession in heaven for us, of which this prayer is a specimen and example. Notice, he prayed for those "whom the Father had given him," those "who should believe on him through their word;" that is to say, the word of his apostles. The gospel was especially committed to the apostles, and from them it has been transmitted through succeeding generations to us, and we in turn to posterity, until Jesus again takes up the power and rules as king over all the earth in person, upon the throne of his father David at Jerusalem.

The apostle Paul caught this spirit and begins his epistle to the Colossians by assuring them that he gave thanks to the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ for his grace bestowed on them, and prayed for the perfection of that good work in others. This he and Timothy had done ever since "they heard of their faith and love;" blessing God, who had called them from the delusive pursuit of earthly things to hope for happiness in himself; for "in his presence there is fulness of joy, and at his right hand pleasures for ever more."

In this same chapter Paul declares that he did not cease to pray for them, that they might be filled with the knowledge of his will, in all wisdom, and spiritual understanding, that they might walk worthy of the Lord, unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God, strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, unto all patience and long-suffering with joyfulness. We often wonder why we seem to have such power in patience and long suffering with one another, and especially with those who seem to oppose us, as we try to persuade men to embrace and accept the glorious truths of the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Well, beloved, all our patience and long suffering with one another is the result of God's glorious power working in us, in answer to some dear saint's prayers, who observes our needs and alone with God, plead with him on our behalf.

This is something for us to remember, that God is answering prayer that another offers for us, and that the strength we receive is nothing less than the great strength of God. How often we see someone's face, as they in turn see our face, flush scarlet with sudden anger at some unkind, unjust or injurious word or deed, and then see that same hot flush pass off without any angry or retaliating word being spoken in return. In that we are told to see nothing less than the sudden, if unseen, working of God's glorious power, for, according to this scripture, God's most glorious power is best seen in our constant and instant self-suppression, and in our patience and long suffering, exercising self-control at all times toward one another.

If we rise and attain to this, to be patient and long suffering, with joyfulness, then in that case we are walking worthy of the Lord to all well pleasing, and are thus increasing in the true knowledge of God. And, beloved, we are to do this in the hardest of places—at home and in the factory, in the store and upon the street, not in the ends of the earth, but in the patience, and long suffering of our everyday life, among our own household, kindred and friends. May these wonderful passages of scripture impress themselves deeply into our hearts and minds, so that we may experiment upon its truth and its blessedness, even this day, is my prayer.

"We do not cease to pray for you, that ye might walk worthy of the Lord, being strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, unto all patience and long suffering with joyfulness. Giving thanks to the Father, who hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light, and who has delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son." The apostle James exhorts us to confess our faults one to another and to pray one for another, that ye may be healed. "The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

This may mean either mutual acknowledgment of our faults, our shortcomings, in our mistakes of deportment in our conduct towards one another, or suggestions that may tend greatly to peace and brotherly love, if duly practiced, or a communication, reciprocally, of our conflicts and experiences and failures, with a candid confession of those things which may become a burden to our conscience. This, if prudently managed, will make way for us to counsel, encourage, and exhort one another, and will suggest the form or direction to our prayers for one another so as to promote inward peace. It seems to be the law of our being that when we are in trouble, or distress, or perplexed, to seek the advice and sympathy of one in whom we may confide. The priests of the Roman Catholic Church understand this fully and have established the "confessional," whereby they have obtained such a hold upon their followers. But the apostle James had no such thought as this in his mind when writing this epistle. Rather that any of the brethren may profitably confer together concerning their conflicts, sins and temptations, that they may encourage, warn, counsel, exhort and properly pray for each other, and they should never be backward to confess their offenses which they have committed against their brethren: or to forgive such as have been done against them. We ought greatly to desire, and highly to value, the prayers of our fellow-believers, and to abound in supplications for them, as "the effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

We ought never to be discouraged from this duty by the consciousness of our weakness, unworthiness or sinful passions, as they who of old received such signal answers to their prayers were "men of like passions with us:" and we have as good reason to expect that God will answer our humble, believing requests for such things as he has promised, and as are really for his good and for his glory, as all the saints down through the ages who have wrestled with him and prevailed.

In the use of all proper means every one of us should pray and seek for the spiritual good of our families, our relatives and friends, but at all times more especially for those who are of like precious faith. If we could but value every opportunity that presents itself to pray for one another, realizing that perchance that even some may obtain a place in the kingdom as a result of our prayers, how much, beloved, we would prize prayer. Let us then resolve to bear each other up before the throne of grace in prayer and supplication, remembering our beloved brother Paul, taking him as our example, who writing to the Ephesians, says: "Wherefore I also, after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus and love unto all the saints, cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers, that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him. The eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of the inheritance in the saints, which is his body, the fullness of him, that filleth all in all."

Let us remember also the same apostle's exhortations to his son Timothy: "I exhort, therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions and giving of thanks be made for all men, for kings and for all that are in authority, that we may lead a quiet, peaceable life in all godliness and honesty." Praying also for the return of our dear Redeemer and the establishment of his glorious kingdom, where, if we are faithful unto the end and are permitted to be counted among those who are more than conquerors, will, with "the ransomed shout to their glorious king, where no sorrows shade their souls as they sing; a sinless and joyous song they raise, and the voice of prayer is eternal praise."

DIALOGUE
No. 3

Mr. Oracle—I think you said you wanted me to hear a quotation from "Beacon's Light of History" when we were discussing the "immortal soul" question some time ago. Can you recall what you had in mind?

Mr. Christian—Yes; it was Dr. John Lord's lecture on Moses, and I would be pleased to read it to you now.

Mr. O.—Do. I have read many of Dr. Lord's lectures on both ancient and modern history, and his book, "The Old Roman World." He seems quite fair-minded in historical matters and impartial in his estimates of men.

Mr. Christian—Doubtless, then, you will be interested in his introductory remarks concerning Moses. He says: "Whether as 'a man of God,' a meditative sage, a sacred historian, inspired prophet, or as the heroic liberator and leader of a favored nation, or as a profound and original legislator, he alike stands out as a wonderful man, not to the Jews only, but to all enlightened nations and ages. He was evidently raised up for a remarkable and exalted mission," etc.

Mr. O.—That is extravagant praise from a man like Dr. Lord, and I think it quite justified by the wonderful work he performed for the Israelites. I regard him as among the prophets, and the equal of any of them.

Mr. Christian—Your estimate of Moses, like that of Dr. Lord, does not overstate the truth concerning him. God highly honored him in various ways, and notably in selecting him for his spokesman and law-giver; and yet more particularly in making him a type of his own Son Jesus Christ, as we seen in Deuteronomy, 18th chapter.

Mr. O.—I will look that up in my Bible at home; but now what was the passage you had reference to before?

Mr. Christian—I am coming to that now; but I wish you to note the language carefully, and see whether you think that in it he is altogether consistent with the opinion that Moses was "a man of God," an inspired prophet, or that God raised him up "for a remarkable and exalted mission." He says: "In the ritualism which Moses established there was the absence of everything which would recall the superstitions and rites, or even the doctrines, of the Egyptians. In view of this we account partially for the almost studied reticence in respect to a future state, upon which hinged many of the peculiarities of Egyptian worship. It would have been difficult," continues Dr. Lord, "for Moses to have recognized the future state, in the degrading ignorance and sensualism of the Jews, without associating with it the tutelary deities of the Egyptians and all the absurdities connected with the doctrine of Metempsychosis, which consigned the victims of future punishment to enter the forms of disgusting and hideous animals, thereby blending with the sublime doctrine of a future state the most degrading superstitions."

Mr. O.—I have heard that the Egyptians were the original teachers of the "immortal soul" doctrine, but I gave that fact no special significance, and never realized that they held that doctrine in connection with the ridiculous and absurd notion of Metempsychosis, or transmigration of souls.

Mr. Christian—You can readily see now why Moses "avoided everything which would recall even the doctrines of the Egyptians," the "soul" doctrine along with the rites and ceremonies of their worship.

Mr. O.—What reasoning does Dr. Lord apply to this silence of Moses on the doctrine we are studying?

Mr. Christian—He does not strike me as taking a very decided stand, and yet appears to favor the view which we call the scriptural view, as we read the apostolic teaching that "immortality" is conferred as "the gift of God" at the resurrection of the just. We base our contention upon such passages as Romans 2:6, 7; 2 Cor. 5:5; 1 John 5: 12; John 5:24-29, and many of like import.

Mr. O.—I will look these passages up before I come again, Mr. Christian. Did you finish the passage from your book?

Mr. Christian—No, not quite. Here is the latter part of it, and it needs close examination, too. Dr. Lord says: "Bishop Warburton seizes on the silence of Moses respecting a future state to prove, by a learned yet sophisticated argument, his divine legation, because he ignored what so essentially entered into the religion of Egypt."

Now we say, the argument of Bishop Warburton may have been both "learned and sophistical," as Dr. Lord asserts, but the point which he misses is in the fact that "the future state" of man after death does not depend upon the assumed inherent immortality of the soul; and under such circumstances it was not only natural but necessary that he should ignore such a doctrine. Moses could not do otherwise than ignore a doctrine utterly at variance with the divine plan of salvation and a false conception of the nature of man.

Mr. O.—Does Dr. Lord think that Moses himself comprehended the truth, but had reasons for concealing it from the people?

Mr. Christian—Dr. Lord seems undecided whether Moses purposely ignored the doctrine for fear it might be perverted, or because he wished them to forget it because it was a part of the Egyptian economy, but he suggests a possible explanation of Moses' silence, that the doctrine "was so deeply engraved on the minds of the people that there was no need to recognize it while giving a system of ritualistic observances." At all events, the silence of Moses, the man of God, and great leader and law-giver, on the subject of immortality of the soul, should make it clear to any unbiased mind that it is not a fundamental truth, or a truth at all.

Mr. O.—You do not follow Dr. Lord's reasoning, then, or receive with favor his suggestions?

Mr. Christian—Without any particular claims to learning or superior intelligence, I am still able to point out the error in his suggestions, which I believe are not convincing even to himself, as I shall show. Now, every intelligent mind is aware that all rites and ceremonies of a religious nature embdoy in them the fundamental theories and basic truths of their creed. So with every society, order and fraternity. The ceremonies and ritual are designed to illustrate those truths or teachings upon which they have founded their organization. If, therefore, the ritual and ceremonial law of Moses utterly ignores the "immortal soul" doctrine, is it not clear that it is not a "fundamental" or any other part of the belief Moses was inculcating? Is not the suggestion that it was "so deeply engraved in the Israelitish mind that it need not" to be incorporated in the ritual, somewhat weak when we read how he cautioned the people, saying: "Lest thou forget the things thine eyes have seen" (Deut. 4:9), and "Beware, let thou forget the Lord which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage" (Deut. 6:12); and again: "Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments and his judgments, and his statutes, which I command thee this day" (Deut. 8:11). These passages show how little probability any doctrine would remain engraven on the minds so deeply as to need no teaching to preserve it. If the most explicit written and continual oral and ritualistic teaching could fail to preserve the doctrine so carefully taught, what may we suppose would be the case of one not even alluded to?

And now as to the possibility that Moses refrained from speaking of the future state for fear it might be perverted: Can anyone seriously consider such a suggestion? Truth must be sown, like precious seed; it must be watered and tenderly nurtured to secure its development and full fruition. But error springs up by every wayside, like the wild weeds and briars, and spreads in spite of the earnest labor of the husbandman. Reasoning thus, it is apparent that Moses' doctrine, being the truth, must be taught "line upon line, and precept upon precept." To ignore a true doctrine would mean its extinction, or choking out, by the weeds of error. The most impressive thought and the one with the clearest ring of sincerity in it is what I find just following what I have read. Dr. Lord observes that "the comparative silence of the Old Testament concerning immortality is one of the most impressive mysteries. However dimly shadowed by Job, and David, and Isaiah, it sems to have been brought to light only by the gospel. There is more in the writings of Plato and Cicero about immortality than in the whole of the Old Testament. And this fact is so remarkable that some trace to the sages of Greece and Egypt the doctrine itself, as ordinarily understood; that is, a necessary existence of the soul after death. And they fortify themselves with those declarations of the apostles which represent a happy immortality as the special gift of God—not a necessary existence, but given only to those who obey his laws. If immortality be not a gift, but a necessary existence, as Socrates supposed, it seems strange that heathen philosophers should have speculated more profoundly than the patriarchs of the East on this mysterious subject. We can not suppose that Plato was more profoundly instructed than Abraham and Moses. And it is possible, after all, that the Grecians derived their opinions from the secret schools of Egypt." CHAS. A. GOSS.

CAUSE OF SELFISHNESS

Selfishness is an exceedingly unpopular vice. But when we consider how many fond and foolish parents spend years in doing nothing but trying to please their children and never develop the children's sense of duty, never call their attention to the rights of others, never acustom them to give way to others or perform services for others, we ought not to wonder that so many persons are wholly devoted to the gratification of self. The limb that is not used becomes weak and soft, and will at length dwindle and wither; but the mighty right arm of the blacksmith still thickens and hardens the longer he wields the sledge-hammer. And it is just so with all the faculties of body and mind.

QUICKNESS OF TEMPER

If a man be quick-tempered, if he give way to anger quickly and unrighteously, leaving out of the question entirely that righteous wrath which rises for good reason only, and is quite a different matter from temper, he is not generous, for he shows no regard for the comfort of those around him; he is not forgiving, because, though he may recover quickly from his aberration, and soon be perfectly urbane to the wilom victim of it, the restoration is simply forgetfulness, and to forget the injury inflicted upon others by his hasty words is by no means synonymous with forgiveness of injuries he himself may have received. Last of all, he is not large-minded. A quick temper is an unfailing indication of a limited inteligence and a lack of mental quickness. If the mind were large enough to grasp the true relation of things, to see how small a point in the universe this temper-rousing episode occupied, and if it could see this quickly—in a flash of thought—the outburst would be averted.

Every ons should see to it that he gives no encouragement to the pernicious blasphemy that Christianity robs life of its pleasures. The true Christian finds joys in every day that are incredible to the worldling who makes pleasure his god.

EDITORIAL

You can not know any truth thoroughly without having thought out for yourself. Shirkers and the thoughtless are barred from the divine secrets of God's blessed revelation.

The best part of a brother or sister's life consists of words and actions too small to be described, but too beautiful to be forgotten—the little, numerous, undistinguished acts of kindness that originate in the love of God.

Knowledge antedates love, yet there is a sense in which you must love before you know—a paradox turning in upon itself with sweet bafflement, yet having its perfect solution in the works of God, who has made all things in wisdom.

In hours of weakness and gloom it is comforting to know that as the height of heaven exceeds our stature, in the same incalculable measure the wisdom of God is higher than mortal thought, and his lover stronger and his life purer than man's. "With thee is the fountain of life." Out of this "Fountain" we have received our little drop, a "vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away" (Jas. 4:14).

A sister wishes some contributor of The Restitution write an article setting forth the scriptural proceeding in the following case, which condition is an actual one:

"A man named X. by lying, deceit, fraud and stealing, obtained a certain amount of property from a lady named Y, who had trusted him confidentially with the management of her property. The lady now wants to know whether or not she would be justified, according to the law of the scriptures in its interpretation, in (1) trying to regain this property; (2) in case of failure to do this, to report said fraudulent transaction to the authorities and to allow the law to take its course. I have, of course, read the passage where we are told to give our cloak also if the coat is taken, but am not sure whether this is to be taken literally or not. Then the scripture tells us to be subject to the powers that be, etc. Now, the question is, does the law of the land, which makes us share the guilt of a felon if we know of it and do not report it to the authorities, conflict with the law of God?

"To those answering in the negative, would they please consider the following hypothetical question: Would a person be justified, according to the scriptures, in trying to expel anyone from his house who should happen to come in and claim the same as his own, or should they just give it up to the person claiming it? I would like to hear from anyone who could help me on this question, through the paper."

IN CREEDLAND
No. 3
The Latitude of the Campbellite Creed

To illustrate the laxity of the Campbellite creed we are indebted to Mr. Ray for many of our thoughts and the manner of presenting them. The most prominent objection which Mr. Campbell urged against all existing organizations was that their creeds and platforms were too narrow to sustain his theories and conceptions. His gigantic powers were not to be circumscribed by the limitations of any creed. He therefore broke the fetters of the creed under which he was brought up, and, finding himself at liberty, he aimed at nothing less than the total destruction of all creeds and platforms. On this subject he declared in his zeal that "all the platforms, all the foundations of the sects, are therefore too narrow and too weak to sustain the millennial church and therefore must be pulled down" (Mill. Har., vol. 1:, page '7). When Mr. Campbell had made this remarkable discovery concerning all the sectarian platforms he then went generously to work to present "a scheme of things" as a platform which he considered broad enough to bear the whole superstructure called the millennial church. And he was not long in discovering the cause of the sectarianism of the various creeds. They all had too many articles in them to be believed or subscribed to. He immediately discovered that the fewer the articles in the creed the broader would be the platform. He therefore presented to the world a new platform with only tow articles or planks in it. The Campbellite creed has only two articles in it, and it is therefore a very "broad" (Matt. 7:14) creed or platform. And this will solve the difficulty that might be suggested to some concerning the diversity of views among the Campbellites. It may be asked, if they are all agreed on the Christian system, why are they so much divided among themselves in doctrine? The answer is easy. The Christian system, their creed, does not demand unity on but two points; therefore they may all adopt the creed, and yet be as far apart as the poles. In laying down his platform Mr. Campbell says: "The belief of one fact, and that upon the best evidence in the world, is all that is requisite, as far as faith goes, to salvation. The belief of this one fact, and submission to one institution expressive of it, is all that is required of heaven to admission into the church" ,Christian System, page 122). This is the Campbellite platform, and it contains the only points upon which Campbellites are required to unite. He sums up the first proposition thus: "The one fact is expressed in a single proposition --that Jesus the Nazarene is the Messiah" (Christian System, page 122). Thus we have the Campbellite

Platform

"Article I.—Jesus the Nazarene is the Messiah" (Christian System, page 122).

"Article II.—The one institution is baptism into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit."

These two articles, framed by Mr. Campbell, comprehend the whole platform of the Reformation. If you believe this "one fact," and submit to the one act, immersion, you will be received into the Campbellite society, though you may at the same time embrace all the errors which have afflicted Christendom for the last fifteen centuries. Then, according to the Christian System, it is not necessary to believe in the sonship of Christ, his death or resurrection, but simply that Jesus is the Messiah! The Bethany Reformer was very fortunate, whether by accident or design, in arranging the first article in his platform so as to include on this point the position occupied already by all the sects, for all the professed Christian denominations believe the one fact that Jesus is the Messiah. Then the only work which remains to be done, in order to bring about the union proposed by the Campbellite creed, is simply to get all the sects and the rest of mankind to be immersed. It is even so, that the Roman Catholics, Mormons, Episcopalians, Methodist, Presbyterians, Lutherans, Arians, Unitarians, Pelagians and Universalists, with all other professed Christian denominations, are agreed in their belief of the one fact that Jesus is the Messiah. These all believe in the Campbellite sense of that term; and also all sinners, except infidels and heathens, believe the one fact; then it follows that all that is wanting in order to unite the religious world is to induce them to be immersed for the remission of sins. This, no doubt, is the reason why the Campbellite preachers spend nearly all their time in preaching about immersion. But some of these sects have been immersed. Will the Campbellites receive them regardless of their views or opinions? They must do so in order to carry out their own doctrine.

Mr. Campbell himself advocated the reception of Universalists, without requiring them to reject their false opinions concerning the future destiny of the wicked. One Mr. Rains, a Universalist preacher, presented himself to the Mahoning Campbellite Association, and there confessed that he was still a Universalist, but he, at the suggestion of Mr. Campbell, was received on condition "that if these peculiar opinions were held as private opinions, and not taught by this brother, he might be, and constitutionally ought to be, retained" (Mill. Har., vol. 1, page 148). So this docile Universalist agreed "that he would not teach" his own opinions, and was received and made a reformed preacher. This is in perfect keeping with the Campbellite creed, which only requires the belief of one fact and the submission to one act. Again: Mr. Campbell says: "If a man professing Universalist opinions should apply for admission we will receive him if he will consent to use and apply all the Bible phrases in their plain reference to the future state of men and angels. We will not hearken to those questions which gender strife, nor discuss them at all. If a person say such is his private opinion, let him have it as his private opinion, but lay no stress upon it; and if it be a wrong private opinion it will die a natural death much sooner than if you attempt to kill it" (Chys. Res., page 123).

It appears from the above that if a Universalist will call his settled conviction that all men will be saved, irrespective of their moral character, "an opinion," and agree to keep it as his private property, he may and ought to be admitted as a preacher of the ancient gospel! He need not renounce his soul-destroying error. This practice of the Campbellites is not in harmony with the language of John. He says: "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God-speed; for he that biddeth him God-speed is partaker of his evil deeds" (2 John 1:10). John says "receive him not," but Mr. Campbell says "we will receive him." The Campbellites are thus guilty of bidding God-speed to Universalism by giving it shelter under the broad banners of the Reformation.

Again, Mr. Campbell says: "But men can not give up their opinions, and therefore they never can unite, says one. We do not ask them to give up their opinions; we ask them only not to impose them upon others. Let them hold their opinions, but let them hold them as private property" (Chy. Res., page 121). Mr. Campbell says: "We do not ask them to give up their opinions." The Campbellites only consider opinions as private property. Then all that is necessary for the advocate of error to get into the Reformation is to call those errors, it matters not how gross, "his opinions," and claim them as private property; he will then be received into the bosom of Campbellism with his errors.

BREAKING OF BREAD, PRAYER, SONG AND COLLECTIONS EXCLUSIVELY FOR THE CHURCH

Revised By the Editor.

A—Brother B, why is it that our brethren do not invite to the Lord's table those who are not members of the church?

B—I suppose, Brother A, that it is because they are not in the church, not of the household of God.

A—That means, then, our brethren understand that the supper is for those in the church and the household of God, not for those out.

B—Yes, I think that is the way they understand the matter, and being so firmly fixed in this view of it is the reason why they will not dare to invite others.

A—I think I understand you and I suppose you are right about it. The disciples did, and we do now, break bread on the first day of the week. They had, and we too have, prayers in connection with the breaking of bread in the assembly. Do our brethren invite others to participate with them in the prayers?

B—I think the brethren hold that those outside have no right to this for the same reason that they have no right to the supper. Our brethren know, moreover, that the children of God are the ones who are taught to pray—pray saying, "Our Father," and not those who are not his children.

A—You must be correct in what you here say, Brother B. If those only who are in the church and family of God have a right to break bread reason would say that they only would have a right to the prayers that go with it. Brother B, what about the laying by in store? Do the brethren hold that this first day duty, too, is the duty of Christians only?

B—Yes, sir; they know that the order to lay by in store was given to the churches in Galatia and to the church in Corinth. They know, too, that Paul said to the Corinthians: "Is any man among you a prophet or spiritual? Let him acknowledge that the things I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord." A commandment of the Lord to churches, to Christians, not to those out.

A—Brother B, there is one thing more about which I wish to ask—the singing in the assembly. It seems to me that if these other items, all of them are the duty of Christians only, reason would say that this is also.

B—You are correct. Reason would say it, and say it in thunder tones, say it in tones that could not be misunderstood except by those who have no reason. Brother A, you know that not one of these items of duty, given by him who is head of the church, was to be done by anyone not a member of the church; and these directions were to the church. By singing in the assembly they ad-admonish one another, not others. By singing they are to make melody in the heart to the Lord, a thing the unconverted could not do.

B—But, Brother A, if we were to quit inviting them to sing with us in the worship, we would ruin ourselves in the estimation of our religious neighbors—lose all the popularity we have.

A—Good! I wish it were so—wish we were a little less like our religious neighbors and a little less popular and a little more persecuted. A little more persecution would tend to humble us, drive us closer to the Book, and lead us to think less of humanisms.—J. R. JONES, in Exchange.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Restitution:

In the paper of September 16th I saw an article written by one of the brethren telling how long he had taken The Restitution. I believe I can tell a bigger story than that. I think my father must have taken it in the '50s. He took the paper when it was published in Rochester, N. Y., under the names of The Bible Advocate and Examiner. Bro. H. B. Himes was editor. Of course it was handed down to his children. I am the last one in his first family living. Well do I remember when Mr. Catlin and Ephriam Miller and Hoit preachesd at the little wooden schoolhouse in Marshall County, Ind. Both my father and mother were baptized under their preaching. They both died in the faith. My mother said it would be but a night's rest, and my father's favorite text was that he had fought a good fight and had kept the faith, etc.

I enjoy reading the sister's letters in the paper and often say "Amen." That is just what I would like to say myself, but don't know how to tell it. I am so glad the Lord has in these last days raised up men who can preach the truth. May he make his ministers a "flame of fire," is my prayer.

Your sister, looking for the soon-coming King,

E. C. VINNEDGE.

"LEAD ME INTO PATHS OF RIGHTEOUSNESS"

Psa. 119:33

"Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes, and I shall keep it unto the end."

Brothers and Sisters, we are all likely to become discouraged. It is hard for us at times to stand up and defend our religion. We know and thoroughly understand it, but the oppressions of the world are so great and many that we seem unable to bear them. Let us turn to the book of Psalms. We find much good, scriptural food in this book. Psa. 109:2 says: "For the mouth of the wicked and the mouth of the deceitful are opened against me; they have spoken against me with a lying tongue." "Let them curse, but bless thou; when they arise let them be ashamed, but let thy servant rejoice" (Psa. 109:28). "His work is honorable and glorious and his righteousness endureth forever" (Psa. 111:3). "The Lord is my fortress and my deliverer, my God, my strength" (Ps. 18:2). "I will call upon the Lord, that is worthy to be praised, so shall be saved from mine enemies" (Ps. 18:3). Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer" (Psa. 19:14).

Brothers and sisters, I think the way to become good, true Christians is to humble ourselves and admit to the dear Father where we err, for the Lord knows our sins, and we are the ones to confess. "Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty, neither do I exercise myself in great matters, or in things too high for me" (Psa. 31:1). "Behold, how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity" (Psa. 133:1). "For when I was yet in the darkness of the world I cried unto the Lord and he heard me" (Psa. 120:1), and since that time I feel as David says in Psa. 12:1: "I was glad when they said, Let us go into the house of the Lord." I hope that each of us can say at all times: "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee" (Psa. 119:11). "Oh, how I love thy law; it is my meditation all the day" (Psa. 119:97). "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path" (Psa. 119:105). "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth on the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night. And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth its fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not wither, and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper. The ungodly are not so, but are like the chaff which the wind driveth away. Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous. For the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, but the way of the ungodly shall perish" (First Psalm). "I will praise thee, O Lord, with my whole heart, I will show forth all thy marvelous works" (Psa. 9:1).

Dear ones, after all the dear Lord has done for us, and promised to us, let us be faithful to the end. "Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms" (Psa. 95:2).

We know, brothers and sisters, that the Lord cometh to judge the earth; he shall judge the world with righteousness and the people with his truth. Let us so live that we can say when the Lord calls us to rest: "I will both lay me down in peace and sleep, for thou, Lord, only makest me dwell in safety" (Psa. 4:8). "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness" (Psa. 17:15).

PAUL'S CHARGE TO TIMOTHY
(I Tim. 1:8-16)

The text which we are to consider now was written by Paul after his first imprisonment. Timothy was the son of a Greek father and a Hebrew mother. He had become interested and taught by Paul, and had been received into the faith and made it his life work. His disposition, no doubt, peculiarly fitted him to become a teacher of the gospel, which accounts for Paul's deep interest in him. Paul, in the 8th verse, shows that attention to physique and development of the body is a grand thing, and makes the life sweeter, and unless this process is kept up, as age increases, the vitality decreases. For instance, the grass, if it does not receive the right amount of water and sunlight, gets dry and looks old. An athlete, unless he takes a certain amount of exercise daily, begins to lose his strength and fitness to compete with others. Knowing what these things mean, and the serious attention needed to keep one's body in perfect shape and how often we neglect these things as we grow older; how much better is it to lend our minds to those things which will keep perfect our spiritual condition and keep before us that glorious hope of life eternal in God's kingdom? We all know how easy it is for the young to become adept in any sport or particular branch of learning; and once learned, these things are not easily forgotten. This is probably why Solomon says in Ecc. 12:1: "Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." We therefore should thank our heavenly Father that our lives have been so situated that these things have been known to us.

In the 10th verse, Paul goes on to show that on account of our having chosen this manner of life we cannot expect to have the world at large realize what our object is; and therefore being peculiar we must expect reproach, which is sure to cause us, in our weakness, a great deal of mental agony. If there is one human trait greater than another, it is our vanity, and we like to be approved by those with whom we come in daily contact. If therefore we sometimes receive a sneer or a laugh, after our endeavor to treat things in everyday life as a child of God should, and we are held up to ridicule, we may be sure that God will account it to us for righteousness. Jesus, in his sermon on the mount in Mat. 5:10 says: "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake: for their's is the kingdom of heaven."

In the 11th verse Paul says that Timothy is to command and teach these things. We may not be able to do this, but we can by our actions show to our comrades and friends that this doctrine which we are endeavoring to live up to confirms the old saying that "actions speak louder than words." We know not who may be watching us and what influence we have on others and therefore may do good when we know nothing of it. In this way we may let our light so shine before men that they may see our good works and glorify our Father who is in heaven (Mat. 9:5). In order the better to keep these things before our minds, would it not be well to place in some prominent place in our homes, a list of the christian virtues which we are commanded to practice?

The 13th verse is one which we might give particular attention to. The first commandment is reading. How can we expect to meditate and give ourselves wholly to the things of God, and how can we expect to profit by them, and how can our profiting appear to others, unless [illegible]? It is so easy to disregard this important command. My prayer is that we shall each fulfill in ourselves the last verse in our text: "Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine; continue in them; for in doing this thou shalt save both thyself and them that hear thee."

OBITUARY
Amanda E. Pence

Amanda Evans Pence, one of the staunch members of the Church of God at Pleasant View, Warren County, Ind., was born May 14, 1837, and died October 6, 1913. She was the eldest daughter of a large family and the fifth of the family to be laid away in the month of October, several years, however, having elapsed since the first of the five was laid away.

Sister Amanda, for she is a sister in the flesh, united with the church at the age of nineteen, and was married to William Pence at the age of twenty. Their home has always been in Warren County, Ind. She had been a sufferer for some months. At the time of her husband's death in March, 1913, she seemed also at the point of death, but recovered sufficiently to be about the house part of the time, realizing all the while that her days were numbered.

She leaves two sons and two daughters—Gabrial A., John F., Annie S. McCandles, and Jessie, a teacher, who resides at home. There are also three brothers, seven sisters and nine grandchildren, besides a host of other relatives and friends to mourn her loss. The church also and the community will miss her, for she was kind to all. The funeral services were held in the Methodist church at Pence, conducted by Bro. H. V. Reed, of Chicago, who spoke to a well filled house on 1 Cor. 13:12: "For now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face; now I know in part, but then shall I know even as also I am known." We then laid her beside her husband to await the resurrection.

MICHIGAN CONFERENCE REPORT

The quarterly conference of the Church of God in Michigan convened as per announcement at Millbrook, Mesecta County Michigan, October 10, 1915, and continued over Sunday. It is indeed a great pleasure to chronicle another good and profitable conference meeting at Millbrook. The brethren were all so cordial and all received such a hearty welcome that we all felt that it was good to be there.

Elders C. C. Maple, F. V. Blakely, B. W. Woodward and Sister W. A. Woodward comprised the ministerial force. There was a good attendance, and spirituality shown in the meetings was an encouragement and inspiration to our cause.

Elder C. C. Maple, State Evangelist, had been holding metings for some time in the vicinity of Millbrook. The interest had been very good. Two young men, Martin Scott and Asa Scott, were baptized, Bro. Maple assisting them in putting on the all-saving name of Jesus. The singing was very good, and the social meetings were enjoyed by all; the little heart-to-heart talks were an encouragement. Pioneer social meeting of Sunday morning was a joy to all, followed by an able lecture from Elder B. W. Woodward on "The Signs of the Times," followed by the breaking of bread, which was administered by Bro. Blakely, Bro. Maple and Sister W. A. Woodward. The sermon by Bro. Maple on the coming righteous Christ, and the glorious kingdom that is to come, was most instructive. He is indeed "a workman that needth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

It was a pleasure to listen to Elder F. V. Blakely, our Conference President, in his forceful words. He presented a beautiful glimpse of the Christ life and the golden age. Sunday at 7 P. M. the Young People's session, followed by a sermon, "The Temperance Call to the Young," by M. A. Woodward. Prov. 4:7: "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom, and, with all thy getting, get understanding." It was a most stirring lesson to the young people, and also for the older ones. Then followed some well chosen remarks by Bros. Wm. McCrodon, F. V. Blakely and B. W. Woodward.

Thus another good meeting is ended, its record is made. It may be the last—it will be for some, at least. So let us cherish the good in our hearts, that it may bring forth an hundred fold, and, in the end, everlasting life, is our prayer. The meeting came to a close by singing the beautiful words, "God be With You."

PERILOUS PLEASURES

2 Tim. 3:1-7

1. "Perilous pleasures"? In themselves no pleasures are perilous—or, rather, all pleasures have a healthy and educative function. Pleasures are not lures of the devil—they are lures of God. By them God beckons the race onward. Pleasure is his call to men: "This way! Here is good! Here is safety!" Pain is his warning: "Danger! Here is evil! Keep away!" The pleasure of adventure has helped the growth of courage. The pleasure of admiration has taught men to think of others. The pleasure of sound has made man musical. The pleasure of color has led us on to the art of Raphael and Velasquez and Turner. It is remarkable that every great and useful achievement is pleasure giving. The cutting of the Panama Canal has given pleasure to countless minds—and intellectual pleasure in thinking of it, an aesthetic pleasure in seeing pictures of it, in visiting it. Man discovers the sailing boat—and the sea becomes a joy. He learns to swim—and the exercise is delicious. He makes an aeroplane—and revels in its pleasure. In themselves, then, pleasures are not perilous. They are incentives to useful labor, God's encouragement.

2. Yet in a sense all pleasures are perilous. They are perilous because we are tempted to love them for themselves, and to live for them. They become positive evils when they take precedence of duty in life. God has created us, not for pleasure, but for holiness. Pleasure is therefore secondary to holiness, and it becomes a danger to the soul when it usurps the place of holiness and itself becomes primary.

The briefiest reflection will show us that this is so. The pleasure of gambling is a form of the pleasure of adventure. It is the introduction of glamor and excitement into a life perhaps otherwise dull. But it is evil because it makes us seek the pleasure at the cost of principle. So with other pleasures. Pleasures of taste are good in themselves, but perilous as they lead people to drunkenness or gluttony. Even love of music and other forms of art become virtual dangers if we give beauty a higher place than goodness and worship. Pleasures become a peril when, from being the handmaid of virtue, it is promoted to mistress.

3. Pleasures are most wholesome and least perilous when they are most intense. This sounds paradoxical, but it is true, because those pleasures are most intense which come unsought, following upon achievement, duty and sacrifice. The sportsman gets most pleasure out of his sport who does not think of the pleasure at all. The footballer who strains every power to win the game for his side, who flings himself whole-hearted into the struggle careless of the blows he may receive and the agony of fierce exertion, has an intensity of delight the mere pleasure-seeker could never find. The man who toils at his business, stinting himself, refusing pleasures, so that he may make a sweeter, richer home for wife and child, finds an exquisite pleasure in his labors such as he selfish lounger cannot know. So, then, to get intense pleasure, and at the same time to avoid its perils, the will must be set upon the highest possible object, and the life must march unswervingly toward that. That highest object is God. The intensest joy is in his service. Jesus knew this, who told his disciples: "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me."

Nothing can be more certain than that the character can be sustained and strengthened only by its own energetic action. The will, which is the central force of character, must be trained to habits of decision; otherwise it will be able neither to resist evil nor to follow good. Decision gives the power of standing firmly, when to yield, however slightly, might be only the first step in a downhill course to ruin.

SUNDAY'S "SAWDUST TRAIL"

A few thoughts in regard to a few facts. "Billy Sunday" (as it appears to please him to be called) held a meeting in South Bend, Ind., the fore part of last summer, continuing seven weeks, ending June 15th. Some of the results of the meeting, as reported by a South Bend paper, were as follows: Conversions, 6898; attendance, 666,058. Sunday's pay check, in one form at least, amounted to $10,500. Question: Did the 6898 converts hear, believe, repent and obey God's plan of salvation, as given by Christ to his apostles to be preached to the world, as recorded in Mark 16:15, 16? If not, why not? Was it because of the lack of knowledge on the part of the teacher? Was it because of the lack of money to carry on the work? Was it because of the lack of the influence of a big crowd? Or was it because no one was there able, willing and courageous enough to teach the people God's revealed plan of salvation and warn them of the wrath to come? As we have been informed, Sunday's plan or manner of converting the people was to call the sinners forward at some stage of the meeting, strike his "sawdust trail," and come forward to the platform, shake hands with Sunday, confess before or to him that they were sinners and now desire to lead a better life, sign a card stating their preference as to their church affiliations (if they had any); they were then dismissed by Sunday and prepared as Christians to join any church they desired. If we understand the plan correctly, this is the religious condition "Billy Sunday" left his 6898 converts he claimed he brought to Christ over his "sawdust trail" during his seven weeks' labor at Sounth Bend, for which it has been stated he received from the people $10,5000. Does that look as if Sunday was anointed, as Christ stated he was, to preach the gospel to the poor? (Luke 4:18).

But perhaps he has, for a time at least, helped the morals of the people in that city. But morality is never looked upon by God as Christianity. When Billy Sunday parted from his 6898 converts at South Bend, unless they went far beyond his teachings, they were no nearer the kingdom of God and no nearer Christ's righteousness than the young man was who, two thousand years ago, came to Christ and asked him: "What good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life? What lack I yet?" (Matt. 19:16-22). Go read and see. When we compass sea and land, engage autos, musical bands and daily papers to boost up to a higher pitch a fanatical excitement in which there is but little (if any) of God's plan of salvation, and leave the people there stranded on a bleak "sawdust trail," with the thought in their mind that they are now in a saved condition, you have made them —as the scriptures state—"two fold more the child of hell than yourself" (Matt. 23:15). Why, you ask. Answer: Because, in accepting erroneous teachings you have deceived and led them to believe they have done all God has required of them in order to become his children. Therefore, because of that trust in the teachings they have received from you, they will very likely never after give a passing thought to their soul's salvation. Do you catch the thought? A person will never send for a physician until he thinks he is sick and in need of one. Can the blind lead the blind to safe quarters? Where do the scriptures say such people will land? Look it up (Luke 6:39).

Perhaps it may be well for all of us to think on some of these things. I feel much like voicing the thought uttered not long ago by a devout minister in Akron, Ohio, when he said: "Sunday may do some good for a brief time, but in five years the town and churches (where he has been) are worse off than before he came. The people miss the excitment. Their pastors can not talk slang like Sunday; they can not take off their coats (as he can). Then people begin to call them old fogies and drop out of the church. I have more faith in the men who are working for the salaries we ministers get than in the vaudeville evangelism of a man who is a millionaire."

While writing this article night came on. I fell asleep, and these fancied thoughts came flashing to my mind, and I saw in my vision the day of judgment had come and the time of reward was at hand. Among the company to be rewarded was a singular group of people numbering nearly 6898 persons. An angel appeared before them and began to ask many curious and perhaps to some very strange questions. The first question he asked that company was:

"Where are you from?"

"We are from South Bend, Ind. We are Billy Sunday's converts of June, 1913."

"But," said the angel, "how came you thither without the wedding garment on?"

Answer: "We struck Sunday's sawdust trail and have arrived over that route."

"But," said the angel, "how about your wedding garment? You do not appear to have any on."

Answer: "We have never heard anything about a wedding garment."

"Then," said the angel, "neither do I know anything of a sawdust trail, of which you speak, leading to the kingdom of God. We here have heard and know something about a straight and narrow way leading unto life eternal and to the beautiful city of God, and but few find it, because it is such a difficult path to travel (Matt. 7:14). That faith is not padded with sawdust, nor is it strewn with roses, but it is often lined with thorns, crosses, sacrifiecs and at times much persecution, and some times death. Did you expect to win a crown of life while resting on flowery beds of ease, while others fought to win the prize and sailed through bloody seas?"

These were all very hard questions for that large and strange company to answer. But just at this point Billy Sunday appeared in their behalf and said: "I well remember my labors of seven weeks at South Bend, and the money I received for preaching there. I worked hard. I urged this company to strike the sawdust trail early in the beginning of my labors with them, take my hand, and become Christians. Some 6698 did so and went on their way happy and rejoicing, as did the eunuch after he parted with Philip (Acts 8: 38-40)."

"But," said the angel to Billy Sunday, "when your 6898 converts came over your sawdust trail, and inquired of you (if they did), saying, 'Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved?' did you tell them, as did Peter, who was moved by the holy spirit on the Day of Pentecost, 'Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of the Lord Jesus? Acts 2:37, 38). Did your 6898 that struck your sawdust trail, and, coming to that platform, grasp your hand, expressing a desire to live a better life, go on their way rejoicing under the same conditions and circumstances as did the eunuch when he left Philip after he baptized him? Did you and the 6898 persons go down into the beautiful waters of the old St. Joseph, and did you there baptize them, as did Philip, burying them in a watery grave, that they might rise in newness of life, and then and there begin the life of a new creature in Christ Jesus."

"No, I did not," said Billy Sunday.

The angel continued: "Did you not know there is not a single place in all the Bible where anyone is promised salvation and remission of sins in this dispensation that has not been baptized?"

"How about the theif on the cross, and children?" asked Sunday.

Said the angel in reply: "The theif died some forty or fifty days before the gospel plan of redemption began, and before the ordinance of baptism was instituted and commanded by Christ and his disciples. That ordinance does not relate to infants who have not as yet reached the age of personal accountability. It is for all those old enough to understand, believe and repent. God is addressing and calling for obedience. 'He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved' (Mark 16: 16). 'If ye continue in my word' (John 8:31). Did you also know, observe and teach all these things to the 6698 converts that are here that came out under your preaching at South Bend?"

"No," said Sunday, "I left them all at the lower end of my sawdust trail to work out their own salvation as best they could. I went to Chicago to look after the safety of my ten thousand five hundred dollar check. But I have just discovered they are all here expecting a crown and a home with me in your heavenly kingdom."

"But," said the angel, "don't you remember away back in the days of Christ's apostles it was said by Christ: 'He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, is a thief and a robber' " (John 10:1).

"But," said Sunday, "that is their lookout."

"But again," said the angel, "Christ has declared: 'If you love me ye will keep my commandments. If ye expect the reward promised to the faithful, 'Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

Remember Naaman. He quibbled and tried to avoid obeying the prophet when desirous of being healed of his leprosy. But before he was healed he was obliged to obey the prophet and apply his remedy exactly as commanded by him. Far better for all of us to forsake the "sawdust trail" and obey God. Take his narrow path and "walk ye in it," knowing it will surely lead us to the kingdom and to that beautiful city of eternal rest where goes no galley with oars, where none shall ever say, "I am rich," and where there is no more sorrow, pain, tears or death" (Rev. 21:1-10).

RESURRECTION AND JUDGMENT
No. 2
J. J. HECKMAN

"Christ the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming" (1 Cor. 15:23). This text teaches that the judgment was before resurrection for it says those that are Christ's are raised at his coming. If Christ's people are raised at his coming and others are not raised, does it not prove there was a judgment before this resurrection? Most surely it does, and this text does not use the word raised, but its context uses the word made alive, which is its equivalent. Christ's people then are made alive at his coming, and those who have not the spirit of Christ are none of his. Hence, none who are not Christ's people are made alive in this order, "every man in his own order." "Order" as uesd here means rank, or band, and that makes it doubly sure that they were judged before raised, because raised in a band to themselves, and not a mixed number of good and bad. But one steps up and says, the dead are cast out of the ground by emergence, and raised to immortal nature after being cast out—sown. And they turn to 1 Cor. 15:42: "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption, etc." They then turn to Isa. 26: 19 and read, "And the earth shall cast out the dead." And from the analogy they contend that as sowing is casting out, and that the casting out by the earth is the mortal emergence of the responsible dead, both just and unjust. Let us first examine Isaiah's words and then we can meet Brother Paul on half way grounds at least. The common version reads thus: "Thy dead men shall live, my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." The Hebrew word translated dead here is "rephaim," and the rephaim was a class of giants whom Isa. says in verse 14 of this chapter "They are dead they shall not live; rephaim they shall not rise." Did he contradict himself and say they should live again by being cast out of the ground alive and placed on judgment to find out whether they deserve eternal life or not. We think not. The Catholic translation reads thus: "Thy dead men shall live, my slain shall rise again; awake and give praise ye that dwell in the dust; for thy dew is the dew of the light; and the land of the giants thou shalt pull down into ruin."

Young puts it thus, verse 14: "Dead they live not, rephaim they rise not, therefore thou hast inspected them and dost destroy them, yea thou destroyest all their memory." Verse 19: "Thy dead live, my dead body they rise. Awake and sing, ye dwellers in the dust, for the dew of herbs is they dew, and the land of rephaim thou causest to fall." This translation causes harmony, while the common version does not. We should notice here too that living and rising are used interchangeable, and hence, when one begins to live again it is rising again, and hence to rise from the dead is to be made alive, and not a change from mortal life to the immortal. There cannot be a single proof produced from the Bible that casting out of dead men means casting them out of the earth, and therefore, no proof that sowing means casting out of the graves.

Now listen to Paul, "So also is the resurrection of the dead, it is sown etc." What is sown? If it is the resurrection, then resurrection means casting out, or sowing, and those worthy of the sowing "can die no more" Luke 20; "Therefore, mortal emergence is not taught. If it is the dead that are sown, and they are sown out of the earth instead of into it, then they are sown out alive, and we could not say the same if "the dead" are raised because there would be no dead to raise, they are all living when raised, can we not see? Now, "That which thou sowest is not quickened except it die" (1 Cor. 15:36). And therefore not made alive, for quickening is making alive, and is that not reasonable; none can be made alive unless they die, and there could be no resurrection from the dead because there would be no dead to raise. Paul terms the man a fool who asks, "How are the dead raised up and with what body do they come" (Ver. 35, 37), and goes on to show they are made alive in new bodies, and thereby shows that dead ones arise with different bodies from which they went into the grave; and as there are only two kinds of bodies, the natural and spiritual, we come to the conclusion that they go into the grave in natural bodies and come out spiritual bodies, and so the same good old Paul states in 2 Cor. 5:1-4: "We have a house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven. If so being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan being burdened; not for that we be unclothed, but clothed upon that mortality might be swallowed up of life."

This passage teaches us that we are now in a dissolvable condition, that there is also a condition called the naked and a future condition which is eternal. If the present condition is dissolved we still have the future promised and reserved in heaven for us. The question then is this, "Will we also have to get our present condition back again after it has been dissolved and we have lain naked for ages?" Does a naked man have to put on the old garment before he puts on the new? Could not the new be put on without the old? We know it can, and so it is with the new immortal nature; we can put it on and not bother with the old. Jesus says unto Martha, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall not die in the age" (John 11:25-27). This passage teaches just what we are contending for. The man who believeth in Jesus may now die but will live again; and when he lives again he shall not die. Hence his future life is an immortal life. But if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also make alive your mortal bodies by his spirit that dwelleth in you" (Rom. 8:11).

This passage also is in harmony with all the rest of the old book, and teaches that the bodies of men are made alive by the spirit of God and, as the spirit had been a previous occupant, that men are judged before made alive. The making alive here must be eternal life, for it is the life given at the resurrection and by the spirit of God. If we say a dead body is not mortal, we can say a living body cannot be quickened—made alive, because it is already alive. One writer says, " A natural body is a living soul." We know that, and it is some times termed a dead soul. We find that God formed Adam out of the dust of the ground. Was Adam natural or unnatural in body when formed? If not natural in body he was formed contrary to nature, and when made alive by becoming a living soul, he become a natural man. Is that the way? That is the way some would put it. But let us take another passage, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth unto his earth in that very day his thoughts perish." What day? Is it not the day he returneth unto his earth? It seems so to me. But a man is kept some times several days before he is buried in the grave, and if his thoughts don't perish until he is buried, then he can think after his death. So you see that just after a man's last breath has left him, he is considered as having returned unto his earth. Now let us reason thus on this text, "It is sown a natural body." When is it sown? When it returns to its earth. It returns at the last breath hence when the last breath leaves the sowing is complete; and hence is very closely connected with the living state of the man, and there is no proof here than man is cast out of the earth a natural body. In fact there is not one promise in the Bible that any righteous person will ever be raised to mortal life, but plenty of proofs that their future life will be eternal. The future eternal life of the righteous is now hid with Christ in God, and when he appears he brings it with him, and gives it unto his sheep, and then they never shall perish. Even Matt. 25:32 teaches that the sheep appear on his right hand, and by that teaches that he knew them before he separated them from the goats, and so with the whole book; they are in the immortal Christ's likeness. Job says, "All the days of my appointed time I will wait till my change comes," and "if I wait the grave is my home." He expected his change to take place in his leaving the grave and not some time afterwards. The good old Paul says, "Our citizenship is in heaven, from whence we look for our Savior who shall change our vile bodies into his glorious body." This is "David's awakening" and "Job's change." Is it not grand? Me thinks so; does not the reader?

LOVE ONE ANOTHER

"Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you and pray for them which despitefully use and persecute you."

Brothers and sisters, this word "love" appeals to most people as one of great importance, whether they are of the world or of God's chosen. In order to obtain peace we must love one another. I think love must begin first with the church. In order to be true Christians we must love each other. We, the children of God, are set up for examples to worldly people. If we were a people having a wrathful spirit, people would look upon us as being worse than those who do not go to church at all. Matt. 5:16 says: "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Again we read in Prov. 10:12: "Hatred stirreth up strifes, but love covereth all sins."

What would the world be without love? What could be done if each one had to depend entirely upon him or herself? We know in unity there is strength, and where two or three are gathered together, God is in the midst of them; but before two or three can be gathered we must have love. 1 John 1:7 says: "Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God and every one that loveth is born of God and knoweth God." Jesus says in Matt. 22:37: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind." We know that this is the first commandment and the second one is: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

In order to love each other we are called upon to sacrifice many things. But dear ones, the things we are asked to sacrifice are nothing in comparison with the reward we recieve. There is a verse that reads like this:

"Thre are loyal hearts and spirits brave
There are souls that are pure and true;
So give the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you."

We read that God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life."

Again, we find that at one time Abraham was about to offer his son as a sacrifice, when the Lord stopped him. So it is at all times. The Lord does not ask much of us, so let us love the Lord our God with all our strength and might. As a rule, anyone will give up anything to preserve his life if he is condemned to death. If, then, we esteem this mortal life so highly, why can we not love the Lord so much that we would give up anything now, even this live and look to the life that is to come? Therefore, brothers and sisters, let us so live and love the Lord and his teachings so that we can say with a free heart: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing."

THE GOLDEN CALF

Exod. 32

"Little children, keep yourselves from idols" (1 John 5:21).

This strange and disappointing episode of the worship of the golden calf has a many sided historic significance. It disclosed the moral degradation of the mass of those newly enfranchised tribesmen. It showed that the idolatry of Egypt and the lewd rites associated with it had crept into their imaginations. It declared that these Israelites were not ready to enter into Canaan, and that God must "lead them about" in the wilderness until such servile and corrupt minds had been replaced by a younger and purer generation. But the paramount interest here is the religious significance. This act touches the vital relationships of men to God. The story leads us up into the supreme purpose of God, into his ways with men, and, at the close, into the redeeming passion of the cross of Christ.

The first truth which arrests us is the power of a consecrated personality. Carlyle may have over stated the primacy of the single strong, resolved man in his "Heroes and Hero Worship." But the truth remains that every great moral and spiritual movement has been born and nourished in the heart of a single, often lonely, and always dedicated man. Had Moses, as these childish Israelites suggested, met his death in some dark night on Sinai, and had Aaron become the leader of the people, the awful purity of God's law, of the sublime truth of his spirituality, would never have been seized and held by Israel. Not one of the men who had seen the wonders of Egypt would have desired to enter the land of promise. How often, not only on the great scale of races and nations, but on the smaller scale of a village community, or a single house, the whole moral uplift depends on one consecrated believer!

The next truth is the clear conception of the destiny of the castaway. As Moses and Joshua came down from the mount, the sound of the dervish-like, rhythmic, and passionate ecstasies fell on their ears. Joshua, soldier-like, thought it was the sound of battle-cry. Moses, with vivid memory of Egypt, and deeper insight into the moral character of the people, half guessed the meaning of the strains. When the whole truth dawned upon him, his moral indignation roused his vehement temper, and he cast the red granite tables of the law over the cliff and broke them in pieces.

Do we understand this seemingly unrestrained act? It was not mere temper. It was not only anger. It was the expression of a heart broken anguish. What did this fashioning of the golden calf, and this dancing around it in nakedness mean? It meant a declaration of unbelief, a rebellion against a spiritual God, a denial of his holy demands. It was the making of "the great refusal" to yield themselves to God's purpose, and to surrender their lives to his obedience. What could God do with, or for, such a people? Of what use could these austere and holy commandments be to them? What was the only destiny now open to them? They could be only a wandering Bedouin tribe traversing the desert from pasture to pasture, drifting like the wind-blown sand until they found unworthy graves. They were castaways from God's great purpose. In the words of Moses, they were "blotted out of God's book."

The next truth which emerges is the inevitable penalty of such a sin. It seems merciless. The grinding of the golden calf to powder and making the people drink it, the withering rebuke of too-compaisant Aaron, the slaying of those who had taken part in the orgiastic rites, seem a ruthless vengeance. But tears and humiliation and shame and death wait on lewdness and licentiousness to all time. Let any man commit such sin as this, let him "sit down to eat and drink and rise up to play" (5:6), which is simply a Hebrew way of saying that men throw the reins on the necks of their passions, and they will come to a night of as deep a shame and as agonizing a death as the camp of Israel knew.

Then the gloom lifts. In the morning, after a sleepless night, Moses ascends the hill again to speak with God. He sees that there is only one way to restore Israel to a lost relationship. That is by forgiveness. But can God forgive this wilful, wanton, foul rebellion against him and his holiness? He will "make an atonement" (5:30). This may be set down as the first keeply significant use of this great word, although the truth behind it is native to the conscience of men. What Moses feels is that this sin cannot be forgiven merely by the word of a good natured and easy going God. It has outraged his law. It has been an act which has broken the old relationship. Now as then, with every sinner today who has refused obedience and denied God's claim, and mocked at his love, as with Israel, the way back to a restored relationship is by the forgiveness of sins through one who makes atonement. This is the strait gate, which so many will not enter. They will make some appeal to God. They will offer him their repentance and their tears. What they need is forgiveness, and that can be given only when the broken law has been honored by an atonement.

Then we reach the climax of this story, and we hear the throbbing of Moses' heart. The sin seems so awful that he trembles lest God will not forgive it. Then comes his cry: "If not blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written." He will go back to the desert. He will become Jethro's servant again. He will relinquish his hope of Canaan, if God will not accept Israel. God refused this great offer. No man can ransom his brother. But when Jesus, in the garden, laid himself down on the altar, God accepted the sacrifice of his own Son, and Moses' sublime willingness to die for others was seen accomplished in the cross. This passion beats in all who have been baptized into Christ's spirit. It beat in Paul when he said that he "could wish himself accursed from Christ for his brethren's sake." What could not God do if only more men could breathe with Moses' passion.

THE BOOK OF JOHN

By Alpha

The next word is a verb. It is een. It has the smooth breathing. This mark (') is the sign for the smooth breathing, and here it comes over the Greek letter "eta" (pronounce "e" as "e" is sounded in "they"). It is the seventh letter of the Greek alphabet. Over this mark is what is called "the circumflex accent." It is made as follows: (—). The mark within the parenthesis is ῆ (We have no character of the kind indicated.—Printer.) The translation of "een" is "was." It is the imperfect third person, singular, of the irregular verb "Ei-mi." "Ei-mi" is translated "I am."

Next we have the definite article in the Greek. It is "o" with (') above it. This is the rough breathing sign. It is not pronounced "oh," but should be pronounced "ha." The rough breathing makes it have the "h" sound. See? Remember the sound: as our English ha in ha ha! It is translated "the." Now if you'll get your Greek grammar by Hadley (page 32), or the one by Goodwin (page 81), you'll see that articles in the Greek have gender and number. This article, ha ("o") is the masculine article, and singular with the nominative case. Greek articles have cases, too. Remember it.

Let us now come to the Greek word "logos." Pronounce "log" in "logos" just as you pronounce our word "log." Pronounce the whole word that way—"logos." Two short o's as in hog, bog, log, etc. We translate this word "logos" as "word." It is in the nominative case, as "os" (its ending) indicates; the number is singular; the gender is masculine. Remember, the article being masculine, the word "logos" is, for they agree in number, gender and case. The word has two syllables. Some give a rule like this: When you divide a word into syllables a single consonant is always connected with the following vowel. We have an accent. It comes over the "o" in "log." That syllable is called the "penult." The accent (´) is called the acute accent. So far, then, we have "In beginning was the word." Oh, what a sentence!

INFALLIBILITY

On July 18th, 1870, the Vatican council declared the Pope to be infallible where he spoke or wrote ex-cathedra. In other words, he could burn, torture, flay, impale multitudes in the forenoon. He could debauch all night and wake up in the morning the very voice and vessel of Almighty God, incapable of error or wrong judgment. He could curse and swear and deny he knew the Savior of mankind, as Peter did, but when he got in the chair he was speaking the direct words and thinking the precise thoughts of God himself.

We are perplexed as to why these spells of infallibility should be intermittent. Now, if the Pope is God's mouthpiece in the afternoon, why is he not in the forenoon? Jesus Christ was God manifested in the flesh, but he at no time claimed to be able to lay aside his power and take it up again as a man doth a garment. This is inconsistency No. 1. If infallibility was not established until 1870 A. D., Popery was 1264 years in finding its place in the world. This is a long time for the only true church of Christ to err. If the multitude of Popes from 606 to 1870 erred in point of infallibility, maybe they have erred in other and more vital points. This is inconsistency No. 2. There are hundreds of others, but space forbids more.—The Menace.

Dating October 29th, Sister Whitehead writes: "You will be glad to know that, if no complications set in, the doctor thinks Bro. Wilson will recover. He has been a very sick man. If it had not been for his moral, temperate life, the doctor says that he could not hope for his recovery. This message is worth notice by young men. It pays in this life to be moral and clean, even if there were no hope of a life to come. When a crisis like this comes then the clean life counts."

For reasons which seem to demand such action, the Elders of the Church of God in Cleveland, O., took formal action at a recent meeting on the name of Charles C. Maple, dropping it from the roll of membership without letters of dismissal or recommendation. This notice seems necessary because, among other reasons, he was instructed in the truth and baptized by this church. He was for a short time evangelist in the Ohio conference, but resigned after a few months, and is now working in other fields and under different auspices.

Bible writers have used the strongest terms and plainest words possible to explain the doom of the unsaved, such as "burned up," "destroyed," "perish," "consumed," "come to naught," "come to an end," "blotted out," "be as the fat of lambs," "shall die," "go into perdition," "be as though they had not been," etc., etc. The word "destroy" is applied to "the law" in Matt. 5:17. If destroy, when applied to the sinner, means eternal torment, it would mean the same thing when applied to the law. The word "perish" is applied to both a sinner and money in the same text (Acts 8:20). If this word means eternal suffering, when applied to sinners, it would mean the same thing when applied to money. "Blotted out" is a term applied to sins (Acts 3:19); but who understands by this that sins are to be tortured forever?

IN CREEDLAND
No. 3
Creeds of the Church of God

In former articles we have shown that creeds, summaries of faith, were logical necessities. Paul has given a summary of the gospel in 1 Cor. 15, and a more extended one in Heb. 6. Alexander Campbell, with all his hatred of forms of faith, has been caught in the creed business himself. Now many members of the Church of God have come among us from Campbellism, and it would be strange if they did not bring with them some prejudice against creeds. The result is, some in our own church are opposed to creeds. But we now propose to show, by quoting some creeds that have been formulated in our body, that these are as creed-bound as anyone else. That many of those whom we quote are theoretically against creeds is not considered in this argument, except to point out that their testimony for creeds is all the more valuable because unintentionally and undesignedly given. The first creed we cite is printed on a postal card. On one side of the card is the picture of a new church; at the bottom of the card are the words: "For reasons why this church was built see other side." We turn over the card and read as follows:

"Because

"We believe that the holy scriptures teach the second personal coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, who will then establish his kingdom upon earth, Jesus himself being king over all the earth, with the immortalized saints of all ages and nations as co-rulers with him and sharing with him the glory and honor in ruling, judging and blessing the world, and bringing about the glorious restitution of all things spoken of by the holy prophets: the restoration of Israel, the literal resurrection of the dead, the immortalization of the righteous, and the destruction of the wicked.

"We reject as unscriptural the doctrine of endless suffering, physical or mental, as punishment to be inflicted upon any of God's creatures.

"We believe that the holy scriptures teach that man is wholly mortal, and that immortality will be obtained only as a reward for the exercise of faith in Christ and obedience to God's word, and that faith, repentance and baptism are prerequisites to the remission of sins, and a godly life thereafter as essential to our salvation."

BAPTISM IS NO PART OF THE GOSPEL
Revised By the Editor

Mr. J. J. F. Lockhart, a missionary Baptist preacher, made an effort to escape the force of an argument that I made on the necessity of obeying the gospel by declaring that baptism is no part of the gospel. Mr. Lockhart says a Baptist church is a body of believers baptized by a regularly ordained Baptist preacher. If we should accept this as true, then:

1. There can not be a Baptist church without baptized people.
2. Baptism is no part of the gospel—so says Mr. Lockhart.
3. It follows, then, since baptism is not part of the gospel, and there can not be a Baptist church without baptized people; preaching the gospel will never result in the establishment of a Baptist church.

Again: The gospel is the word of truth—"In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation" (Eph. 1:13). If "baptism" is no part of the gospel, since the gospel is "the word of truth," it follows that "baptism" is no part of the "word of truth." Since preaching the gospel will not result in the establishment of a Baptist church, for there can not be a Baptist church without baptized people, and Mr. Lockhart says bapitsm is not part of the gospel, and the gospel is "the word of truth," it follows, then, that preaching the word of truth will not result in the establishment of a Baptist church.

In the gospel the righteousness of God is revealed (Rom. 1:16-17). Mr. Lockart, with the Baptists, declares that baptism is no part of the gospel. It follows then that it is no part of the righteousness of God, and Baptists, per their doctrine, whe they baptize people, are not doing the righteous..ess of God; but there can not be a Baptist church without "baptized" people. It follows, then, that a Baptist church can not be brought into existence by the righteousness of God.

1. Baptism is no part of the gospel.—Lockhart.
2. In the gospel the righteousness of God is revealed.—Paul.
3. The apostles baptized by the authority of Christ.
4. If baptism is no part of the gospel it is no part of the righteousness of God.
6. But we are baptized into Christ (Gal. 3: 26-27).
7. If baptism is no part of the gospel, the word of truth, the righteousness of God; since we are baptized into Christ, it is not an act of the righteousness of God, nor in keeping with the truth.

The Baptists are wrong on everything they teach that is peculiar to them.

THE LORD'S SUPPER
1 Cor. 11:23-28

1. Jesus was in no sense a literary person. That he valued and loved the sacred writings of his race is obvious from many of his recorded sayings. There is also at least one word of our Lord that suggests an appreciation of original composition (Matt. 13 52). Nor can anyone deny that he had gifts of imagination and expression which, if used in literature, would have placed him among the greatest writers of the world, if not beyond them all. Nevertheless, Jesus refrained from writing anything, either for the use of his disciples or for making his gospel known to the general public. Why did Jesus thus deliberately eschew the making of books? Why did he not place his message with his own hand and in his own words unequivocally before mankind? Why did he not give us a document which would be finally authoritative, and which would need no criticism for its perfect elucidation? While we can not expect to give a complete answer to this question, at least we may be certain on this point, that Jesus did not intend his religion to be the religion of a book merely, but the religion of life.

2. Although Jesus did not attempt to perpetuate his teaching in authoritative documents, he did gather it together and express it in his own actions. He himself is the word of God, God's message to mankind. And especially in two actions are his teaching and mission dramatically summed up and expressed for all time. These two actions are the two ordinances or sacraments—baptism and the Lord's Supper. In each of these the follower of Christ is called upon himself to appropriate the gospel of Christ and himself to express anew that gospel, not by the use of the words of a creed only, but by doing again those acts which are symbols of the profoundest truths of the Christian revelation.

3. The whole gospel is symbolically expressed in the Lord's Supper. Any attempts at interpreting the Lord's Supper must therefore be incomplete and partial. It always means more than we can say about it, because it is a piece of life, the act of a sinless personality, discovered by every person who really links his own experience with it, to be full of deep and ever deeper meanings. It will be a good exercise for us to try to bring out some of the great gospel elements of the ordinance with a view to seizing them and experiencing them at a subsequent Communion Service. Here a few may be noted.

1. The supper is a call to remember Jesus. The communicant comes into the presence of his Lord. The tendency to leave Christ out of account is checked. The worldliness and materialism that surge about us become powerless. When men "consider him that hath endureth such gainsaying of sinners," they no longer "wax weary" (Heb. 12:3). The presence of the Lord is a reinforcement of life.

2. Meeting with God in Christ is a summons to repentance. The purity and love of Jesus and his oneness with God rebuke us. Contrition and confession are inevitable. We are reminded that the Last Supper was "in the night in which he was betrayed." Jesus was not crucified merely by his avowed and conscious enemies. His disciples were involved in it. Judas directly betrayed him, but not Judas alone was concerned. They all forsook him. When his enemies were hunting for witnesses against the Lord no disciple came forward to testify on his behalf. Peter was in the courtyard watching, and John probably in the high priest's judgment hall, but neither came to the help of Jesus. They tacitly consented to his death. The Lord's Supper reminds us all that we participate in the sin of the world that slew the Savior.

3. The central message of the gospel and of the supper is salvation. Christ did not come to condemn, but to save. God saves by giving, not his possessions nothing which God merely makes or owns can meet the demands of his fallen children, who are themselves Godlike), but himself. That he gives himself in Jesus is no limitation of his giving, but its maximum under the conditions of humanity. When Jesus died on the cross it was to show the last pulse of God's life, the last drop of his blood, given for mankind.

4. The Lord's Supper is not an isolated sacrament, but calls to a sacramental life. Many have regarded it as substituting a Christian festival for Passover, but the Last Supper seems rather to have been an ordinary meal, the bread and wine being ordinary foods. "As oft as ye do it" then applies not merely to certain occasional ritual celebrations, but to every meal of each day. No Christian should neglect the solemn communion with his fellow-Christians on the Lord's Day, but he should remember that this signifies and involves the consecration of commonplace events.

TWO GREEK WORDS

J. J. Schaumburg

Note a brother's statement on page five of The Restitution (Sept. 30), where he says that the Greek word "themelois" occurs "seventeen" times. It occurs sixteen times. Here are the references: Luke 6:48, 49; 14:29; Acts 16:26; Rom. 15:20; 1 Cor. 3:10, 11, 12; Eph. 2:20; 1 Tim. 6:19; 2 Tim. 2:19; Heb. 6:1; 11:10; Rev. 21:14, 19 (twice in this verse).

"Themelioo" occurs six times—Matt. 7:25; Luke 6:48; Eph. 3:18; Col. 1:23; Heb. 1:10; 1 Peter 5:10.

He says that "themelios" occurs twice in Rev. 21:14. It occurs once in Rev. 21:14 and twice in Rev. 21:19.

He also states that "katabole" occurs ten times. It occurs just eleven times. They are Matt. 13:35; 25:34; Luke 11:50; John 17:24; Eph. 1:4; Heb. 4:3; 9:26; 11:11; 1 Peter 1:20; Rev. 13:18; 17:8. He missed Heb. 11:11.

He further states that "katabole" is associated in every instance of its use with the term "kosmos," world.

Brother, it is in every case excepting the case in Hebrews 11:11. It is there associated with "spermatos" (seed).

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS CONFERENCE REPORT

The twelfth annual conference of the Church of God of Illinois was held during the week of October 1 to 12, and we are glad to report a very pleasant and profitable meeting. The weather was ideal, the attendance very good, and the speakers all well able to propound the word, both to the edification of the body and admonitory to those out of Christ. While only three came out for baptism we are sure there are others almost persuaded, and left thinking in all seriousness on the plain truths presented, and who will ere long take upon themselves the all-saving name.

We had with us Bro. D. C. and Sister N. B. Robison, of Salem, Ohio, throughout the meeting; Bro. L. E. Conner, of Ohio, the fore part of the meeting, and Bro. and Sister Jeffrey, of Murphysboro, Ill., the latter part of the week, all of whom presented to us precious truths, both new and old. It was Bro. and Sister Robison's first visit here, also Sister Jeffrey's, and we were sorry when good byes had to be said. Bro. Conner came not as a stranger to us, but as one known by all and a general favorite in the community. Bro. Jeffrey has endeared himself to the body here by his several visits and by his assistance in the meetings, making special mention of his solos, which were graciously rendered, lending special spirit to the meeting.

Bro. A. O. Lenz, of St. Elmo, Ill., our President, was here during the meeting, and Sister Leota Hanson, St. Louis Mo., spent the first Sunday with us. Sorry she could not stay longer, as she is like a ray of sunshine; but she puts duty before pleasure. Sister Lucy Lansberry, of Paris, Ill., was also with us, and her father, Bro. George Slack, of Dundas, Ill.

Those baptized were Vern Lansberry, Mrs. Polly Gross and Mrs. Henry Cooley. May they all continue faithful.

The subject matter was sufficiently diversified to sustain interest, and the gospel of the kingdom of God and the essentials of salvation were put before the people in clear, concise manner. Some of the subjects were as follows:

"The Gospel of the Kingdom."
"The Evolution of the Gospel."
"The Holy Spirit and Its Office."
"How the Apostles Made Converts."
"The Second Coming of Christ."
"What is the Future of the Earth and the Race"

On Saturday morning the business session was held, and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, A. O. Lenz; Vice-President, B. J. Woods; Secretary, Amy V. Weaver; Treasurer, Lewis Weaver.

On each Sunday morning we remembered our Lord's death in the breaking of bread. Two Berean services were held, the lessons being taken from the Berean booklet, lessons No. 63 and 72. These sessions were very interesting; the first meeting led by Sister Leota Hanson, the latter by Bro. Lenz.

Bible Class was held each morning, with Bro. Robinson as teacher. These lessons were truly our "meat and drink," and we acknowledge Bro. Robison a most efficient teacher. The only deplorable feature was that more could not have attended. From the several discourses we gleaned much food for thought and received much encouragement and inspiration to strive the more to make our calling and election sure by self-denial and keeping ourselves unspotted from the world; and by adding to our faith the Christian graces we hope to hear the welcome "Well done, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." May all be counted worthy to obtain that blessing.

AMY V. WEAVER, Secretary.

WHY ROMANISTS OBJECT TO THE BIBLE

Now, the real objection of Romanists to the Bible is: You cannot find in it many of the fundamental dogmas of Romanism. You cannot find in it priestly or episcopal celibacy. If the Roman Catholic people should read it, they would all see that their priests are not keeping the law of God in living without families—recognized families. The worship of Mary is not in the Bible. Purgatory is not in the Bible. The mass is not in the Bible. The assumption of the virgin is not in the Bible. Indulgences are not in the Bible nor papal infallibility, nor extreme unction, nor the inquisition, nor Dens' theology, nor a great deal more that they depend on. That is the real reason why they object to the Bible, because the open Bible in the hands of people destroys the wicked pretensions of the hierarchy, and emancipates men from a yoke that neither they nor their fathers have ever been able to bear without being pressed down to the ground.—Missouri Freemason.

OBITUARY

Died, at his home in Salamanca, N. Y., October 5, 1913, our beloved brother in Christ, John B. Lent. Born September 10, 1834, near Coburg, Ont., to parents who were active believers in our Lord's soon coming, he from youth devoted himself zealously to the things pertaining to the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ.

He was united in marriage to Margaret R. Coons, of Matilda Township, Ont. To this union were born Mrs. Edith A. Jones, of Salamanca; David H., of Fahamun, Alberta; Albert W. deceased, and J. Eugene, of Fonthill, Ont. Together they labored in life's temporal and spiritual labors until separated by her death, August 28, 1912. The closing years of their lives were much comforted by the faithful services of their widowed daughter, Mrs. Jones, with whom they lived. Besides the foregoing, our brother left to mourn his death sixteen grandchildren and a number of great-grandchildren; also three sisters, viz: Mrs. Eliza Bullen, of Perry, N. Y.; Mrs. Sarah Chase, of Medical Lake, Washington, and Mrs. Rebecca Hunt, of Ludlow, Mo., and one brother, James E. Lent, of Picton, Ont.

D. E. Sprague, of Salamanca, assisted the writer in the funeral service at the home, after which we bore him to the Beautiful Wildwood Cemetery of that place, where we laid him to rest beside her who till only a year ago had been his life companion. Companions now in death, they sleep till our Lord shall return the second time unto salvation. Our hope reaches forward that at that time they both shall by him be awakened to life immortal. So may it be. F. L. AUSTIN.

SIN AND UNBELIEF

Unbelief leads to sin, and sin leads to unbelief. The first sin came through disbelieving God. "An evil heart of unbelief" is a cause of "departing from the living God." Believing God leads to obeying him; while if we by our unbelief make him a liar, we have little inclination to heed his counsels or obey his commands. There can be no loving obedience unless there is first living faith. And there can be no living faith unless it is made perfect by obedient works. Those who put away a good conscience, soon concerning faith make shipwreck.

When of old they inquired of the teacher, "What shall we do that we might work the work of God?" the answer was: "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent" (John 5:28, 29). "Without faith it is impossible to please him," and faith is only kept in health and vigor by feeding on "the faithful word" and being exercised in constant obedience to our Lord's commands. Lord "increase our faith."—Selected.

EXPECTING TOO MUCH

Just expectations are valuable things. Many people are toned up to their best endeavors by knowing that much is expected of them. The desire is strong within them that the good opinion which some one has formed of them should be upheld, and they make strenuous efforts to this end. Whoever has had much to do with children knows how powerfully this motive will influence them, and added years seldom decrease its force. To preserve the influence however it is essential that only that should be expected which can be rendered.

HINDERING THE GOSPEL

The apostle Paul sacrificed his rights and endured many wrongs, lest he should 'hinder the gospel of Christ" (1 Cor. 9:12). He had a right to live of the gospel; and he had a right to exercise authority in the church; but he forbore to exercise his rights, in order that the gospel might have no reproach, and the word of God might have free course. Many times the servant of God is called to imitate his example. He has his rights which he might claim and insist upon; there are wrongs for which he might demand redress; but to do this would bring reproach upon the cause of God, and so this might hinder the gospel, and as the preaching of the gospel is the great thing which engages his heart, he rejoices even if Christ be preached through strife and contention; he is willing to decrease, if Christ may increase; and he is willing to forego his rights, and sink into insignificance, if Christ may be exalted Lord of all.

Are we helping or hindering the gospel? Are we seeking our own rights, our own will, and our own way, or are we laboring with heart and soul, and enduring with patient hope, lest we should hinder the gospel of Christ? "Therefore," said the apostle, "I endure all things for the elect's sake, that they may obtain salvation, which is in Christ Jesus, with eternal glory." The Pilgrim.

Here we see how to avoid perilous pleasures. Not by denying ourselves, but by living so as to gain the greatest and innocent pleasure. "Don't" saves no one. "Do" is the great word. Men are like hounds straining at the leash; they must be doing. The right thing is to encourage activity in the right direction. If a youth wants pleasure, let him embrace some noble ambition. To labor for others, to take up a hard task in Sunday-school, or social service, or evangelistic work, or mastering some art or handicraft for noble ends—that is the road to undreamed-of pleasure. Climb the mountain—you gain the sublime outlook when the summit is reached, and you also find thrilling joys in the very toil. Climb Hill Difficulty—it will test you, but it will also fill you with triumph and joy.

"YE ARE THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD"

GEORGIA GAZELEY

I sat alone in a cold, dark cell. Its floor, walls and ceiling enclosed me. Total darkness prevailed. I lingered a long time in this condition. The walls seemed to be so large that no human hands could ever break through. As I sat thinking of the past it appeared to me to be a past that was not to be remembered. At times, while I was there, pleasant thoughts would come into my mind, but in a short time they were forgotten. Time rolled on, and one day as I sat meditating over things of the past, a faint light appeared to me. Was it a dream? Did I just imagine this, or was it so? The wind was beating against the walls of my abode. Then I searched around. To my great surprise I saw a faint light in the distance. I walked toward it. Then, to my great surprise, I found that one of the stones in the wall had worn thin. I could see dimly out into the light.

After seeing this little light, I wanted more. I started and pulled and tugged away at the stone until I succeeded in removing one, and then another. The more light I got the more I wanted, and the better it was; and finally I decided to remove enough of this dark wall, that had closed me in so long, so that I might get out into the light entirely. I wanted to learn more of the bright side of life. I learned one thing after another. I learned of the true living God and his promises, and things of the past and the future. No longer did these short, pleasant thoughts come into my mind and vanish. Things that come to my mind now are spiritual, and they remain, and other things add to them. This dark cell, or the world of today, no longer possesses me. I have learned a lesson that I can never forget.

I look back at this cell, or the world, with scorn, for I no longer belong to the world, but to the "little flock" that is striving to walk in the straight and narrow path that leadeth to life eternal. I realize that I have not conquered entirely, but am still pulling down this wall of wickedness.

Now I try to make myself appear to the world as the little light that appeared to me when I was still in darkness. Brothers and sisters, how thankful we should be to think that we are not the ones that help to make up the walls of this cell (the world). Instead, we are like the wind that is pressing down this wickedness and wearing away the stones of this wall, and are trying to make our light shine through. For Christ says, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." And we know that if ye let our light shine as we ought to it will appear as brightly to the world of today as it did to me in that cell. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled."

INDIANA CONFERENCE REPORT

The annual conference of the Church of God in Indiana was held at the Church of Roll, Blackford County, October 9th to 12th, inclusive. F. M. McCrory presided. The following churches of the State were represented: Plymouth, Argos, North Salem, South Bend and Rensselaer. Each church organization should, if possible, send a delegate, or at least a written report of the year's work, to the yearly conference. In this way we can keep in closer touch with each other.

The program was carried out with but few changes. Bro. J. H. Anderson, of Troy, O., came to visit our conference, and we were pleased to have his name added to the program. With Bros. Anderson, Lindsay, VanVactor and Conner, the readers may know we enjoyed a spiritual feast. Each sermon was full of interest and instruction, and it is to be regretted that more could not have heard them.

There was one business session, one Berean meeting, which was led by Emma Ralsback, President, good social meetings, and a question box. So with excellent sermons, delightful weather and good, hospitable people to entertain us, giving us a hearty welcome, the result would naturally be a splendid, profitable and harmonious meeting

The conference was pleased to have with us as guests two sisters from Springfield, Ohio—Mrs. Peter and Mrs. A. E. Overholser; also Bro. Horlacher, from Monticello, Ind., an isolated member. It encourages and helps us to have such with us.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

"JESUS IS COMING"

Soon in Eden we shall tell redemption's story,
Soon, if faithful, we shall join the glad refrain.
Soon, with David, we shall strike the harps of glory,
"Jesus is coming, is coming again."

Oh, be faithful till we see the angel throng,
And our Savior we have waited for so long:
Oh, be joyful while singing the happy song:
"Jesus is coming, is coming again."

PRAYER

O Lord, we bring but divided hearts to thee; unite them to fear thy name, and may it be true of us that we do love thee and cleave to thee, and desire to serve thee with all the strength of our being, heart, will and mind. We bring to thee much weakness. O do thou clothe our impotence with thy power. We bring to thee troubles and cares. Do thou quiet the care, and in thine own good time remove the trouble. We bring to thee a heap of sins and shortcomings. Do thou more than forgive, cleanse and give us dominion over all temptation and sin. Make us pure, help us to love purity and to long after righteousness with that blessed hunger and thirst which is sure to be filled. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

WHAT SHALL WE DO TO BE SAVED?

M. Joblin

Friends: The subject to which I invite your attention this evening is a great and important one. Nothing in the whole realm of thought demands such careful inquiry and serious consideration. The question, "What must we do to be saved?" implies that those who ask it understand that they need to be saved, and that they will be lost if they do not do something. It shows that they have believed God's offer of salvation, and are anxious to know what conditions are imposed; shows that they accept God's propositions so far as heard, and want to know what is required of them.

In the great commission of our Lord he told his disciples to "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth (the Gospel) and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be condemned" (Mark 16: 15, 16).

The word "Gospel" means good news or glad tidings. Do you ask, good news of what? I answer: It is good news of life in an endless degree, after death, to make people eligible to an inheritance of the everlasting kingdom the God of heaven promises to set up on earth, under the whole heavens (Dan. 7:27). God has offered no other salvation. If a person believes that he has immortality as a part of his natural outfit, and if good, soars off to worlds on high at the death of the body, there is no use in his asking what he, in that belief must do to be saved, because he claims to have already the very life that is offered him. The instructions given are for obtaining a never dying existence—immortality, together with the kingdom, the coming of which Jesus and his apostles preached, and which Jesus said should be preached in all the world for a witness (Matt. 24: 14). It is of these instructions I speak tonight.

The Lord Jesus tells us in the third chapter of John that God gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life. These believers become sons and daughters by adoption, with all the rights and immunities of the only begotten Son. And it is largely of the adopting ordinance I now proceed to speak, viz: baptism. I want to show you what a hallowed ordinance it is, and how absolutely essential to salvation it is, and to give Bible reasons why it is essential. In addition to this I want to show who are proper subjects of baptism; and that there is only one Bible mode of baptism. In other words, that affusion or pouring is not baptism; and that sprinkling is not baptism.

In the first place, it is a most hallowed ordinance because the word religion comes from re ligio; ligio means to bind, and re means again, so that religion means to bind again, or unite again. It reunites or rebinds to God after separation by sin; and the chain that rebinds to God is composed of three links. Faith is the first link and works by love. Repentance, or the turning away from sins, which is induced by godly sorrow, is the second; and obedience to faith by baptism, is the third link that reunites to God. The end or aim of this ordinance makes it sacred.

Secondly, it is essential to salvation, because it is one of three conditions. Non-compliance with it proves lack of faith, and that leaves one without a motive for repentance. A person who from the heart believes what God in mercy offers to give us, and do for us, never needs to be urged to be baptized—he demands it; he is eager to comply with that test of his faith. His faith and love impel him to demand it. He takes God at his word and this makes the eternal weight of glory held out to him, real, and he wants to secure a title to it without delay; so, you see, obedience in baptism grows out of faith in the promise of the kingdom and glory, with eternal life. This phase of the subject is presented from the standpoint of duty. It is commanded. It must be obeyed. It is imperative, but when faith works by love it is no hardship; the privilege outweighs the duty.

Thirdly, I wish to show by reasons of tremendous importance WHY baptism is absolutely essential to salvation. First, it is in order to forgiveness. It is one of the three clauses of God's law of pardon: faith and repentance being the other two clauses. As we cannot be saved in our sins, how essential that we get rid of them. And the Spirit's direction to those who had believed the model sermon of Peter on the day of Pentecost, was, "Repent:" they had believed, remember, their belief caused them to demand what they must do to secure the great salvation proclaimed by Peter. But what besides repentance was exacted of them? Listen: "Repent and," and what? "Repent and be baptized, every one of you;" no matter who you are, or where you came from. Yes; be baptized, every one of you. This was the universal rule to the end of the age. But why be baptized, Peter? Answer: "Be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins;" that's what you must do to secure this great salvation. This is the Spirit's answer to your inquiry, "What shall we do?"

Friends, can you think of more gracious or more joyful tidings from God to poor helpless, sinful creatures out of the dust than that he will remit your sins, if after belief of the Gospel and repentance, you give proof of your heart-belief, by being baptized into the Anointed Jesus for that purpose? I cannot. It is now part and parcel of the very Gospel of life. It is like a codicil to the original will—the engrafted word; it is the new and living way whereby we can be saved. It is a part of the Gosepl which a person refuses to obey, or seeks for an excuse to disregard, in many cases.

Oh, how blind unbelief will make one err! If there be any in this audience occupying this position, I plead with them to consider that they leave themselves to their own resources by acting thus. By rejecting the divine recipe for the remittance of sin, they undertake to save themselves. I tremble for those who ask God to forgive them just for the asking, in utter disregard of his law of pardon. What presumption, to think that rebels can make their own terms of pardon, peace, reconciliation and adoption. Are not belief and baptism in the commission equal terms or conditions of salvation? If so, can any one expect salvation who disregards one of the conditions? If one person can with impunity set aside Baptism, why cannot another set aside faith? and another repentance? And when Faith, Repentance and Baptism are set aside, why may not a godly life be dispensed with by another? Where, then, would be the conditions of salvation? And if there be no conditions of salvation, why did God take such infinite pains to reveal his will in the premises in order that we might become wise unto salvation? I affectionately urge all such not to trifle with God's conditions of sonship. God cannot be deceived with will worship and assumed good intentions. Pious disobedience is as hateful to God as no service. Lip service is of no avail. Said Jesus: "Ye are my servants, if ye do whatsoever I command you;" not otherwise. In the 7th of Matthew, we see a company of pious ones who had done this, that and the other thing in his name, and expected recognition of him, but he answered them: "I never knew you; depart from me." Fearful words! Awful surprise! Remember this decision comes from the once crucified One, who manifested the Father's wonderful love to man, and who on his behalf at last laid down his life. This great fact should stamp upon your minds the heniousness in the sight of God, of scheming to evade the conditions of his gracious law of pardon. They had not entered by Christ, the door, or he would have been acquainted with them. They had climbed up some way—their own way, instead of his. Doubtless their fleshly minds had objected that salvation could not depend upon such trivial things as faith in some particular promises, and baptism; sincerity must be the grand essential. These are the objections made now, and the scene described by Christ will ere long take place. He foresaw the attitude of the religious world in the last days.

Allow me to say here, that the popular objection to baptism as a saving ordinance is founded on misconception. We do not teach that salvation, or pardon with a view to salvation, is purchased by baptism in water. We teach that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses from all sin; but that obedience to faith in baptism, places one just where the blood of Christ becomes effications to each believer. You will remember that Jesus told Nicodemus that "Except a man be born of water and of spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." The reason, in view of our findings thus far, is obvious: He could not take his sins with him; hence the Spirit's word by Peter: "Repent and be baptized, in order to remission of sin." Here was the test of their faith. If they had refused to comply with the command it would have proven that they were not fit for the kingdom, being in their sins—sinners.

If any one in this audience thinks that we teach that there is virtue in the act of baptism or in the water, he is mistaken, and perhaps for the thousandth time, I say: It is by grace—favor—we are saved, through faith on our part. We neither merit, nor purchase, nor earn it. It is all of God's free grace we expect to be saved. The act of submitting to burial in water pays nothing for our pardon; and there is no virtue in water to wash away sin. Adam died by eating of the forbidden fruit, but it was not by poison. It was disobedience that killed him. And so, although there is no virtue in water to cleanse from sin, there is virtue in obedience to the gospel of the kingdom, in this form of doctrine. This act shows that we have a living faith working by love; and then, oh hallowed condition—we can say with Paul: "Being justified," that is, free from sin, "we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ." Like Abraham, our faith is reckoned to us for righteousness. God considers us righteous in his sight, because we have complied with the conditions on which he offers to reckon us righteous; but all of his free grace. I tremble for those who presume to tamper with the law of faith and obedience laid down in the Scriptures; God pity the man who thinks he can palm off upon God pious works of his own, in place of clearly defined faith and obedience to the Gospel. They are in a pitiable condition who can so far discredit the truth of God as to think something else will serve every salvation purpose as well as the glorious Gospel of the kingdom, and life from the dead to inherit it. So sure as that the Bible is the book of God, they will be speechless guests at the marriage Feast. So sure as God has spoken to us in the past by the prophets, and in these last days by his Son, if they believe another gospel than the Gospel of the kingdom Jesus preached, they will be treated as climbers up some other way—as thieves and robbers—claiming illegally what they were ashamed to suffer for; what they were ashamed to confess before men. The Master has defined their destiny. Let us tremble before we dare to so dishonor God as to believe and teach that something else will save besides what Paul declares to be the power of God unto salvation—the Gospel of Christ (Rom. 1:16).

Fourthly, I propose to discuss the questions as to who are the proper subjects of baptism. The answer is found in the words of the great commission of Jesus to his apostles: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature; he that believeth (that is the first condition) and is baptized, shall be saved." But what must he believe? I answer, what the apostles were to preach. What Gospel was it that they were sent to preach? The Lord himself will answer that question in Matt. 24:14, where he seems to have anticipated the great apostacy from the faith, which we now witness, and which is so complete that teachers do not even know what the Gospel of the kingdom means; some thinking it means one thing and some another, oblivious of the fact that God once had a kingdom on earth governed by men, but which he entirely subverted because of the waywardness of the people, but promised to restore it on an everlasting basis under a great son of David according to the flesh, but Son of God by miraculous begettal. Hundreds of promises of its restoration were made through the prophets and psalms, and at last the promised son of David, the to be King on the Holy Hill of Zion was announced by the angel Gabriel to a Jewish maiden, that she should have a son, and he should be great, and should be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God would give unto him the throne of his father David, and he should reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there should be no end (Luke 1:30-32). This is the only kingdom of God ever promised in all the Scriptures of truth. This is the kingdom he preached the coming of. This is the kingdom he taught us to pray for, saying: "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven." This is the kingdom the people were, and are still invited to believe in. And this, too, is the kingdom he tells us he will welcome the saints to when he comes back from heaven and seats himself upon the throne of his glory promised him on earth, saying: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (Matt. 25:34), and seat them upon his throne (Rev. 3:21). This is the kingdom he preached, and which he commanded his apostles to preach in all the world, and which he said it was the Father's good pleasure to give the Little Flock (Luke 12:32). This, too, is the throne and kingdom referred to in the 15th of Acts, where the Spirit says of and for Jesus: "After this I will return and will build again the tabernacle of David, * * * and I will set it up, that the residue of men may seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called."

As this is the only kingdom of God ever promised, it is the only kingdom we are ever invited to believe in; and the only kingdom and glory to which God has invited any of the sons of men, on condition of faith and obedience. Suppose now, that with the book containing the promises of this kingdom in our hands, we believe in a home beyond the skies, some where, which has not been promised; would it not be the essence of folly to think that a false faith would entitle us to the only true kingdom of God? Could there be a more fatal delusion? Just think of it: After all, expect a share of the promised kingdom, which in life they would not believe in; were ashamed of; and refused to suffer for! Bible and common sense both teach that those who do not believe what God says, ARE UNBELIEVERS, no matter what else they believe. And God's estimate of unbelievers is shown by the fact that he places them in the same category with "the fearful, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers and idolators, and all liars, and shall have their portion in the lake which burns with fire and brimstone, which is the second death" (Rev. 21:8). And when you reflect upon the record that God has given of his Son; that he is to have the throne of David and reign over the house of Jacob forever; and then turn to John's first letter and read that he that believeth not God hath made him a liar, because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son, is it any wonder that there will be those who will call upon rocks and mountains to hide them from the wrath of the Lamb?

I have given infallible proof that one who believes in a gospel other than the gospel of the kingdom of God on earth is in no better case, in divine estimation, than the abominable ones just enumerated. If they were dipped in water a hundred times it would not remit their sins, because it is the gospel of the kingdom that must be believed before baptism is valid. Let me press upon your serious consideration the fact that when a person is baptized he takes that step in order to secure something he believes in. And if that something has been promised by God he secures a title to what is promised. And if faithful to the end of probation he will inherit what is promised. But suppose he believes what is not promised; what then? Will a hope not based upon God's promise ever be realized? If so, upon what principle? If not, is it not a vain hope?

Dear friends, as those momentous issues pass before me, and I see loved ones who are happy in the belief of a lie, just on the verge of the mightiest revolution earth hath witnessed, perfectly oblivious of coming events, I feel like Jeremiah who sighed and cried for the abominations and delusions of his times. Would to God he would use me tonight to arouse some soul to a realization of the fact that Jesus, being authority, if he is ever sanctified, separated from the world for God, it must be by means of God's truth. Error will not do it. "Sanctify them through thy truth," prayed Jesus, and then added: "Thy word is truth." This being so, I leave it to you if a person has been baptized in order to secure something never promised, has he done the first thing to secure what is promised? If a person has invested money in a swindling scheme, through false representations, would it not be an unheard of idea for him to expect the money thus thrown away to be applied to some legitimate enterprise, the proprietor of which was in no way connected with the fraudulent one? You all say, "Yes, it would be simply ridiculous." And yet we every day find people who want to palm off upon God their obedience to faith in a false system, as if it were obedience to faith in a divinely revealed system. Yes; actually expect him to credit them with obedience to the truth, while in fact they have only rendered obedience to faith in a false system. I would not deal harshly with them. I know how hard it is to unlearn. The trouble is they do not realize as they should that the gospel is something in particular, and that it is the sum of all God has promised to bestow upon us and do for us, on certain conditions; and that the power to save lies in this great bundle of promises when believed with the heart.

The popular idea, that sincerity is the chief factor, blinds men; and I pray God to help me to press home upon you this truth in the premises, viz., that heart-belief of the truth is the chief factor. It is the power of God unto salvation to everyone who thus believes it.

The reason of the prevalence of the sincerity-will-save idea is that people do not search the scriptures for themselves, and thus make sure what the truth is. Another reason is that they want to do as little as possible, and yet get into the kingdom of God at last. They are not constrained by the love of God and Christ. They need to visit the future great King over all the earth in the manger at Bethlehem. They need to visit the heir of David's throne at the carpenter's bench at Nazareth. They need to see the Lamb in the purpose of God slain from the foundation of the world, plodding over the hills and valleys, calling upon the people to repent in view of the coming of God's kingdom. They need to visit him in the temple as he battles with the pious enemies of God and truth all day, and watch him as he climbs the mountain where the midnight air witnessed the fervor of his prayer for strength to endure the contradictions of sinners again on the morrow. They need to visit Gethsemane and witness his tears and groans and prayers, and see him dragged from thence before the authorities, and see suborned witnesses testifying against him falsely, and see him smitten and flogged till long furrows were plowed upon his back, and see him mocked with a purple robe and crown of thorns, and see him fainting under the cross as he toils on toward Calvary. Oh, if they would visit the cross, where the world's Redeemer is suspended between heaven and earth, and where redeeming love concentrates, and hear him say, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do," and cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" and in feverish agony say, "I thirst," and see him mocked with vinegar and gall, and presently say, "It is finished," and see him bow his sacred head and die! Oh, if they could realize that he suffered all this in behalf of sinful men and women, to secure pardon and reconciliation and adoption for them, and make it possible for them to live after death, live always in honor and power and glory. If they could realize this they would gladly throw tradition to the wind and eagerly ask, "What must we do to be saved?" And upon hearing the Spirit's answer, "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins," they would be eager to be baptized into Christ's death; die with him, and be buried with him in symbol in order to live and reign with him in glory.

But I must now briefly consider the mode of baptism. In Eph. 4:5 we are told that there is but one baptism. That is, there is only one scriptural baptism; only one baptism in which the sin-covering name of Jesus is obtained. And I hold that as there is but one baptism, so there is but one mode. Because baptizo means to dip, plunge and bury. Greek lexicographers, with one consent in their definitions, as well as Greek philosophers, historians, orators and poets, render baptizo by dip, plunge and immerse, never as indicating sprinkling, pouring or scattering anything. So that when Jesus chose the word baptizo to express his meaning it should forever settle the matter. But if every Greek lexicon were destroyed, and all the usage of the literati lost to us, we have God's book which shows without the lexicon precisely what the mode of baptism is. In the 6th of Romans and the 3rd verse we find this language: "Know ye not that so many of us were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death?" Would they have been in Christ at all if they had not been baptized into him? Evidently the apostle knew of no other way of getting into him. It says they were baptized into Christ's death. In symbol they died with Christ, and, being dead with Christ, the proper thing to do with them was to bury them. And so the next verse commences by saying: "Therefore (seeing they were dead to the world, dead to sin), "Therefore we are buried with him." How buried with him, Paul? Answer: "By baptism into death." The mental and moral transformation that had taken place within them had to be set forth in outward symbol. A death and burial like Christ's had to be symbolized by an act of obedience—baptism. For a moment they are laid under the water and can not breathe; are cut off from the life-giving air. What a beautiful figure of death! What a beautiful symbolic grave! What more does the spirit in Paul say? It continues: "That like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." What a sublime symbol of the resurrection! As man can not live after death without a resurrection, so the candidate can not live if not raised out of the watery grave. But being raised in the likeness of Christ's resurrection, he has to live a new life, live for the future instead of the present, live a godly life which symbolizes the glorious and immortal life which Christ now lives by God (Rom. 6:10). The next verse says: "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." If words mean anything, we will not have a resurrection like Jesus' unless we are planted in the likeness of his death. A solemn verity, this!

Now, then, as a death with Christ, and a burial with Christ, and a resurrection with Christ, must be symbolized in baptism, I would ask you if it be possible to symbolize death, burial and resurrection by pouring or sprinkling? How long would it take to bury a person by sprinkling or pouring? As you will admit that it can not be done, are you not ready to conclude that only immersion is baptism?

I earnestly and affectionately urge all present not to slight God's plainly revealed conditions of salvation. The God of nature is the God of the Bible. And if you would know and realize how inexorable are his laws, think of the worlds on high revolving with an inconceivable velocity, and each pursuing its own journey through space for millions upon millions of miles with such precision that their positions at a given time can be calculated to a minute, and it is the same God who sends his gracious word to you, that if you believe the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, and in obedience to that faith you are baptized into the name and death of Christ, you shall be saved. Do not flatter yourselves immersion in water, without a knowledge of and faith in the gospel of the kingdom, will benefit you. It will not. Belief of what is promised makes one eligible for baptism, and nothing else does.

I have squarely set before you the outline of the way of life, and the way of death. Oh, choose ye this night whom ye will serve. Of course you can do as you please; but as you sow, so shall you reap. If you sow to the flesh you will reap corruption. If you want to abuse God's mercy, and abuse his kindness, and trample on his forbearance, and reject his long suffering, and wear out his love, you need not be what the world calls "bad." Just neglect this great salvation. Just say that Jesus didn't mean it when he said: "He that believeth not the (the gospel of the kingdom) shall be condemned." Just say, and act upon it, that you can be saved without all this fuss. Just say that it matters not what a person believes, or whether he be baptized or not, if he be only sincere. Yes; do that, and your condemnation is sure. Sincere unbelief, sincere self-will, sincere disobedience, are vile traits of character in the sight of God.

But why will you die? I plead with you to save yourselves from this untoward generation by accepting God's call to his kingdom and glory. Think of all the manifestations of God's love in the past, all the evidences of his goodness that you experience every day, and of all he promises to do for you in the future, and if all this finds no response in your hearts they must be as hard as stones. Listen to the plaintive voice of Jesus as he says: "Come unto me," and while mercy lingers "come." If you neglect this great salvation bear in mind that the wages of sin is death. Do not be deluded by the assertion that death is the gate to endless joys. This is a giant delusion. Death, in the estimation of the spirit, is an enemy, and this agrees with our experience. It severs the closest ties of love and friendship. All ranks and conditions of men fall before him. He is the skeleton in every cupboard, the worm that eats the life of every tree, the boundary of every existence, the destroyer of human hopes, the blighter of human prospects, the full stop of every life.

THINK, LIVE, ACT

Our topic strikes me very forcibly. Nothing is so impossible as not to think. Try however hard we may, still we think in trying not to. Then how important it is that we direct our thoughts along right lines.

Solomon says: "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Paul tells us in Phil. 4:8 what to think on. He says: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." Too often we forget to think about the true, honest, lovely and just things, letting the worldly pleasures rule our thoughts. Then how poor and weak we are!

As our thoughts are, so our actions must be. If our thoughts are along the lines Paul shows they should be, then our actions are kind, loving and helpful. We can then be of service in the Master's vineyard.

I am sure we have all seen faces that were very beautiful not merely because of the facial features, but because of the expression worn upon them. This expression of loveliness can not be suddenly acquired, but represents a period comparatively long of thinking on lovely and beautiful things. We can not think of coarse and mean things at the same time we think of the lovely ones. It is said of one of the great painters, who wished to paint a picture of the "Last Supper," that as long as he thought of a face for Judas he could not think of a face for Jesus.

You see we can have but one ideal, like which we grow like daily. Let us then keep our thoughts on the "perfect man, Christ Jesus," that we may grow to be like him.

Dear Restitution:

I have had the pleasure of reading some of your valuable papers, which I procured from my brother, and cannot do without it if it be possible to procure it.

I am enclosing a postoffice money order for a dollar and a half, for which please send me The Restitution for a year.

I was a member of the Baptist Church at one time, but am not now, because their creed does not correspond to the teachings of the Bible in my opinion. I have been looking for a church for some time which adhered strictly to the teachings of the Bible instead of mortal man, but have found none other but you so far. I don't know the name of the church whose views you represent, but but believe them just the same.

Wishing all the brothers the power to discern the truth and the guidance to follow in the footsteps of the Savior, I remain your brother in faith,

ALFRED R. ROBERTS.

so, I leave it to you if a person has been baptized in order to secure something never promised, has he done the first thing to secure what is promised? If a person has invested money in a swindling scheme, through false representations, would it not be an unheard of idea for him to expect the money thus thrown away to be applied to some legitimate enterprise, the proprietor of which was in no way connected with the fraudulent one? You all say, "Yes, it would be simply ridiculous." And yet we every day find people who want to palm off upon God their obedience to faith in a false system, as if it were obedience to faith in a divinely revealed system. Yes; actually expect him to credit them with obedience to the truth, while in fact they have only rendered obedience to faith in a false system. I would not deal harshly with them. I know how hard it is to unlearn. The trouble is they do not realize as they should that the gospel is something in particular, and that it is the sum of all God has promised to bestow upon us and do for us, on certain conditions; and that the power to save lies in this great bundle of promises when believed with the heart.

The popular idea, that sincerity is the chief factor, blinds men; and I pray God to help me to press home upon you this truth in the premises, viz., that heart-belief of the truth is the chief factor. It is the power of God unto salvation to everyone who thus believes it.

The reason of the prevalence of the sincerity-will-save idea is that people do not search the scriptures for themselves, and thus make sure what the truth is. Another reason is that they want to do as little as possible, and yet get into the kingdom of God at last. They are not constrained by the love of God and Christ. They need to visit the future great King over all the earth in the manger at Bethlehem. They need to visit the heir of David's throne at the carpenter's bench at Nazareth. They need to see the Lamb in the purpose of God slain from the foundation of the world, plodding over the hills and valleys, calling upon the people to repent in view of the coming of God's kingdom. They need to visit him in the temple as he battles with the pious enemies of God and truth all day, and watch him as he climbs the mountain where the midnight air witnessed the fervor of his prayer for strength to endure the contradictions of sinners again on the morrow. They need to visit Gethsemane and witness his tears and groans and prayers, and see him dragged from thence before the authorities, and see suborned witnesses testifying against him falsely, and see him smitten and flogged till long furrows were plowed upon his back, and see him mocked with a purple robe and crown of thorns, and see him fainting under the cross as he toils on toward Calvary. Oh, if they would visit the cross, where the world's Redeemer is suspended between heaven and earth, and where redeeming love concentrates, and hear him say, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do," and cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" and in feverish agony say, "I thirst," and see him mocked with vinegar and gall, and presently say, "It is finished," and see him bow his sacred head and die! Oh, if they could realize that he suffered all this in behalf of sinful men and women, to secure pardon and reconciliation and adoption for them, and make it possible for them to live after death, live always in honor and power and glory. If they could realize this they would gladly throw tradition to the wind and eagerly ask, "What must we do to be saved?" And upon hearing the Spirit's answer, "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins," they would be eager to be baptized into Christ's death; die with him, and be buried with him in symbol in order to live and reign with him in glory.

But I must now briefly consider the mode of baptism. In Eph. 4:5 we are told that there is but one baptism. That is, there is only one scriptural baptism; only one baptism in which the sin-covering name of Jesus is obtained. And I hold that as there is but one baptism, so there is but one mode. Because baptizo means to dip, plunge and bury. Greek lexicographers, with one consent in their definitions, as well as Greek philosophers, historians, orators and poets, render baptizo by dip, plunge and immerse, never as indicating sprinkling, pouring or scattering anything. So that when Jesus chose the word baptizo to express his meaning it should forever settle the matter. But if every Greek lexicon were destroyed, and all the usage of the literati lost to us, we have God's book which shows without the lexicon precisely what the mode of baptism is. In the 6th of Romans and the 3rd verse we find this language: "Know ye not that so many of us were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death?" Would they have been in Christ at all if they had not been baptized into him? Evidently the apostle knew of no other way of getting into him. It says they were baptized into Christ's death. In symbol they died with Christ, and, being dead with Christ, the proper thing to do with them was to bury them. And so the next verse commences by saying: "Therefore (seeing they were dead to the world, dead to sin), "Therefore we are buried with him." How buried with him, Paul? Answer: "By baptism into death." The mental and moral transformation that had taken place within them had to be set forth in outward symbol. A death and burial like Christ's had to be symbolized by an act of obedience—baptism. For a moment they are laid under the water and can not breathe; are cut off from the life-giving air. What a beautiful figure of death! What a beautiful symbolic grave! What more does the spirit in Paul say? It continues: "That like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." What a sublime symbol of the resurrection! As man can not live after death without a resurrection, so the candidate can not live if not raised out of the watery grave. But being raised in the likeness of Christ's resurrection, he has to live a new life, live for the future instead of the present, live a godly life which symbolizes the glorious and immortal life which Christ now lives by God (Rom. 6:10). The next verse says: "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." If words mean anything, we will not have a resurrection like Jesus' unless we are planted in the likeness of his death. A solemn verity, this!

Now, then, as a death with Christ, and a burial with Christ, and a resurrection with Christ, must be symbolized in baptism, I would ask you if it be possible to symbolize death, burial and resurrection by pouring or sprinkling? How long would it take to bury a person by sprinkling or pouring? As you will admit that it can not be done, are you not ready to conclude that only immersion is baptism?

I earnestly and affectionately urge all present not to slight God's plainly revealed conditions of salvation. The God of nature is the God of the Bible. And if you would know and realize how inexorable are his laws, think of the worlds on high revolving with an inconceivable velocity, and each pursuing its own journey through space for millions upon millions of miles with such precision that their positions at a given time can be calculated to a minute, and it is the same God who sends his gracious word to you, that if you believe the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, and in obedience to that faith you are baptized into the name and death of Christ, you shall be saved. Do not flatter yourselves immersion in water, without a knowledge of and faith in the gospel of the kingdom, will benefit you. It will not. Belief of what is promised makes one eligible for baptism, and nothing else does.

I have squarely set before you the outline of the way of life, and the way of death. Oh, choose ye this night whom ye will serve. Of course you can do as you please; but as you sow, so shall you reap. If you sow to the flesh you will reap corruption. If you want to abuse God's mercy, and abuse his kindness, and trample on his forbearance, and reject his long suffering, and wear out his love, you need not be what the world calls "bad." Just neglect this great salvation. Just say that Jesus didn't mean it when he said: "He that believeth not the (the gospel of the kingdom) shall be condemned." Just say, and act upon it, that you can be saved without all this fuss. Just say that it matters not what a person believes, or whether he be baptized or not, if he be only sincere. Yes; do that, and your condemnation is sure. Sincere unbelief, sincere self-will, sincere disobedience, are vile traits of character in the sight of God.

But why will you die? I plead with you to save yourselves from this untoward generation by accepting God's call to his kingdom and glory. Think of all the manifestations of God's love in the past, all the evidences of his goodness that you experience every day, and of all he promises to do for you in the future, and if all this finds no response in your hearts they must be as hard as stones. Listen to the plaintive voice of Jesus as he says: "Come unto me," and while mercy lingers "come." If you neglect this great salvation bear in mind that the wages of sin is death. Do not be deluded by the assertion that death is the gate to endless joys. This is a giant delusion. Death, in the estimation of the spirit, is an enemy, and this agrees with our experience. It severs the closest ties of love and friendship. All ranks and conditions of men fall before him. He is the skeleton in every cupboard the worm that eats the life of every tree, the boundary of every existence, the destroyer of human hopes, the blighter of human prospects, the full stop of every life.

THINK, LIVE, ACT

Our topic strikes me very forcibly. Nothing is so impossible as not to think. Try however hard we may, still we think in trying not to. Then how important it is that we direct our thoughts along right lines.

Solomon says: "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Paul tells us in Phil. 4:8 what to think on. He says: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." Too often we forget to think about the true, honest, lovely and just things, letting the worldly pleasures rule our thoughts. Then how poor and weak we are!

As our thoughts are, so our actions must be. If our thoughts are along the lines Paul shows they should be, then our actions are kind, loving and helpful. We can then be of service in the Master's vineyard.

I am sure we have all seen faces that were very beautiful—not merely because of the facial features, but because of the expression worn upon them. This expression of loveliness can not be suddenly acquired, but represents a period comparatively long of thinking on lovely and beautiful things. We can not think of coarse and mean things at the same time we think of the lovely ones. There is a power in perseverance that nothing can finally resist. Christ inculcates this in the matter of prayer.

Dating October 28, Brother Adams, writing from Palmer, Neb., says: "I am in the midst of quite an interesting meeting here. Sister King lives here. I go from here to Cushing,, where Sister Keeney lives."

All nature is constituted on the principle of slow growth. As we are part of the system of nature, nothing valuable can be accomplished with us in a religious way except as we conform to this universal law. Only destruction can be quickly done (2 Pet. 2:1). Modern evangelistic mongers should make a note of this.

IN CREEDLAND
No. 4
CREEDS OF THE CHURCH OF GOD

We cite the Indiana State Conference creed this week. This was written in 1908-10, under the following officers: J. H. Willey, president; Mrs. Lydia Railsback, secretary; and William Huffer, treasurer. The reader is again asked to note that we do not say that these brethren are for a creed, for if they were for it at the time this one was composed under their supervision, they might since have changed their minds. Of course it looks to us in our humble way of thinking that officers of a conference that would write or cause to be written a creed, pass it at their conference, and then publish it to the world, should be held as endorsing the creed; but we do not argue this point. Whether they endorsed it in 1909 and deny it in 1913, does not concern us in the least. They could consistently do this by having a "change of mind." The only point we wish to make is that creed making is not the work of creed mongers, but is the result of a logical mind formulating principles of its faith. If this creed is repudiated now, that action only makes our argument the stronger, because in that case we have a testimony for creeds by opponents of them. Following is the creed of the Indiana conference:

Declaration of Principles and Constitution of the Indiana State Conference of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith, Adopted at the Annual Meeting, Held at Argos, Ind., September 10, 1886.

Church of God in Conference Assembled at Argos, Ind., September 10, 1886: (Please not that this goes back to 1886—Editor.)

We, the members of the several churches represented by delegation, feeling deeply the necessity of closer union and better co-operation in the proclamation of the trust, and the promotion of the cause of Christ among us, as preliminary to this end, do set forth the following declaration of principles as the foundation of our faith:

We accept the Bible as the only rule of faith and practice.

We believe in the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as the King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ. A hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

We believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.

And further to secure this end we recognize this our State Conference.

Constitution

Section 1. This conference shall be known under the name of "The Indiana State Conference of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith."

Sec. 2. It shall be composed of the organized churches of the state of Indiana, which churches shall be represented in the conference by duly authorized delegates.

Sec. 3. This conference shall, at each annual meeting, elect the following named officers: A president, first and second vice president, one secretary and one treasurer; these officers to be an executive board to transact business.

Sec. 4. The secretary shall keep a record of the proceedings of each meeting; of all the business transacted, and enter the same in a book kept for the purpose of future reference; which book shall be open to the inspection of any member of the conference.

Sec. 5. The treasurer shall keep an account of all money received, from whatever source, and of its expenditure under the direction of the conference, or of its executive board; said accounts to be open to the inspection of any member of the conference.

Sec. 6. Any organized church within the state may be admitted into the conference upon application and approval.

Sec. 7. Letters of commendation may be granted to ministers of the word, but when not satisfied as to fitness of applicants, from want of information or otherwise, then to be granted only on recommendation of the local church to which applicant belongs. Such letters to be granted for one year, and may be rescinded at any time for sufficient cause, by the conference, if in session, or by the executive board, when the conference is not in session.

Sec. 8. Each church shall be entitled to one vote at all meetings of the conference for every ten members and one for every fraction of six, said votes to be cast by the delegates of the several churches. Each organized church, no matter how small the number, shall be entitled to one vote.

Sec. 9. This conference shall meet not less than two or more than four times a year, for the transaction of business, at such place and time as may be determined by the executive board, timely notice being given through The Restitution.

Sec. 10. This conference adopts The Restitution as its organ, and recommends the brethren everywhere to give it their support.

Sec. 11. This constitution may be revised, altered or amended, by a two-thirds vote of the members present at any regular meeting, notice having previously been given of the proposed change.

The following was adopted at Plymouth, Nov. 16, 1901:

Whereas, "God gave Jesus the Christ to be head over all things to the church which is his body" (Eph. 1:22, 23), which body is of many members, being one body in Christ (Rom. 10:2, 5), having been "begotten in Christ Jesus through the gospel" (1 Cor. 15:15), "the Word of God" (1 Peter 1:23, 25), the Word of Truth (James 1:18); thus becoming a unit body. And whereas they (the members) are required to be of the same mind—no chism or divisions among them. (1 Cor. 1:10), thus maintaining unity (Eph. 4:3).

Resolved, therefore, that the church has no power to enact any law or rule whereby to either constitute or perpetuate the unity of the body, or church. This perrogative belongs alone to Christ (Eph. 1:22).

Resolved, That the church nevertheless, has ample authority in the premises. Because the head of the church—Christ—has made all necessary rules therefor, and has committed them to the care and keeping of the church to be used for such purpose.—"Hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness through the knowledge of him" (2 Peter 1:3), and has constituted the church the pillar (support) and ground (margin-stay) of the truth" (1 Tim. 3: 13), and has said to the church: "Occupy (carry on the work) till I come" (Luke 19:12, 13).

Resolved, That therefore, the church is in duty bound to observe and faithfully execute the trust left in their charge, which rules are explicit and ample to maintain unity of the body. Among which are: 1st "Preach the word" (2 Tim. 4: 1, 2), and "not man's wisdom" (1 Cor. 2:13); 2nd. "Foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they gender strifes" (2 Tim. 2:23). All questions unlearned from the word of God are only "Man's wisdom which is foolishness with God" (1 Cor. 3:19), being unrevealed things; 3rd. "There should be no schism in the body" (1 Cor. 12:25); 4th. "Mark them which cause divisions contrary to the doctrine—(teaching of the word) —and avoid them" (Rom. 16:17); 5th. "He that shall neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican (sinner)" (Math. 18:17). Such have rebelled against the head of the church.

Resolved, That we the members of this conference, as an integral part of the church of the living God, do accept in humble obedience the obligations thus placed upon us, and recommend like obedienc to the household of faith everywhere. Freely granting to all freedom of thought to infer and reason for themselves as to what may or may not be, concerning things not revealed; but not to preach, promulgate or agitate, within or without, such reasonings as matters of faith and hope for the body of Christ, which can only produce disharmony and want of unity. "Faith cometh by hearing the word of God" (Rom. 10:17). "There is one faith," "one hope." The one faith—the product of the word. The one hope—the product of the faith. Therefore to talk about having any other hope than that set before us in the literal statements of God's Holy Word, is but irreverence to him, and to persist in such agitation to an extent that even though it contradict the plain statements thereof, is but disloyalty to, and rebellion against his anointed, and destructive of the only true basis of hope.

"PRAGMATISE TILL I COME"

The English press reports that Dr. Morgan recently preached from the text "And he called ten servants of his, and gave them ten pounds, and said unto them, Trade ye herewith till I come" (Luke 19:13, R. V.). Considering the actual meaning of the word given as "trade," the preacher compared the rendering in the authorized version (Occupy till I come) and in Wycliffe's Bible (Merchandise until I come), and then said he would venture to take the Greek word and angli cise it. "Pragmatise till I come" did not seem to be very illuminating until Dr. Morgan quoted Professor James' saying: "Pragmatism is the doctrine that the whole meaning of a conception expresses itself in practical consequence." "Said Jesus in effect, if I may reverently thus interpret, 'While I am away, reveal the manner of the kingdom in which you believe and demonstrate your belief by these activities which are in harmony with your belief and by the demonstration of which you will prepare for that hour of my personal return.'

"The text reveals the true attitude of those who are called upon to exercise their responsibility," said Dr. Morgan, and he dwelt on two matters which should be kept in mind constantly by those who are working for the kingdom in the absence of the king: (1) the near, my piece of work; (2) the distant, God's perfected kingdom. There was also a slight reference to the unimportance of the intermediate.

The Inspiration of the Ultimate

"The ultimate is his coming to us for the manifestation of his kingdom here and in this world. There is nothing more important than that we should keep that great ultimate in view. Study constantly the visions of the seers. You find them in your Bibles, the pre-eminent visions, the most wonderful of all. Familiarise yourselves with them and then pass outside your Bibles, for there have been other seers and other prophets, men who have climbed the great heights. You will correct the visions of the other seers by the visions of the seers in the divine library, but study them all." To the young people Dr. Morgan said particularly: "Take time. Look ahead."

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN

By Alpha

Our next word is "kai." Pronounce it as you pronounce "ki" in kite, or "ai" as in aisle. The mark above the "i" is the grave accent. "Ai" here following "k" is a diphthong. In a diphthong the accent is (in the Greek) placed over the second vowel. "Kai" is a conjunction and may be translated "and."

The next is the definite article "ho." Notice the rough breathing sign ( ). It is the masculine article, nominative case, singular number. You had better commit the article to memory. How? Go to a second-hand book store and buy you (very cheap) an old copy of any Greek Grammar. (Goodwin's is fine; so Hadley's.) The articles are in any grammar.

"Logos" is the next word. It is the nominative, singular, masculine and is properly rendered "word."

It may be well to take up "logos" at this time and note the case and number. The singular is logos (mas.) and if a word, in the nominative case. Logon is a word and is the genitive case. Logoo is the dative case and is to or for a word. Logon is the accusative case and is a word (obj.) Loge is the vocative case and is, O word. The vocative case, not often used, is used in case of an address. Now the plural: Logoi, words. It is nominative case. Lagoon, of words, genitive case. Logois, to or for words. Dative case. Logous, words (obj.), accusative case. Logoi, O words, vocative case.

SECOND COMING OF CHRIST

Viola Gazeley

This great advent is the "blessed hope" for which we are living. Christ has promised us to return. He says: "I go to prepare a place for you. But if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you into myself, that where I am there ye may be also."

Are we, as believers, watching? Are we earnestly longing for the return of the blessed one? Do our hearts truly yearn for him and his appearing? We are told that "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time." Let us be found among those who stand with eyes upturned waiting and watching for his glorious appearing, for the "Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout."

Observe in Titus, how it is laid upon the saints to look for the blissful hope and the appearing of the glory of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. This hope is a blessed hope, for we read in Titus: "Looking for the blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ." It is a purifying hope, for we are told that "Every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure." This hope is a pacifying hope, for we are told to "Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Be ye also patient, establish your hearts for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." He who has this hope knows that his labor of love and patience of hope will not go unrewarded. This is a comforting hope: "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." This hope is a glorious hope: "For our citizenship is in heaven, from whence also we wait for a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation that it may be conformed to the body of his glory according to the working whereby he is able even to subject all things unto himself."

Our present attitude should be that of looking for this blessed crisis, praying for it, and loving it. We are admonished, "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man." If we are watching and ready, we shall be accounted worthy to escape all these things.

In Thessalonians we read: "We which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." There is, indeed, comfort in these words: "The dead in Christ shall rise first." We have loved ones laid away, asleep in Jesus; but at the voice of the archangel they shall rise in glory. They have followed Jesus down into the grave, through the valley of death, and will, at the sound of the trumpet, come forth, gloriously and triumphantly from the valley of death into heights of glory, and shall walk with him in life and light. At that time there will be a great home gathering of loved ones, who will live and reign with Christ in love and peace forever. We can assure ourselves of the final triumph of this kingdom, for God has spoken it.

"When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." At that time Christ will be King over all the earth. But let us consider what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing, if we are not going to be in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming.

If faithful unto the end, then shall we enter upon the possession of our inheritance, which is incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away. We shall be seated with Jesus on his throne, to judge the world in union with him, and to spend a happy eternity with him in glory. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

THE HOLY SPIRIT

L. T. Nichols

The subject of the Holy Spirit is one that will call for candid consideration, serious thought, and a highly reverential attitude of minds towards God's blessed word. In order to arrive at a true solution of the matter, we must first have a longing desire to know only the truth of the matter, followed by a willingness to exchange error for truth. To arrive at its true solution we must be led by something higher than ourselves; and that something must be, the unerring word of the Lord. If there arise diversities of opinions in our mind, the only way to settle them, is by letting a thus saith the Lord be the end of all strife—an end of all controversy. We are aware that the different ideas we shall set forth in this article will in no way accord with the common teachings of the day upon the subject, but, dear reader, we only ask you to carefully compare what we say with what can be plainly read in the book of all books—the Bible—and if in anything you find them to disagree, we say—"Cling to the Bible, the best book of all." No doubt you are aware that preconceived notions, and early education may have much to do in biasing our mind, thus making us quite unfit to properly weigh all the evidence. Therefore, let us, in the fear of God alone, try to divest ourselves of all prejudice, so as to be enabled to look at the evidence produced with an unbiased mind; for only by thus doing will we be enabled to gain the greatest information in the shortest possible time. In the investigation of this subject, let us turn away from all human thought; let it not be a question as to what we think, or have been educated in; let it not be "what does man teach?" or what has man taught? But what saith the Yahwah or Jehovah of old? What saith the blessed volume we profess to hold in such high esteem? Jesus says: "By their fruits ye shall know them."

If we abide by our own thoughts we know we esteem them higher than we do the thoughts of God. The prophet says that God's thoughts are higher than our thoughts (Isaiah 55:9). Therefore let us be wise and give up our thoughts and receive only the thoughts of God upon this all important subject. If we will all, not only be willing but anxious to do this, and let God's immutable word settle all disputes, not once referring to what man has said upon the subject as proof, we trust that much ambiguity will vanish and the subject will begin to glow forth in its divine beauty, because of the radiation that proceeds from so much higher source than our own little finite minds. All real truth lovers must say that this is the only wise way for us to proceed. No doubt that it will be conceded by all, that it is the belief of nearly all religious bodies that all true christians are in possession of the Holy Spirit, and many hold that the power to work miracles, as promised by Jesus to the Apostles, is in some way bestowed upon his people; at least it has been the facts in the case so far as the present writer is concerned. We once believed "These signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." I said, we once believed this, but "believe" is too strong a term for an honest man to use; we simply assented to this. For indeed, if we really believed, we would have been showing our "faith by our works." We simply assented to things that we well knew that we could not perform. We were honest and said to ourselves: "Have we really and honestly ever seen any real pouring out of the Holy Spirit?" Honesty drove us to answer, "Never." We asked what was the effect of

Holy Spirit Manifestations?

Let us turn to the first occurrences after the promise was made: "When the day of Pentecost was fully come * * * there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting * * * and they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." Now, let us each one in the fear of God, and in view of the facts, ask ourselves: Have we ever witnessed anything of the kind in our day? Did we ever see any one professing to have the Holy Spirit, speaking in a tongue he never learned? No, we never did. What is the matter? Has God changed? Does not the same effect always follow the same cause? Here was the Holy Spirit; yes, the genuine Holy Spirit given, and the result that followed was: "They began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance." The signs began at once to follow those that believed. Now if we had the same genuine Holy Spirit, would not the same result follow, and would we not begin to speak with tongues as the Spirit dictated? Answer this in the fear of God, not man, and you will answer, as we were forced to answer: "Yes, yes, the same result will follow, as soon as we get the same cause." Turn to where the Holy Spirit was given by the laying on of hands, and see what followed (Acts 19:6). "The Holy Spirit came on them, and they spake with tongues and prophesied."

Was not the speaking with tongues one of the things that Jesus said—"these things shall" (no guess work) but—"shall follow them that believe?" Here we were met with the God-given statements, and also more than all, with the humiliating fact that we had never seen such results follow any man or woman making claim to have Holy Spirit; and, as an honest man we were driven to conclude that their claim was only a claim, only a pretention, without the effect. Here we were—being honest we could not join with the pretenders; neither could we deny that Jesus said: "These signs shall follow them that believe." We were waiting and so earnestly praying for God to fulfill the promise: "These signs shall follow." We had been led to believe that they would follow through all time. While we were anxiously waiting and praying for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, we were at the same time on our guard so as not to be deceived. We had a minister with us by the name of Stroud, and he said, that in the Greek, "tis ton ai-on" means "for all time." He would be with them always in signs and wonders. I accepted it as truth, believed it and waited for its fulfillment. Time passed—but I looked and longed in vain. I was then living in Wisconsin. Stroud was holding a meeting some distance from us; word came to us that there had been an outpouring of the Holy Spirit—Stroud had cured a brother, who had not walked for six months. We started for the place immediately. What hope and anxiety filled our hearts! Was the blessed promise, about to be fulfilled? Was the Spirit to be poured out upon us from on high? We could with joyful hearts accept the evidence if it proved the work divine. I met Stroud—he hailed me gladly, rejoicing that he had been made a partaker of the Holy Spirit. I found our people greatly excited, a number of them believed that there had been a genuine outpouring of the Holy Spirit. I asked for evidence—I only wanted to be convinced that the work was of God, not man. I questioned the healed man. He stated that when Stroud placed his hands upon his head he felt as though an electric shock had passed over him, and he arose. I was not satisfied that the work was divine; it seemed nothing more than the result of animal magnetism. I had known of such cures before, I had known people cured from even receiving a shock to the system, causing a reaction and thus effecting a cure. Among my acquaintances was a woman who had been confined to her bed for over two years. She seemed to have lost all power to move. One day, her little grandchild, whom she dearly loved, was alone with her in her room. In its play it upset the table, and was pinioned to the floor, crying with pain. She screamed for help, but none came, there being no one near. Realizing the danger her darling was in, she made a mighty effort, which caused such a reaction in her system that she sprang from her bed and rescued her loved one, and was a well woman from that day.

My father-in-law had a severe attack of rheumatism: his limbs were swollen to an enormous size. He was not able to stand or walk a step. By some means a fire started in the house, the cry of fire re ounded through the rooms; the roof was in flames; few were near. The excitement under which he labored was so great that he rose up, grasped a bucket of water, ascended the ladder and assisted in putting out the flames; a feat that he could not have performed under any other circumstances. I knew of many such cases, and I wanted evidence so plain, that it could not be refuted; so stamped as divine, that it could not be gainsaid.

Let us think, act and live, because our thinking controls our actions; thoughts and actions make our lives, as true followers of Christ, that we may be accepted when he comes to make up his jewels, is my prayer.

DUTY

Duty can not be confined to certain times or certain places and shut out from others. It is as present in our business as in our homes, as potent in our lightest amusement as in our gravest endeavors. Let us not cramp its power or limit its range, still less exclude it from any intellectual region, but rather strive to trace it through all that comes to us, and search for its lesson in everything we learn. Just as the sun reveals afresh to us each morning the work that is wating for our hands, so the light of new truth will ever reveal to the faithful seeker the new responsibilities and duties with which he is charged.

Your goodness must have some edge to it, else it is none. Nothing is at last sacred but the integrity of your own mind.

NOW

Nearly all the mental troubles that do not directly spring from organic disease are distinctly traceable to the effects of morbid imaginings, and nearly all the disorderly mental processes of this class consist in unwisely "looking forward" or "looking back." Hope feeds on the future, and despair is poisoned by the dread of it. The misery of regret and disappointment is a creature of the past. The secret of health of mind and moral integrity consists in taking a firm footing in the present, that the mental equilibrium may not be easily disturbed. There is no need to ignore the lessons of the past, or to disregard the objects and obligations of the future; but it should not be forgotten that human life, with its opportunities, its duties and its responsibilities, is an affair of now.

I have often thought of Bro. Huggins' short account of the birth of his baby boy; he said there is another preacher born into the world. If the parents both work in accordance with that thought the child is sure to get over being a child, and will become a man, and a preacher that will be worth hearing.—G. W. Calder.

SUCCESS

It is a great mistake to imagine that success without effort will ever make a man or a woman happy. What we cease to strive for ceases to be success, and gradually becomes more and more worthless. Suppose the same wages to be paid for nothing that are now rendered for skill and energy and persevering word, or the same applause to be showered on the mere trifles that is now given to the public benefactor—could they possibly kindle the same joy in the heart of the receiver that they now do? They would mean nothing, stand for nothing, and shortly would be nothing.

There are persons whom you can always believe, because you know they have the habit of telling the truth. They do not "color" a story or enlarge a bit of news in order to make it sound fine or remarkable. There are others whom you hardly know whether to believe or not, because they "stretch" things so. Cultivate the habit of telling the truth in little things as well as in great ones.

Do a man a kind act, and make him feel that you have done him a genuine favor, and, no matter how depraved he may afterward become, unless he is a chronic ingrate, he will always mention your name with respect and recall your memory with the tenderest feelings of gratitude. Strike a man, use him with violence, and the memory of that blow, be it in act or word, will engender feelings of hatred in him against you so long as his life lasts.

To live one day with the happiness, it may be, of a year depending upon it, ought to make men and women careful how they live; but with the eternal life so closely interwoven into the life that now is, and every word, feeling, thought and act so many seeds that will grow to future harvesting, how serious a thing is life!

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

ARE YOU READY?
No. 1
ALICE B. CURTIS

Are you ready for the Savior,
When he comes to claim his own?
Will he show you favor at that hour
When he takes his royal throne?

Will your heart beat high with gladness
When you see his coming near?
Or will it be filled with sadness,
And your face be blanched with fear?

Are you longing for earth's treasure,
Which so fleeting is at best?
Or is Christ your greatest treasure,
Where your heart secretly rests?

Are you living for the present,
Simply living as you choose?
When the future's so important,
Not a moment you should lose

Do you fear "I never knew you"
Will be his words in that great day,
When his piercing eyes look through you
And all your hidden sins shall see?

PRAYER

Our Father, we pray that thou wouldst help any of us who may have any special burdens to carry. Thou daily bearest our burdens, and we would cast them and ourselves on thy strength, and beseech thee that it and thou may never fail us, but may be most present when most needed. Teach us thy holy will. Show us what thou dost mean by all the various conditions into which thy daily providence leads us. And we pray that we may never waste our sorrows, nor be unresponsive to thy commands as revealed to us in thy providence. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

HOW THE GOSPEL WAS RE-DISCOVERED

At the time of Cromwell's death (1658) many of the so-called laity were making themselves acquainted with the teachings of the Scriptures, but many of the so-called clergy were profoundly ignorant of their contents; for instance, about that time the Bishop of Dunkeld thanked God that he knew neither the Old nor the New Testaments. In England, in the year 1551, out of 311 clerics in the diocese of Gloucester, who were examined as to their knowledge of the ten commandments, the Apostles' Creed, and the Lord's Prayer, only 90 passed well. No fewer than 171 of them could not repeat the commandments, ten could not repeat the Lord's Prayer, and nine could not repeat the Creed. In the year 1530 Tyndale's New Testament was publicly burned in St. Paul's churchyard, after it had been condemned by a council summoned by King Henry the eighth. One of the charges on which Cardinal Beaton condemned Sr. John Borthwick in 1540, was that he had a New Testament in English in his possession. Five persons were burned on the Castle Hill, Edinburgh, March 1, 1539, apparently for no other crime than that they did not hesitate to study the books of the Old and New Testaments.

About the beginning of the seventeenth century the Anabaptists (so-called) had become quite numerous. One James Toppe was one of their leaders at that time. He was a staunch believer in Christ's personal reign on the earth. He died in 1512. Laude became Archbishop of Canterbury in 1633, and persecuted unmercifully all those who did not attend the English Church or dared to differ from its teachings, but he himself was beheaded for treason in 1611. During his rule Alexander Leighton published a book called Zion's Plea. For this he was sentenced to have his ears cut off, his nose slit, and to be publicly whipped. Similar punishments were inflicted on Burton and Prynne, and Laude wrote in his dairy in 1634:

"I have received a copy of the sentence against Paterston, and am verily of your Lordship's opinion that a little more quickness of government would cure this itching of libelling and something that is amiss beside."

John Bunyan, born in 1628, died at London in 1688. He was one of the Anabaptists, and was confined for this twelve years in Bedford jail. It was while he was in jail that he wrote his famous Pilgrim's Progress. It was about 1655 that he became a member of the Baptists' body. He traveled quite extensively among the churches after he was released from jail.

Wightman was burned at the stake in 1611. He said that the souls of the elect saints departed are not members possessed of the triumphant church in heaven; that the baptizing of infants is an abominable custom; that baptism is to be administered in water only to converts of sufficient age of understanding, converted from infidelity to the faith; that there is not the trinity of persons, the Father, Son and the Holy Ghost, in the unity of the Deity.

John Payne, in a work published at Harlem in 1597, says:

"Gentlemen, be warned of the opinions of the Anabaptists. First, our English and Dutch here hold that Christ took not his pure flesh of the Virgin Mary, and to deny her to be his natural mother. Secondly, that the Godhead was subject to passions and to death, which is impossible. Thirdly, that the infants of the faithful ought to be baptized. Fourthly, that the souls do sleep in graves with the bodies until the resurrection. Fifthly, that magistrates ought to to put malefactors to death. Sixthly, they condemn all wars. Seventhly, they deny the article of predestination. They deny the Lord's day. Finally, they savor much of the opinion of free will, and the merit of works."

One Turner, a candlemaker of Sutton Valence, in Kent, preached in houses, barns and in woods, and declared that the Church of England is the Whore of Babylon and the Synagogue of Satan, and the Bishop of Exeter said that he had many followers. The only mistake that Turner made in this respect was in taking one of the daughters for the old Whore of Babylon herself, but he was not far astray.

Thomas Hobbes, a well known writer, born in 1588, died in 1679. He was instructor to Charles, Prince of Wales. He was a friend of Dr. Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood. He was also a friend of Lord Bacon. Hobbes believed in and taught conditional immortality, and for this he was called an infidel. He replied to Bishop Bramhall:

"Now as to the harmony of the two Testaments, it is said in Genesis 2:17: 'In the day thou eatest of the tree of knowledge, dying thou shalt die.' That is, when thou art dead thou shalt not revive. Therefore Adam and Eve were not immortal."

John Milton, born in London in 1608 died in 1674. He was a strong supporter of Cromwell and of his government. His works, "Paradise Lost" and "Paradise Regained," are universally known, but his writing against the teaching of man's immortality are just as systematically ignored. He was on the unpopular side on that question.

Another well known character, John Locke, born 1632, died in 1701, was an extensive writer, and among his works he wrote one on the "Reasonableness of Christianity," in which he showed that the scriptures taught that eternal life could only be had through Christ; that the immortality of the soul was not taught in the scriptures.

John Wesley the founder of Methodism, was born at Epworth, Lincolnshire, England, in 1703; died in London in 1791. He believed and preached that Christ was to personally reign on the earth, but the large mass of his followers ignore that doctrine. I met one of the prominent Methodist preachers in a conference on that subject, and he owned that John Wesley taught that doctrine, and that it was scriptural, and he acknowledged that the preachers were derelict of their duty in not preaching it!!! The people love to have it so, and the preachers are evidently willing to gratify them. So also with the large mass of the Baptists; they have completely ignored the doctrine of life in Christ only, taught by many of their early champions, who died for their faith.

Richard Whately, Archbishop of Dublin, born in London in 1787, died in Dublin in 1831, said in "A View of the Scriptural Revelation Concerning a Future State," a work of 300 pages: "That the natural immortality of man's soul, as distinct from the body, is discoverable from the body, may be denied on the ground that it has not been discovered yet. No arguments from reason, independent of Revelation, have been brought forward that amount to decisive proof that the soul survives the body after death. Indeed, as I shall show presently, the arguments by which some philosophers did attempt to prove this did not even convince themselves. * * * It was Jesus Christ who brought life and immortality to light."

THE HOLY SPIRIT

No. 2

L. T. Nichols

Our Blind Brother

We had a blind brother, old Brother Seymour; here was something that would be a test. Stroud said that he could restore his sight; he prayed over him, and anointed his eyes, but no sight appeared; his poor blind eyes did not open to behold the wonders of creation. The poor man had faith; he believed that sight would be restored, and how we longed to see his hope realized, but the darkened vision still remained. I called on Stroud to speak in unknown tongues; for this was one of the signs that Jesus said should follow, to speak a language that he had never been taught; but he could not speak one word. I said to him: "You are certainly deceived, you have not the Holy Spirit; if you had you could prove it by the power manifested." His failure did not convince him, he still believed that he possessed the gifts of the spirit. I saw that something was the matter; there was the promise of Jesus, but I had never seen its fulfillment; I was between two fires; I could not refute the believer, and I could not answer the unbeliever. I could not deny what Gibbon, the great historian, had said: "Since every friend to Revelation is persuaded of the reality, and every reasonable man is convinced of the cessation of miraculous powers, it is evident that there must have been some period in which they were either suddenly or gradually withdrawn from the Christian Church. Whatever era is chosen for the purpose, the death of the Apostles, the conversion of the Roman Empire, or the extinction of the Arian heresy, the insensibility of the Christians who lived at that time will equally afford a just matter of surprise: they still supported their pretensions after they had lost their power."

I could not deny the accusation of the historian, that they had supported their pretensions after they had lost their power. All seemed dark, but there must be light ahead. That was many years ago, and I had not the knowledge of the Bible, or of the original languages, that I now have. I determined that I would search for light. I took my Lexicon, Greek Testament,, and grammar; I turned to "lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

Did it mean always? I turned to see how many Greek words were translated—"world." Young's Analytical Concordance gave four: First, "Ge," meaning the earth upon which we live; but that was not the word used by Jesus in Matt. 28: 20; if it had been, then we would have been forced to believe that Jesus meant that as long as the earth existed he would be with his people in signs and wonders. "Oikoumene" was another word translated "world"—meaning the habitable, the people that inhabit this ge, or earth; but that was not the term Jesus employed; so no one could claim that he taught that as long as his people existed he would be with them in miracles, etc. I looked farther, and another word I found, "Kosmos," meaning the arrangement of the people on this ge; but this was not the word that Jesus employed to express his thought. A fourth word now came to view--translated world, "Ai-on," that was the word used in Matt. 28:20, and it had for some of its definitions: "An age, generation, a space of time clearly defined and marked out." Words can not express the joy I felt when I read these definitions, and saw what the word really meant. This knowledge was more to me than thousands of gold and silver. "A space of time clearly defined and marked out." There was no doubt about it; the Bible again came forth triumphant. Jesus had used the right word, and the translators should have rendered it age. He only promised to be with them until the end of the age, with signs following. What age was that? It could be none other than the Jewish age, or world, that ended at the destruction of Jerusalem, A. D. 70 to 73. Paul plainly declares what world it was, in Heb. 9:28. Speaking of Jesus, he says: "Once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." All must agree that it was in the closing years of the Jewish age that Christ appeared.

Let Jsus farther explain it, Luke 21:20: "And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is night." When was it that Jerusalem was compassed with the great Roman army, commanded by Titus and Vespasian, and over 1,000,000 Jews perished, while thousands were carried away captive? It was A. D. 70 to 73, as all agree; then the Jewish age or world ended, the only age in which Jesus promised to be with them in signs and wonders confirming the word. In the 24th verse of Luke 21 Jesus continued and told them what would happen: "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

This proves that since the destruction of Jerusalem, A. D. 70 to 73, we have been living in the "Times of the Gentiles," and Jesus never promised that signs should follow during the Gentile times, until his second coming, when his faithful followers would do greater works than he had ever performed. As we will prove later, the time that elapses between the close of the Jewish age and his second comnig is the time between the "former and latter rain" of Joel 2, during which time there was to be no outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

They Preached Everywhere

I will be perfectly fair with you, dear reader; and right here I will bring in an objection, that you would no doubt mention if we were kindly conversing on this subject. I will suppose that you are talking now: "There is a point that I do not understand in this, Mr. Nichols—you claim that Jesus only promised to be with them in signs and wonders until the end of the Jewish age: how can that be? seeing that Jesus told the Apostles to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, and the signs shall follow those that believe; that proclamation given by Jesus to the Apostles has not been fulfilled yet; the gospel has not been preached to all the world." My dear friend, that is where the world have made a great mistake. The commission given by Jesus to the Apostles was fulfilled in that age, and by them. Listen to Mark 16:20, to what was declared after the commission was given: "And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them and confirming the word with signs following." Could words more plainly express the thought of the writer? "They went forth and preached everywhere." They fulfilled the commission—they preached to that world. Paul testified to the same truth in Rom 10:17, 18: "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of God; but I say, have they not heard?"

Now let the Apostle answer his own question: "Yes, verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world."

This should be convincing to everyone, but Paul gives us farther evidence on the subject (Col 1: 23): "If ye continue in the faith, grounded and settled, and not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature under heaven; whereof I, Paul, am made a minister."

The commission, as I have stated, was given to the Apostles, and was fulfilled by them. Paul was the twelfth Apostle, chosen in place of Judas, and he testified that it was proclaimed to that world, and the signs did follow confirming the words spoken. How every believer should thank God for this evidence. This was one of the points that Colonel Ingersoll brought against the Bible. He said that Jesus commissioned the Apostles to go and preach the gospel to the world, and the signs should follow; therefore the Bible is not true. With the true Bible idea that the commission was only given to the Apostles, and by them fulfilled, all becomes plain; and we are not afraid of all the infidels in the world. No man now preaches under the commission given by Jesus to the Apostles, and all we have to do is to call people's attention to what those holy men of God proclaimed, and our authority for so doing is found in Rev. 22:17, not in Matt. 28:19, 20: "And the spirit and the bride say come, and let him that hearth say come, and whosoever will let him take the water of life freely."

AN EXHORTATION

Dear Bro. Huggins:

I want to write some articles on fulfilled prophecy, and the prophecies that are now being so rapidly fulfilled, but as I am not well I will leave such articles for those who are more competent.

I will now send a few words of exhortation to the careless ones that enlisted for life in the Christian warfare by being baptized into Christ. The deserter of a worldly warfare (if caught) is many times put to death. It must be this had and worse for one that deserts the Christian warfare; such are sure to be caught and suffer a second death, which is eternal.

I will ask the dear ones that give their whole time to the comforts (sometimes torture), fashions, worldly popularity and its amusements: Do you believe the Bible to be absolutely true? Many not far down the broad way that leads to destruction may say: "Sure, I believe every word of God is true, and is sure of fulfillment." You no doubt think that you believe God's word, but now let's do as told in 2 Cor. 13:5: "Examine yourselves, whether ye bein the faith; prove your own selves;" and 2 Thess. 5:21: "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." Does your everyday acts prove that you believe God's word? Now to illustrate: If you were very destitute, and suffering for temporal needs (as for spiritual needs), and a friend whom you thought you had perfect confidence in his word would say: "Come with me, and I will get you into a lasting job that will net you at least ten dollars per day, and is easy and a legitimate business." If you refused to go with him it would prove conclusively that you had little or no faith in what he said. Just so with faith in God's word; the actions many times prove to the world that there is a great lack of faith in those that say they believe God's word.

See a prophecy that I believe will soon be turned into history. I think that we have several good reasons for believing that many who are now living will have to witness the awful time that we read of in Rev. 6:15, 16: "The kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman (see, it takes in all classes), hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains, and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." Is it possible for those who say they believe God's word, and yet live in conformity to the world, to believe it possible for them to escape that awful time of suffering which they think they believe is coming, just because they have been so highly favored with a knowledge of the true way of life? Their actions prove beyond doubt that they don't believe one word of it, just as the man in financial distress has no faith in the promise of relief.

One more illustration: Give to a child (that has no knowledge of the value of money) six twenty-dollar gold pieces to play with; another child comes in with a bright, shining tin horn (cost five cents), and the small child gladly trades all of the gold pieces even up for the tin horn, plainly showing its ignorance of the value of gold. We expect nothing better of the little child; but, dear ones, I have so much love for all that I am deeply grieved to know that many have made a thousand times worse trade by trading their reasonable hope of eternal life for the momentary pleasures of sin, or, as Moses puts it in in Heb. 11:25, "the pleasures of sin for a season." At the best the time is very short until the indifferent ones will be awfully sorry (after it is too late) that they traded one one hundred and twenty dollars for the five-cent tin horn; but many are making a much greater mistake by the neglect of searching God's word for wisdom. In Prov. 3:-4, 15, it is said to be more precious than rubies, and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared to it. The merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof finer than gold. Hosea 4:6: "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." Daniel 12:10: "The wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." I can conscientiously advise a diligent search after the knowledge which is from above. The wise man said in Prov. 4:7: "Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting, get understanding." You may wonder why I urge the necessity of wisdom. The reasons are many; I will state but one or two. We see by Heb. 11:6 that without faith it is impossible to please God; and we know that it is impossible to have much faith without the wisdom or knowledge that makes one acquainted with God, our most profitable acquaintance. Though the writer has not the wisdom and understanding that he would like to have he knows that what he has gained by diligent search of God's word has given him more comfort in the last two years of sore affliction than it has been possible for the doctors and all of his friends to give. Wisdom is extremely profitable, and above wealth in the perishable things of this life.

G. W. CALDER.

MAD MAJORITIES

There are two theories of government. One is "the divine right of kings" and rulers, which holds that the king can do no wrong and that the people are bound to obey him as the representative of God. The other is that the majority should rule, and that the voice of the people is the voice of God.

While it is undeniably true that government is a divine ordinance; that the powers that be are ordained of God; and that all government, as distinguished from anarchy, is divine in its origin and tendencies; yet it is also true that the Lord's idea of government is different from man's. He gives of government is different from man's. He gives men kings: he gave to Israel a king in his anger. He "ruleth in the kigdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men" (Dan. 4:17). Bad nations need bad rulers, and have them; and it is because of the wickedness of the people that wicked rulers are allowed to exercise authority over them.

The divine method of government was different. The world's first republic was founded by Moses. It was a government of the people, and by the people, and for the people; but it was established under a divine constitution, and kept under divine control.

Law abiding men are easily governed by divine law, but lawless men need the strong hand of despotism to control them. God brings men's hearts down with labor; he chastens them, afflicts them, and controls them for their good and his own glory.

Perhaps there is no tyranny on earth more dangerous and despotic than the tyranny of a mad and unreasonable people, who can not be taught and who will not obey instruction. The notion that majorities rule the world is an entire mistake. Majorities are often ruled by ignorant, unscrupulous demagogues; and when the majority go crazy under frantic appeals, one-sided statements, fancied wrongs and prejudiced representations, their tyranny is soon seen. Majorities can only be trusted as far as they are right, and majorities are right only so far as they are ruled by the word of the living God. When majorities reject the counsel of God, and refuse to listen to his voice, then woe be to those who are so unfortunate as to be under their tyranny. The tyranny of one man is dreadful, but a mob is a hydra-headed tyrant; and a dozen or a hundred men together, controlled by some wily leader, may do an amount of mischief which no one of them alone would dare to undertake.

It is supposed by some that when a large assembly of men, a "Board" or "Society," or "Association," meet together and take a vote on anything, that it is settled forever, and that their authority can not be gainsaid or questioned. They are wise men, and must know just what is right to do. But in fact such assemblies are often very poorly fitted to judge of such matters concerning what is right or what is wrong. They are ignorant of the facts; there is little time for discussion or investigation; and the mass, for want of better information, follow the lead of a few worldly, shrewd managers, who manipulate affairs to their own liking. Honest men can not always compete with rogues in deceptive methods and management, and often falsehood gets a hearing when truth is fallen in the street. Sometimes in deliberative assemblies important matters are decided by vote, when a considerable proportion of those who vote do not really know what they are doing or understand the results of their action. They want to do right, but are mystified and misled, and when they have time to learn what they have done they deeply regret their action.

The condemnation of a mob, or council, or conference, is no certain proof of guilt. Many a man has been cajoled into voting, acting and deciding in such bodies who has been ashamed of his action, and has deeply regretted it when it was too late to undo it, though he may have lacked conscience and courage to confess his error openly.

Men need to know that they can not delegate their responsibilities; every man must bear his own burden. If representative bodies violate truth and justice, are swayed by appeals to passion and prejudice, trample upon human rights, and inflict wrongs in the name of justice, law and order, it makes little difference how great the majority may be who favor such a course of procedure; God will hold men responsible who participate either actively or passively in such iniquitous doings. Each man may have his excuse ready—he did nothing, he did not understand, he was not present, nobody is to blame—and it may be impossible to pierce these disguises; but the Lord will easily find a way to sift out the whole matter, and to make each participant, aider and abettor responsible for his share in the proceedings. Let no man think to hide himself in a mob, or that by going with the crowd in a rush he can escape the glance of those eyes which are as a flame of fire. The day of revelation will come, when men who have suffered themselves to be led into wrong courses and acts will stand aghast at the revelation of the consequences of their own conduct. There are many voices that go up to God; there are many cries for help that ascend to the throne, and God will not forget the cry of the needy, the helpless and the distressed. Let those who fear the Lord walk carefuly before him. Let them remember their responsibilities, and consider who it is to whom they shall give account. Let no man be misled by the madness of a mob, whether in church or in state; whether in conference or association; whether dealing with nations or with men. Let no man allow others to act for him in matters of vital interest, unless he knows what is right and is prepared to stand by it and defend it. In the day of judgment mobs will melt away; crowds will vanish and be lost in a greater crowd; and individual souls, searched and sought out by an eye which neither slumbers nor sleeps, will stand in the presence of the Judge, where every man shall give account of himself to God. Happy shall they be who in that day are able to render up their accounts with joy and not with grief, in the presence of the eternal King. No majority vote can stand against the will of the everlasting God. Right is stronger than majority, stronger than rulers, stronger than kings, and priests, and popes, and princes, and God stands with the right and for the right. Let us stand with him, even if we stand alone.—H. L. H.

Public opinion is the strongest factor in putting down any evil; and it is made up of private opinion, openly expressed and heartily followed.

It gives me comfort to read articles in The Restitution from brethren and sisters; they appear to be more interested in their own and others' eternal welfare than of the fleeting things of this life.—G. W. Calder.

You can train the eye to see all the bright places in your life, and so slip over the hard ones with surprising ease. You can also train the eye to rest on the gloomy spots, in utter forgetfulness of all that is bright and beautiful.

He who amasses wealth, not as an equitable return for value given, but by underhand dealing or oppression of the poor, or gambling on a high or low scale, has been engaged in no honorable competition. He who climbs into power, not by proving himself the fittest man to wield it, but by pushing others down and crowding them out, desecrates the name of emulation.

Mere freaks of activity never accomplish much, because they do not last. A man can do almost anything for a little while—a bad man can be good, a lazy man can be active, a stingy man may be generous. But every man's character has a level to which it always gravitates. It may be thrown up like a wave of the sea, but, like a wave of the sea, it will come down again.

Those that do as Paul did, when they become men, "Put away childish things," will never become childish again. I know it is natural for all (even animals) to want life, so I want to advise the indifferent ones, young and old, especially those that are baptized into Christ, to pattern after the old soldiers of the cross that obey the fifth command. (Exodus 20:12): "Honor thy father and thy mother (whether they be dead or alive), that thy days may be long upon the land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee."—G. W. Calder.

EDITORIAL

Writing from Palmer, Neb., November 3, Brother Adams says: "I am hard at work. The interest here is becoming more marked every day."

Brother G. W. Calder writes that he is not able to walk or stand alone. "Still," he says, "I try to write a little for The Restitution. The Congregational minister I sent your article to returned it, and said the article was real good; but he goes right on teaching traditions instead of God's word." Perhaps, Brother Calder, this minister is one of the sleepy, dumb dogs of whom the prophet writes in Isa. 56:10, 11, saying that they are so "greedy" that they refuse to bark for fear the world will become peeved at the disturbance and refuse to throw them a bone. All such "dogs" will find themselves, in company with sorcerers, murderers, "without" the Holy City in the consummation of God's purpose (Rev. 22:15). We can "persuade men," as Paul did, but we are powerless to do more. Every man shall receive according to his works.

Books are the true levelers, giving to all who faithfully use them the society and spiritual presence of the best and greatest of our race; so that an individual may be excluded from what is called good society and yet not pine for want of intellectual companionship.

The way to spoil a child is to give it all it wants, and require nothing in return. The way to make a child grow up sensible and unselfish is to give it little and require of it much. For it is not what others do for us that benefits us, but what we do for ourselves and others.

IN CREEDLAND
No. 5
CREEDS OF THE CHURCH OF GOD

In 1906 the editor of The Restitution lived in Illinois. We were evangelist for that state, and lived in Oregon. While there we were asked to edit a year book for the conference. Following is the first page of the booklet, which we ask the reader to note with care:

YEAR BOOK

—of the—

CHURCHES OF GOD IN CHRIST JESUS

—Believers in—

"The Things Concerning The Kingdom of God and The Name of Jesus Christ."
Illinois and Iowa

—Containing—

Lists of State Conferences, Congregations, Sunday Schools, Berean Societies, Officers, Ministers and Membership; and a Statement of the Principal Doctrines of the Church of God.

A. D. 1906

Reader brother, go back and read the above words again; notice that the churches of God in Christ Jesus and declared to be "believers in" something; they believe something. Good! Being "believers" they must believe something; and now are they "narrow" enough to say what they believe? Yes, listen: "Believers in 'the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ.'" That is frank, and as we read on "narrowness" grows till we read: "Containing lists of churches, congregations, Sunday Schools, Berean societies, officers, ministers and membership; and a statement of the principal doctrines of the Church of God." This year book containing a "statement of the principal doctrines of the Church of God," was published under the sanction of the following officers: Jas. W. Wilson, president; Lyman Booth, vice president; Emma L. Smith, secretary; Anna E. Drew, president Berean Society; S. J. Lindsay, evangelist. The board of management were: E. F. Gesin, S. D. Fahrney, J. M. Glotfelty, M. T. Aslaksen and J. H. Williams. These are the brethren who, in 1906, publicly and officially took the responsibility of telling the world what the Church of God "believed in," and made a statement of the "principal doctrines" held by the Church of God in Illinois. These "narrow" brethren, after authorizing the publication of this year book, asked the editor, whom they knew to be "narrow" also, to write a preface for it, which we did. Following is the

Preface

"The Churches of God in Christ Jesus were signally blessed by God during the year 1906.

More financial help was available, and there were more additions to the body of Christ by baptism, than for any year previous. The Churches of God in Iowa, equaly with those in Illinois, had a year of progress in numbers and in spiritual growth. Both states support proficient evangelists—teachers of ability and erudition. The brethren are "dwelling together in unity." While they manifest a laudable spirit in proclaiming the truth to those who have "ears to hear," they are, to the glory of God, and to the honor of his name, attending closely to the ethics which the word inculcates, recognizing with perspicuity that while faith in the gospel and baptism into the name of Christ justifies a sinner, nothing short of a "patient continuance in well-doing" will secure a saint's acceptance.

"To help solidify and keep sympathetically in touch with each other; to increase love, joy, peace, and make all the fruits of the spirit abound in us; to foster sodality and brotherly affection among the "saints of the Most High," this Year Book for 1906 is now published. It is jointly published by the conferences of Illinois and Iowa, and will "make known" to the interested reader "all things" (Col. 4:9) done within these states for the publication and defense of the gospel.

"Praying for God to bless us this year, as heretofore, with his munificence, and that he will remember us "for good" (Nehe. 13:31),

Fraternally yours in Jesus the Lord,
ROBT. G. HUGGINS."

Oregon, Ill.

On the title page of this year book it is intimated that the booklet would tell the reader what the Church of God "believes in," what are its "principal doctrines." True to promise on pages 6 and 7 is given

The Illinois Creed

We quote it entire and heartily endorse it now as when we wrote the preface to it in 1906:

"A statement of the principal doctrines believed and taught by Churches of God in Christ Jesus:

"We believe and teach the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel as a nation; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous; the final destruction of the wicked, and eternal life only through Christ. Also a thorough belief in repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as prerequisite of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential to final salvation."

Amen. Go on, brethren, believing and teaching these "principal doctrines." Don't let the world laugh you out of your belief and advocacy of the gospel by sneeringly denominating your "principal doctrines" a creed. "Quit you like men; be strong."

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brother:

I herewith enclose money order for the renewal of my subscription.

We are still standing on the promises which God made to the fathers, that this earth is to be the future home of the redeemed. The meek shall inherit the earth; the upright shall remain in it.

We shall be satisfied here when there is no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying; the former things past away.

We have just had a good meeting at our place by Brother Jos. Williams of Indiana. He baptized three: Willie and Charlie Bradley, my sons, and Ray Carpenter, son of Brother J. F. Carpenter. Brother Williams preached for us last fall and baptized my son Samuel and daughter Elsie. Now all my children are in the Church of God. We have a good Sunday School. We organized twenty years ago when Brother Wagoner first came to Kentucky to preach the gospel. We have gone to Sunday School every Sunday the year around when it was not in the way of another appointment; and we have all been regular readers except one in the church. He is quite young.

I think that we could not have done so well in any other way.

Brother Williams is thinking of coming to Kentucky to locate this fall. We know he would be a great help to us with his wife and little sons.

I remain your sister,

OLLIE E. BRADLEY.

Dear Restitution:

We are told if we are hungry we shall be filled. There are times when our wants and needs run in a certain line. This is true of the church as well as of individuals. Then in some way, and often from just where we are not looking for it, the food comes, and our hunger is satisfied; our needs and wants are supplied, and happiness follows. Peace of mind and satisfaction results in joy and happiness.

The last Restitution, it seems to me, is laden with just the food to strengthen and nourish the body and fill long felt wants. It is the kind that one finds himself reading over several times. This Restitution of October 21 is worth a whole year's subscription. Did you say you had forgotten just what was in it? Well, it opens with a prayer that sweetens our mind, and prepares us for what is to follow. Then follows that splendid article by Sister Flora Wood. Right when we are telling the people how wicked the world is getting, here comes the statistics to prove it. Then follows "Thy Kingdom Come," by Brother Goss. The only thing that will ever right this present wicked condition. We reason this all out as God presents it to us.

Then follows Brother Bidsteup on "Reason." Then comes that most timely article by Brother Marshall, "Envy." Did you read it? If not, hunt up your paper and read it. Then look around; think. Then read it again. As all things are to be done in the name of the Lord, how fitting that Sister Groves should follow just here with "In Jesus' Name."

Then comes the editorial jottings, all of which have some special interest to us all; first, "Benevolence," then oppositions which are complimentary to the truth; then we are all workers to gather with God. And I hope we are. Then in the fifth paragraph the editor tells us that his work is so great he can't write to his friends. But in between these two he tells of a visit by a good brother and sister, which must have relieved the pressure of work and cheered him on in his efforts to serve others. Suppose he had forgotten to jot down that Sister Whitehead had reported Brother Wilson convalescent? We would have all been on the anxious seat. But he did not forget, and so we all rejoice together. "If one member suffers all suffer." So we all rejoice at the smyptoms of recovery. Then follows the item that is of more interest than all else: the addition of two more to the body. Then he carries us into "Creedland," where we get a glimpse of things that ought to be an interesting sight to us all. Then Brother Logan left behind him a thought on Melchesedec that will cause him to be remembered and regreted. Then follows "A Thousand Generations." Get your papers and re-read and learn the lesson of keeping clean. The body of Christ must be kept just as clean to escape iniquity and punishment as the individual body. A splendid article. Then Brother Peck writes us all a letter, and we are made to rejoice again. He says he has been holding forth the word of life, and several responded. "Amen." Sister Barnabee in the Berean Department gives us a timely lesson. It cannot fail to do good if read in earnest.

And now while filled with so many good things, we must not forget to stop and shed the silent tear with Brother Railton. "Mourn with them that mourn." Just as we begin to feel full as we read along, and think our hunger is about satisfied we come to this little item by Brother Austin headed "Obituary," which brings on more hungerness—hungering for a time when we will see no items like that. But we have the promise that we "shall be filled." So we continue on, knowing that at the end of the meal our hunger will be satisfied and we will be filled. When we get filled up on good things we lie down and go to sleep. So the Lord sees to it that we are kept a little hungry, and we can't sleep much when we are hungry. "Prayer in Danger." Did you read what Brother Marshall said? Notice how fitting to add this after the obituary notice. What could have closed this number better? Do we pray enough? Do we cry unto God in the midst of sorrow and trial? Or do we try to work them out, or let them adjust themselves? If you haven't read this splendid number, I am afraid you will not see this either and will not be benefited much by this letter. When you are at your work you are perhaps feeling tired, and The Restitution comes, but if you would just take time to sit down and read it, it would be beneficial in resting you and taking your mind for a time off of the cares of life. Besides, you might find something there (and you will be pretty sure to) that will just bring the comfort you are looking for. I wonder how many will lay this number aside and miss a feast of fat things?

ALMA S ADAMS.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

I am glad to tell you that we have Brother O. J. Allard with us again, and we are having splendid meetings here in Los Angeles.

There are very few of us in the city, but several from Santa Ana, Pasadena and other places meet with us part of the time, among whom are Brother and Sister Hatch, Brother and Sister Dresser, Brother and Sister Kimball, Brother and Sister Allard, and Sister Steffa and daughters. We have had regular meetings since our conference in May, and we had the pleasure of seeing my sister, Edith Halcomb, formerly Edith Barber, baptized into the only name through which we may be saved.

We enjoy our meetings very much and consider it a great privilege to have Brother Allard and Brother Kimball with us. Brother Kimball has given us several lectures from his chart, and it is certainly evident that we are living in the last days. May we ever be watching and ready for the ushering in of the glorious kingdom of Christ when he shall come to establish justice in the earth.

Yours in hope of life,

HANNA M. BARBER.

BEREAN DEPARTMENT

Dear Bereans:

Isn't it awful to realize that at least 14,000 Americans, mostly women, are bowing the knee to heathenism? Isn't it awful to know that in this land of churches and Bibles, there are thousands of people who are laying aside these Bibles, and taking up the teachings of Yoga? Those who claim to know tell us that Yoga means "the path that leads to wisdom." But it is the wisdom of the "serpent" that leads to domestic infelicity, insanity, and death. They tell us that "the path of Yoga is as narrow as a razor's edge." Literally, it is proving the "broad way" that leads to destruction. These Hindoos do not modify their teachings to fit western ideas, but are giving their hearers "Hindooism with the halo of its own brilliancy." One of these teachers told his devotees: "Dear hearts, I have given you the philosophy of religion because here in the west you all want food for your intellects; but I have done so to wheedle you into listening that I may tell you that the philosophy of religion is not religion. Religion is love." And you and I know it is not the love that constrained Paul to endure all he did. Money that should be spent for the cause of Christ is used to spread heathenism; and the descent from Christianity to heathenism is by such easy stages, that the novice scarcely realizes she is led. Surely "the study of Yoga is dangerous knowledge for any but the best balanced brain."

But it is quite the thing of the hour; and it is not the poor, but the wealthy, the cultured, who are bowing at this shrine; and with them, at least, it is literally true that "one might just as well be out of the world as out of style." Surely we are in the closing scenes of this age, when the Lord coming suddenly, shall find the world asleep to him and his truth. But great will be their disgust for the one, and joy for the other, when people cast their gods to the moles and the bats and worship the King, the Lord of hosts; for all people shall bow before him; all nations shall serve him. But a great blessing awaits all who love and serve him now. Others may do as they like, but as for us, "We will serve the Lord."

"Our boast shall be in the glorious cross of Christ;" which includes a risen Christ; an empty tomb; and a near return; when he will take to himself his great power and rules the world in righteousness. "The whole creation groans, and travails in pain together, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God."

Your sister, believing in the soon coming of the Lord, and the manifestation of his saints.

LILLIE HENRY WILLIS.

Harp of the Soul

It is told in story that once a German nobleman made a great Aeolian harp by stringing wires from tower to tower of his castle.

But he listened in vain through the summer for the faintest sound of music.

But as the cold blasts of winter came the wires tightened and emitted sweet harmony.

So it is with the harp of the soul. In the balmy days of prosperity and when all is well, the soul sings not.

But let adverse winds blow, let the cold world sting the heart and it gives out its mellowest harmony of affection and thoughtfulnesss.

Blessed be adversity, when the heart of man is struck by the invisible hand of the great musician.

May the chords not snap.—Sel. by a Berean, Ill.

WISDOM

Proverbs 9:1-12

1. We always think of the Jews as a nation peculiarly and radically religious. As the Greeks stand for art and the Romans for government, so the Hebrews stand pre-eminently for religion. Nevertheless there were other than specialized religious movments in their national development. True, the prophetic and priestly movement was the chief movement, but subordinate to it was another, partly poetical and partly philosophical. This is sometimes called the "Wisdom" movement. Solomon was its first great patron (1 Kings 4:30-31). There are traces of it in the Psalms, in Ecclesiastes, in various books of the Apocrypha and in Proverbs. This ninth chapter consists of a Wisdom poem of three stanzas.

2. This poem is very late in origin, probably written in the second century B. C. It was produced at a time when the idea of Wisdom had been developed far beyond its original form. Wisdom had become, as in chapter 8, a Being separate from Jehovah "I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was" (8:23). This is supposed to have been due largely to the influence of Greek thought, which, as in the philosophy of Plato, loved to think of the archetypes of things existing forever in the immediate presence and glory of God. Further, Wisdom is represented as a semi-divine female, quite in the Greek style. She invites, she teaches, she warns mankind.

3. In the first stanza of this poem (verses 1 to 6) we have a description of Wisdom as setting herself to attract people to her teaching. She builds a house, its porch (we may suppose), supported by seven pillars—the perfect number—like a Greek temple. She prepares a feast, she sends forth her maids of honor to invite all to come, and she herself offers the bread and wine of life to the "void of understanding," the "simple ones." We can not read this stanza without thinking of the parable of our Lord (Matt. 22:1-14), in which the kingdom of heaven was likened to a wedding feast, to which many were invited. We are also reminded of such prophetic writing as Isaiah 1:1, 2. The truth is that God's gift must always be appropriately likened to bread and wine and water freely offered to mankind. The prophet offers it. The poet pictures Wisdom as offering it. Jesus offers himself—"I am the water of life," "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, ye have no life in yourselves" (John 6:53).

4. The second stanza of this poem gives a part of the teaching which Wisdom gives to her guests. It is remarkable chiefly for two things—an antithesis and a sort of despair. The antithesis sets two things in opposition to another—wisdom and scorn. The wise men is called righteous, and the wicked man is called a scorner, but the real contradiction is between wisdom and scorn, not between righteousness and wickedness. One would expect wisdom to have as its opposite folly. And yet is not scorn folly in a militant and aggressive mood? It is folly armed, flinging wisdom away, and, by its flaming egotism, effectively keeping wisdom out. The scornful man can never understand another, never sympathize, never learn. It is remarkable that Jesus was never scornful, unless it be when he called Herod Antipas a she-fox (Luke 13:31, 32).

The second thing in this stanza is its despair. It is the despair of conversion. A wise man may become wiser, but teaching a scorner is a mere waste of energy. Simple men, who lack understanding, may be made wise, but once simplicity has given way to scorn there is no remedy. There are two classes of people, the wise and the wicked, and none can pass from one class to the other. This teaching may be due to that intellectualism which always accompanies the cult of wisdom, but whatever it is due to it is an attitude from which Christians are freed. For our gospel is the gospel of redemption. Our Lord is Savior. The wicked may turn again and be remade by the grace of God. Here we can see how far the "Wisdom" of these Jewish philosophers fell short of the revelation made in Christ. She could but call men in to her stately palace. The Redeemer goes to the heart of shame and sin to impart his own spirit.

We are now engaged in a meeting at Palmer, Neb. Sister King lives here and has longed for her neighbors to be instructed in the things concerning the kingdom and the name of Jesus Christ. This we are now trying to do. We are holding meetings in a Methodist church in the country, and there seems to be no way of shutting us out. The minister told me in the beginning that they would welcome any effort that would stir the people up; and now they are stirred up all right, and the welcome is gone. He is stirred up as much as the rest, but apparently not in the same way.

The people are up and ask me to give explanations of certain scriptures before I am up in the morning, so it seems there is something doing—just what, we will report later.

The best recipe for going through life in a commendable way is to feel that everybody, no matter how rich or h s poor, needs all the kindness they can get from others in the world.

Disposition, intellect, genius, come pretty much by nature; but character is an achievemetnt—the one practical achievement possible to us for ourselves and for our children, and all real advance in family or individual is along the lines of character.

ARE YOU READY?
No. 2

Have you made your preparation,
As Queen Esther did of old?
She had no invitation,
But was touched by scepture gold

She knew not whether ill or good
Her coming there should bring:
But for her people bravely stood
In the presence of the King.

But you have a summons kindly
To meet your gracious King:
May you not reject it blindly,
But a goodly offering bring.

Bring no heart that is unmoved
By his sufferings on the tree:
But a heart that him has loved
Who prayed in Gethsemane.

If you stand before his face
With a loving heart and true,
He will reach with kingly grace
Love's golden scepture out to you.

ALICE B. CURTIS.

PRAYER

O Lord, our God and our Father, we would bring to thee the sacrifice of thankful hearts, and bless thee that these are acceptable through Jesus Christ. And we pray that thou wouldst strengthen us more and more, to realize our dependence on, and our union with, that great Savior through whom all the blessings of thy love come to us, and all our poor returns of love and praise are accepted by thee. We praise thee for thy gracious help to be rendered to each of us according to the diversity of our characters and circumstances. Thou knowest each of us to the depths of our hearts far better than we know ourselves. Thou hast counsels of good, and not of evil towards everyone of us, and the purposes of thy love embrace greater gifts of goodness and of glory than our most ardent or ambitious desires can imagine for ourselves. And we would ask thee that our wills may more and more be conformed to thine, and that we may not set our affections on anything concerning which we do not know whether it be in accordance with thy will to bestow it. Through Jesus Christ. Amen.

"Be content with such things as you have." You cannot have all the advantages. Be satisfied with those you have, remembering that as a sinful man, pardoned it may be, you have a right to none.

Bad news is as hurtful to health as good news is beneficial. Be not a ready messenger of evil tidings.

THE CROSS AND CROWN or PILATE'S QUESTION ANSWERED in a
SCRIPTURAL EXPOSITION OF THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM

"How shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation, which began to be spoken by the Lord?" (Heb. 2:3).

The Angle-Saxon word Gospel is euanggelion in the Greek. This is a word compounded of eu, an adverb of quality signifying "good;" and anggelia, a message delivered in the name of any one; euanggelion therefore signifies "a good message," which becomes good news to those before unacquainted with it. It is styled "the Gosepl of God" (Rom. 1:1), because it is a good message coming from him. It is also called "the Gospel of the blessed God" (1 Tim. 1:11), because it is a good message of future glory on account of which all that partake in it will call him blessed. It announces a good time coming, when "the knowledge of the glory of Jehovah shall fill the earth as the waters cover the sea" (Hab. 2:14); for Jehovah sware to Moses, saying: "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of Jehovah" (Num. 14:21). This is good news of glory from God to everyone that believes it.

God's Gospel is styled "the Gospel of the Kingdom" (Matt. 24:14; Mark 1: 14, 15; Luke 8:1), because he purposes to manifest his glory and blessedness through a Kingdom he declares he will set up in the land lying between the Euphrates, Mediterranean and Nile.

The Gospel of the Kingdom, and "the great salvation spoken by the Lord," are the same thing. This is evident from the fact that the Lord Jesus, when he began to preach, did not make two separate proclamations. Throughout his ministry he preached but one thing, which is variously expressed in the history of his career. Sometimes it is simply styled "the Gospel" (Mark 1:15; Mark 8:35; Mark 13:10; Luke 4:18); at others, "the Kingdom of God" (Luke 4:43; Luke 9:2-6); and Peter, in recalling the recollection of it to Cornelius' mind, says: "That Word ye know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached" (Acts 10:37). In the previous verse he reminded him who began to preach this word from Galilee, and speaks of it as a message. His words are: "The Word which God sent unto the children of Israel preaching peace by Jesus Christ, who is Lord of all; that Word, I say, ye know." When we turn to the history "of all that Jesus began both to do and teach," we find that when he began to speak the great salvation he commenced preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom of God in Galilee. The following is the testimony: "Now when Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison, he departed into Galilee. From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent, for the Kingdom of the heavens is at hand. And he went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom" (Matt. 4: 12, 17-32). The word sent, the Gospel of the Kingdom, and the great salvation, it is clear, all began to be preached by Jesus at the same time, and in the same region of country; they must, therefore, and can only be, the same thing under different modes of speech. A word sent is a message; that word sent by Jesus Christ constitutes him THE MESSENGER (Mal. 3:1), a messenger sent of God with good news to the children of Israel about a kingdom, which they did not then possess, preaches that Kingdom to them as a matter of promise, and therefore of hope; so that the Gospel of the Kingdom is also styled "The hope of Israel," for which Paul says he was "bound with a chain" (Acts 28:20).

The Kingdom of God is the great salvation because, through that Kingdom, the blessedness preached to Abraham as the Gospel (Gal. 3:8) is to come upon all the nations of the earth, and by that they are to be saved from the power of those who destroy them, and to be placed under a righteous administration of divine law. God's Kingdom is to save them; for it is to grind to powder and bring to an end all kingdoms, to fill the whole earth as a great mountain, and itself to stand forever (Dan. 2:35-44). This Kingdom can only be set up by overthrowing the "Powers that be;" and as there can be no peace and blessedness for the nations until they are broken, the operation which abolishes them establishes the destroying Stone-power and saves the world with a great and glorious salvation. Who can doubt it, when the Scriptures say, referring to that era: "The king's son, O God, shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment; he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor. In his days shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace as long as the moon endureth. He shall have dominion also from sea to sea and from the river to the ends of the land. They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him, and his enemies shall lick the dust. The kings of Tarshish and of the Isles (the British) shall bring presents; the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts. Yea, all kings shall fall down before him (being subdued); all nations shall serve him. His name shall endure for the age; his name shall be continued as long as the sun; and they shall be blessed in him—all nations shall call him blessed. Blessed be Jehovah Eloheim, the Eloheim of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. Blessed be the name of his glory for the age; yea, the whole earth shall be filled with his glory" (Psa. 72).

The Kingdom of God founded by Jehovah and his Christ is to establish this great salvation in the earth—a thorough and complete regeneration of the world. The Kingdom is the cause of this; the great salvation the result of its institution in the land promised to the fathers. But the greatness of salvation is not restricted to the future generations of the nations only; it comprehends in the magnitude of the deliverance it vouchsafes, the generations of the righteous among the dead from Abel to the coming of Israel's King in the clouds of heaven in power and great glory. It saves the cloud of witnesses of whom the world was never worthy with an everlasting salvation in the Kingdom; and saves the nations from their temporal miseries and degradation with a joyous and glorious redemption of a thousand years. "How shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation" as this? Impossible; escape there is for none who are not included in it.

Now, the Bible reveals no other salvation than this—a deliverance of the righteous from "the pit in which there is no water," by a resurrection from the dead; a transformation of the living saints who may be contemporary with the second advent; a restoration of the Kingdom again to Israel under the new covenant; and a redemption of the nations from the social, civil and spiritual evils which now press so heavily upon them. This is the only salvation of which the Gospel treats. It meets the necessities of the world. Humanity needs no other, and therefore none else has been provided. When the salvation has triumphed, it will be the accomplished fact of a thousand years, during which "The ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before him. For the Kingdom is for Jehovah; and he is the governor among the nations" (Psa. 22:27, 28).

When Jesus stood at Caesar's bar, Pilate asked him: "Art thou the King of the Jews?" He answered: "My Kingdom is not of this world; if it were, then would my associates fight that I should not be delivered to the Jews; but my Kingdom is not from this place now." Pilate therefore said to him: "Art though King, then?" Jesus answered: "Thou sayest; for I am king. I was born for this (eis touto), and for this I came into the world, that I might witness to the truth. Every one who is of the truth hears my voice." Pilate said unto him: "What is truth?" (John 18: 37). Ah, Pilate, thou, like myriads besides thee, knewest not that voice though it was witnessed in thy presence. The truth was confessed (1 Tim. 2: 13) before thee, but thou didst not understand it, because thou wast not of the truth. Let the reader hear the voice of the King: "I came into the world that I might witness to the truth." Now hear what he saith in another place: "I am sent to preach the Kingdom of God" (Luke 4:43). He did so. He preached it through the length and breadth of Judea, announcing to the people, the Kingdom of God and that he was the King thereof. He filled the land with the sound of his claims to the throne of David as the "born King of the Jews" (Matt. 2:2). The people heard him gladly; and, admitting his claims to be just, were ready for revolt against Caesar, to make him King (John 4:15). The chief priests became alarmed at the current of the popular mind, and apprehended the interference of the Romans (John 11:48). They procured his apprehension at length, and accused him before Pilate of perverting the nation from its allegiance to Caesar (Luke 23:2) and affirming that he was King of the Jews (Luke 19:21).

By the passage above quoted, we find Pilate endeavoring to elicit from him the truth of the matter. As if he said: "They charge you with saying that you are an Anointed One, a King of the Jews; is this the truth?" Jesus confessed, and denied not; although it was hazardous at the bar of Caesar, for the de facto king of the Jews (John 19:15) to aver that he was himself king by right. His life had been jeopardized thirty-five years and three months before by the inquiry: "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" Herod, the reigning king of the Jews, who knew that the nation was expecting the birth of a Son of David who was to reign over them forever, was alarmed at the intimation that he was actually born. He saw that the right of David's son, and the interests of the Herodian dynasty, were inimical. He therefore determined to destroy him and so secure the kingdom to his own family by the destruction of the Christ or Anointed One. The same policy was at work at the condemnation of Jesus. Pilate was not only the representative of the Roman Majesty which had superseded the Herodian in Judea; but the conservator of the reigning Caesar as king of the Jews. Satisfied that it was mere envy that moved the chief priests to accuse Jesus of treason against the Roman power, his policy was to release him, and to appease their clamor. But the policy of the priests and elders was opposed to this. They saw clearly that if Jesus ascended the throne of David he would permit them to have no share in the honors and emoluments of the state. Hence it was with them, as with Herod, important to prevent him getting possession of the throne. They saw Pontius Pilate's unwillingness to condemn him, and concluded that the only way they could succeed in overcoming it would be to treat him hypothetically as a partaker in the Nazarene treason, and consequently a traitor to Caesar's rights which it was his business to conserve. This was their policy. Hence said they to the Procurator: "If thou let this man go, thou art not Caesar's friend; whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Caesar." This settled the question in Pilate's mind. Though convinced of the faultlessness of Jesus, and of their prodignity, self-preservation was a stronger law of his nature than justice. He concluded that it was better for Jesus to suffer death, though unworthy of it, than that he should lose his procuratorship, and perhaps his life, for not punishing treason. Had Jesus not confessed "the truth," but repudiated all pretensions to the throne of Israel, Pilate could not have condemned him; nay, would not, for there would have existed no ground upon which the priests and elders could have predicted his want of friendship or loyalty to Caesar. It is true they said: "We have a law, and by our law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God." They regarded this as blasphemy; but the Roman law took no cognizance of questions in Jewish theology. It had ceased to be lawful for the Jews to put any man to death (John 18:31), so that however guilty he might have been of blasphemy in saying that he was the Son of God, neither the Jews nor the Roman law could have taken his life on that account. The good confession, therefore, he made before Pilate —"the truth" to which he testified in his presence, and for which he was condemned and executed, was not merely that he was the Son of God. Though true, it was not "the truth," the whole truth—it was not the ground of his sentence unto death. "Art thou the King of the Jews?" Had Jesus replied, "I am the Son of God," it would have been an evasion of the question, as every one not judicially blinded must see. If one were to ask another: "Are you a physician?"—would it be answering the question to say: "I am the son of my father?" "King of the Jews" is an official dignity; "Son of God," personal nativity. Who is the king of the Jews? He that says he is the Son of God, or some other person? To assert that he was God's Son did not bring Jesus into collision with Caesar's rights; but to affirm that he was Christ, a king, that is, the Anointed king of the Jews, constituted him at once Caesar's rival in Judea.

Though so dangerous a question Jesus did not equivocate, or seek to evade the hazard it involved. When Pilate said, "Art thou King of the Jews?"—he met his question by referring boldly and immediately to "the truth" about his kingdom. He had been proclaiming this truth from Galilee throughout all Judea to Jerusalem, where he then stood—he had heralded it forth from one end of the land to the other for three years and a half in fulfillment of his mission; for he came into the world to witness to the truth concerning the Kingdom of God of which he was the anointed king—and he was then prepared, with the full assurance that it would cost him his life, to confess before Pilate that he was the king of the Jews. Pilate so understood him when he said in answer to his question, "My kingdom." Jesus was a Jew, and a Jew could have no claim to any kingdom but that of his own nation—king of the Jewish nation. Thus Pilate, the Roman soldiers, and the chief priests and scribes (Mark 15:31, 32; John 19:3, 19-22), understood him to confess; and therefore the reason of his condemnation to death —the title he assumed—was labelled to his cross in Hebrew, Greek and Latin: "Jesus of Nazareth, king of the Jews."

In suffering death because of his claim to the throne of Israel, Jesus, the Son of God and Son of David, sealed "the Gospel of the Kingdom," and the covenant of that kingdom, with his blood. He was born king of Israel, and he suffered death because he maintained his right to the royalty. He was anointed to be king, and as a prophet to preach the Gospel, or glad tidings of his reign over the Twelve Tribes of Israel, and the obedient nations of the earth for a thousand years. With him and his apostles, to "preach the Kingdom of God" was to "preach the Gospel" (Luke 9:2, 6). There could be no Gospel without the kingdom—even this same particular kingdom, this Jewish kingdom in Palestine, upon which the living God has caused to be ever credited no other. A gospel of a kingdom or kingdoms beyond the skies—of an everlasting kingdom there for disembodied ghosts, and a present church-kingdom of grace among carnal, scolding, faithless professors here—we delibcrately, and under pain of eternal damnation if in error, we boldly, conscientiously, and confidently affirm that there is no such a gospel to be found in the Oracles of God. Such a gospel as this the popular gospel of the age—was never preached to Jew or Gentile, by John, Jesus or the apostles. The Lord of Israel bore witness to no such gospel before Pilate. He did not testify that he was king of a sky-kingdom; but king of the Jewish nation upon earth, where alone it exists, or ever will exist. His is the royalty of this nation, taking its root in the covenant made with David, which is everlasting, and can never be annulled; for Jehovah had declared: "Once have I sworn by my holiness, that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall be for the age, and his throne as the sun before me" (Psa. 89:35, 36).

For three years and a half Jesus fulfilled his mission as prophet to Israel in preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom. He began, as we have seen, in Galilee, soon after his being anointed of God with the Holy Spirit and power (Acts 10:38). He visited the synagogues, and among them, that at Nazareth. Being there on a certain occasion, he read from the sixty-first of Isaiah the words recorded in the fourth of Luke. Alluding to his anointing he read: "The Spirit of Jehovah is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor—to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." Jehovah's anointing him to preach the Gospel is equal to saying Jehovah sent him to preach. There is no necessity to prove this. It is obvious. In sending him then to preach the Gospel, what was he sent to preach as the basis of the good news to the poor? This question is answered in two places in this chapter; he was sent to preach the acceptable year of Jehovah; or, which is the same thing, he was "sent to preach the Kingdom of God" (verse 43). Peter told Cornelius that he was sent to preach this Word to the children of Israel. Hence it is styled "the Word of the Kingdom" (Matt. 13:19), upon the understanding of which men's salvation is predicated (Mark 16:15, 16). But, why is the Gospel of the Kingdom, and the acceptable year of Jehovah, or age to come, preached to the poor, rather than the rich? The reason is, because "God hath chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, to be the heirs of that kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him"—"he fills the hungry with good things; and the rich he sends empty away," because the present life is the season of their enjoyment (James 2:5; Luke 1:53; Luke 16:25).

When Paul was writing about "the great salvation which began to be spoken by the Lord" (Heb. 2:1-5), he says he was speaking about "the future habitable" (tessoiksumenen ten mellsusan) which is to be subjected to the Son, and not to angels, as it is at present. Speaking of the present habitable, or "civilized" part of the earth, he says: "But now we see not yet all things put under him." No; if we did, we would see him King over the whole earth (Zech. 14:9). All the kingdoms of the world would be his, and "all nations would serve him" (Rev. 11:15). The future habitable subjected to the Son, is the acceptable year of Jehovah; when the Kingdom shall be existent in the plentitude of its glory, ruling over all. Jesus and his brethren, all sons of God and seed of David by adoption, though recipients of evil things in their primary existence, will possess the dominion of the future habitable "under the whole heaven" and "beyond the skies." This is good news to the poor—the Gospel Jesus was anointed to preach: the great salvation confirmed by the Apostles who heard it preached; and attested of God by signs, wonders, divers miracles, and distributions of the Holy Spirit, manifested through them.

The context of the testimony from which Jesus selected the reading in the synagogue at Nazareth, exhibits the glad tidings or Gospel of the Kingdom he preached to the meek of the children of Israel. It promises them "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified." This series of beautiful antithesis presents to us in contrast the future states of the poor who receive the Gospel of the Kingdom. Now, mourning, heavy-hearted, dust and ashes—in the age to come they shall be beauteous and joyous, giving praise and glory to Jehovah as immortals only can bestow it. Then with respect to their nation, for the word was primarily sent to Israel, "they shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations. And foreigners shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your plowmen, and your vinedressers. But ye shall be named the priests of Jehovah; men shall call you the Ministers of our God; ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves." Let the inquirer read from the twentieth verse of the fifty-ninth of Isaiah to the end of the sixty-second chapter and he will read the good things promised to Israel, and evangelized in the Word sent to them of God by Jesus Christ. They are but a sample of the good things in store for their nation, which in its future glory is the Sarah, the princess of nations, the married wife of its creator. Then "Jehovah will make an everlasting covenant with them. And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people; all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord had blessed." This joy and blessedness of the nation is inseparable from the glory of their King. To him under Jehovah they will owe all the peace and happiness they enjoy. The rejoicing will be mutual. The nation will rejoice in its King, and "as the bridegroom rejoices over the bride, so shall he rejoice over Jerusalem," the Holy City of his realm. In view of the great deliverance Jehovah bestows upon his King, he that was anointed to preach the Gospel to Israel saith: "I will greatly rejoice in Jehovah, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels. For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things sown in it to spring forth; so the Lord God will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all nations"—when the righteous dead shall bud and spring forth of the earth to praise and glorify his name.

The Word of the truth of the Gospel of the Kingdom, though a long title to the message borne by Jesus to the children of Israel, will be easily understood by the inquirer from what has gone before. It imports the law and the testimony that sets forth the promise which make the message relating to the kingdom good news. Paul says that "the hope laid up in heaven" is reported of in the world of the truth of the Gospel; and therefore he styles it "The hope of the Gospel;" and as there is but one true Gospel, though many false ones, there is but one true hope, which he terms, "one hope of the calling" (Col. 1: 5, 23; Eph. 4:3). A hope is something in the future, promised but not possessed. The calling is a particular invitation; and the hope of the calling, the promised thing to the possession of which you are especially invited. This being the meaning of the phrase, and seeing that the hope belongs to the Gospel, it follows that the Gospel contains an invitation or call to the possession of some particular things. The one hope of the calling of the Gospel—what is it? Paul says: "God hath called you to his Kingdom and glory" (1 Thess. 2:12). Then the kingdom and glory are the hope of the called; that is, of those who accept the invitation. The kingdom and glory are the one hope of their calling. The word which God sent to the children of Israel by Jesus Christ was an invitation to them to possess his kingdom and glory, of which he had said so much in the prophets, upon certain conditions. Jehovah's kingdom and glory under Messiah's administration, was the great hope of the nation. It was the hope of Israel, and of Israel alone. No other nation shared with them in this hope. It was the hope of the restoration of the Kingdom again to Israel (Acts 1:6) under a new and better covenant than the Mosaic—the hope of the restitution of all things spoken of by the prophets (Acts 3:21). This is the hope promised to the fathers, and evangelized in the Word of kingdom, and therefore the Gospel's hope by which we are saved (Rom. 8:21). Expunge this hope from the Gospel and it ceases to be Gospel; for it is the hope that makes the tidings glad, and the news good: in short, there would be no tidings to report if the hope of the kingdom and glory were suppressed.

Jehovah is the accepted King of Israel (1 Sam. 12:12; Isa. 43:15). Israel is therefore his nation (Exod. 19:6; Isa. 51:4). He formed it for himself, that through it he might show forth his praise (Isa. 43:21). The prophet saith of Israel: "We are thine, O Lord; thou never bearest rule over our adversaries; they were not called by thy name." The Kingdom of God is his dominion over this nation. It is therefore a Jewish kingdom. Jehovah never owned any other kingdom upon earth. He acquired the Jewish kingdom by creation; and proposes to obtain possession of all other kingdoms by conquest, because they are mere usurpations, and adversaries of his nation. He intends his kingdom to be ruled by a Vicegerent in his name whom he styles "My King" (Psa. 2:6), and by him to subdue the world, so that all thrones and dominions, principalities and powers, may become his. This being accomplished, the Twelve Tribes of Israel will constitute "the first dominion" in actual organized possession of their own country—the kingdom proper. This kingdom will rule over all other nations, which in the aggregate will form the secondary dominion, or empire. Thus a family of nations will be created, of which Abraham, then risen from the dead, will be the federal father, and Israel, the first born (Exod. 1:22).

This kingdom and dominion which Jehovah and his King are to set up are to exist unchanged for a thousand years, at the end of which, things will occur which do not pertain to the Gospel of the Kingdom, though they affect the kingdom itself. The kingdom is imperishable and non-transferable from one set of rulers to another—"it shall not be left to another people" (Dan. 2:44). This is an important feature in the Gospel. If it could be transferred from hand to hand, then flesh and blood might inherit it; but it cannot be transferred, therefore "flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God." They who are promoted to the possession of the kingdom at its establishment, are to retain its honors, glory, power and emoluments the whole thousand years, and as long afterwards as it exists, which will be forever. Can flesh and blood that dies and turns to dust after three-score years and ten possess such a kingdom? Impossible. What then is indispensable to the inheriting of this kingdom? That the heirs whom God has chosen to possess it may be made immortal. This necessity God has promised to fulfill in promising to give them "the kingdom under the whole heaven for an age, even for the age and ages." Hence the Gospel call to the kingdom and its glory is equally a call to eternal life; and the hope of the kingdom consequently the hope of eternal life and glory, which are all comprehended in "the hope of the Gospel," which is said to be "laid up in heaven," and "reserved in heaven," because he who is to convert the hope into a received gift, is there. "Our life," says Paul, "is hid with Christ in God. And when Christ our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory"—the life, the glory, and the kingdom, are all bestowed at one epoch: "Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ" (1 Pet. 1:13).

STRINDBERG'S WILL

More bitter, more violent than Ibsen was the Swedish writer Strindberg, who died during this last twelvemonth. He had long rabidly attacked Christianity and its system of morals, and assailed it from every point. Never was there a more determined foe of the Gospel. But in his last illness, when friends endeavored to talk to him about spiritual things, they found to their surprise that he was hungering after the words of the Savior. He began to read the Bible, and the day before he died he called his nearest relative to him.

"I have settled with life. My accounts are closed," he said, taking up the Bible from the table by the bedside. "This is the only true guide," and he pressed the book to his heart. In his will, he directed that his Bible should be placed on his breast in the coffin, and that a cross, which he had worn for some time on his neck, should also be buried with him. At his funeral a specially written transcription of "Nearer My God to Thee" was sung by a great choir.

Strindberg's life had been as bitter and ugly as his writings. He came to Christ not too late for forgiveness, but too late for any joy or peace in his earthly career. His accounts were closed with a loss on the ledger as far as this life was concerned. Even genius could not help him. Out of his unhappy years, he spoke truth indeed when he cried out at last that the Word of God was the only true guide.

But if he had only seen that at first, instead of at last—and others are making the same mistake today.—Forward.

EDITORIAL

Brother John E. Hegarth writes from Friendship, Maine, and encloses a photograph of himself, for which he has editorial thanks. He says he is going south to spend the winter, and will visit Hammond, La., and other points.

The series of articles which are now appearing in The Restitution entitled "The Holy Spirit," by L. T. Nichols, are by far the most able treatment of this subject that we have ever read. The writer fell asleep not long since, but through the kindness of Mrs. Nichols we have the privilege of printing his posthumous writings.

Brother Adams sends four new subscribers from Palmer, Neb., and reports that at the close of his meetings there fifteen put on the name of Christ. Our brother is an incessant worker in the cause of the truth, and brethren everywhere should hold up his hands in prayer.

November ninth was another day of gladness in Cleveland. The power of the gospel and the love of the truth constrained three more to confess it before men and be baptized into Christ: Mrs. Alldridge, the wife of our esteemed Brother Alldridge, who is an able speaker among us, and Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins, his son-in-law and daughter. Our additions this year have been of unusually good people, and others are interested. Let us pray that many more may be taken out and prepared for the coming of the Lord before the appearance of the Master.

"DISTURBED"

Mrs. Reeve, a Congregationalist, began to learn the truth. When the evidence presented "Concluded her under sin," she declined further light; and we wrote her the following letter:

Dear Mrs. Reeve:

Your note, expressing the desire to discontinue your lessons on the gospel of the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ (Acts 8:12), received.

I notice that your reason for declining the water of life, which is offered to you without money and without price (Isa. 55:1), is that the lessons "disturb" you. Most people had rather hear fables preached, and pay for them, then hear the truth proclaimed without charge (2 Tim 4:4). The motto of the world is "Peace, peace" (Ezek. 13:10); they do not want to be "disturbed." "The whole world lieth in wickedness" (1 Jno. 5:19), utterly condemned by God (Rom. 3:10; Jno. 3:18). Hence our Lord says that they "love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil;" and they "will not come to the light, lest their deeds be reproved" (Jno. 3:19, 20). "Reproved;" that means "disturbed." Therefore the man who has God's word, and speaks that word faithfully (Jer. 23:28), turns "the world upside down" (Acts 17:6), becomes a "pestilent fellow" (Acts 24:5), and sets people in "an uproar" (Acts 17:5), because he "disturbs" them. Like Noah, he "condemns the world" (Heb. 11:7). "The world can not hate you," says our Master, "but me it hateth." Why? "Because I testify of it," he says, "THAT THE WORKS THEREOF ARE EVIL" (Jno. 7:7). But two results are possible when the gospel is preached; the results are always summed up as "Some believed the things which were spoken; and some believed not" (Acts 28:24). Seeing, then, that you put the word of God from you, and judge yourself unworthy of everlasting life (Acts 13:46), there remains nothing else for me to do but "turn from you" to someone else who will "gladly" receive it (Acts 2:41; 28:28). The light shines; if you pull down the curtains and keep it out I am helpless. I of course profoundly regret that you "turn away from him who speaks from heaven" (Heb. 12:45), for I know that even now, after you have tried to get away from the truth, it will haunt and "disturb" you the rest of your life, to say nothing of the coming "eternal judgment" to be executed upon all in the last day that have rejected Christ and his word (Jno. 12:49). In the meantime I pray God to give you repentance "to the ACKNOWLEDGING OF THE TRUTH" (2 Tim. 2:25).

Believing God, in spite of the unbelief of men (Rom. 3:2:4), and wishing you well in the way of righteousness,

Fraternally and cordially yours,

EDITOR'S SERMON NOTES ON THE APOCALYPSE

Subject: The seventh Seal: or Laodicean State.
Text: Rev. 8:1, 2; 3:14-22.

Symbols of the Seveneth Seal Explained.

1. "Silence in Heaven." A calm after the storm of the sixth seal (Rev. 6:12-17; 12:7, 8; 7).

2 "About Half an Hour." In Revelations time is in miniature to comport with the symbols used (Josh. 10:11-13; 2 Kings 23:11, 5; 2 Sam. 2: 28). (a) In respect of number (Rev. 7:4, 9). (b) In respect of person (Rev. 7:3, 4). (c) In respect of time. Times of the Apocalypse are upon a miniature but proportional scale, and suited to the nature of the subject in hand (Rev. 11:9, 11). (d) Longest period in the book with reference to the saints is 1260 years (Dan. 7:25; 12:7; Rev. 12: 14, 6). (e) Shorter times are proportional parts of 1260, which is itself the half of 2520. First half of 2520 has to do with Israel; the last with the saints in conflict with Paganism and Romanism (Dan. 4). (f) A symbolic month (moon) is equal to 30 years. Divided by 30, the unit in one-half of a time, the product is 42 (Rev. 11:2; 1:3, 5). (g) The month or moon is one-twelfth of a cycle. If the cycle is 360 days it will be 30 days; if 360 years it will be 30 years (Rev. 9:15).

3. Historical Application... 1. "Silence" reigned from the battle of Chrysopolis to the death of Constantine, May 22, 337, a period of thirteen years and four months—"about half hour" in symbolic time, but "about fifteen years" in fact (Gib. 1506; 2:73, 74).

3. The Seven Angels of the Divine Presence. 1. "Which stood before God"—angels of the highest dignity and office (Matt. 18:10; Lk. 1:19; Matt. 13:40-42).

4. The Seven Trumpets Given Them to Sound. 1... Trumpets connect with war (Num. 10:9; Amos 3:6; Jer. 4:19). 2. Proclaim great festivals (Num. 10:10; Lev. 23:24. 25; 2 Chron. 29:27). 3. Relate to announcements of royalty (1 Kings 1:3, 394 2 Kings 9:13). 4. Accompany manifestations of God (Ex. 19:16). 5. Indicate the destruction of the ungodly (Jos. 6:13-16). 6. Resurrection of the dead and the setting up of the kingdom of God (1 Cor. 15; 1 Thess. 1; Rev. 11: 15, 18).

IN CREEDLAND
No. 6
CREEDS OF THE CHURCH OF GOD

Last week we printed the creed as it was published in the Illinois year book. Now in the same book, stating on the title page that the booklet contained a summary of the "principal doctrines" of the church, the state of Iowa is incorporated. As this state is thought to be particularly free from creeds, it makes exciting reading to ponder their statement of faith. It is found on pages 7 and 8 of this year book.

The Iowa Creed

"In faith, we are a part of the believers scattered throughout the United States and Canada, who take the Bible as their rule of faith and practice; believing that it teaches the final restitution of all things spoken of by the prophets—that the Kingdom of God on earth, in the hands of Christ and his people, will subdue sin and bring in everlasting righteousness—that faith in the Gospel, repentance from sin, and a holy life is essential to qualify us for a place in the Kingdom of God; the restoration of Israel as a nation, the personal coming of Jesus and his reign on earth until all enemies are subdued under him. These and other kindred truths are believed and taught among us.

"We take the Bible as our standard of faith and conduct, believing that in it is made known God's will to man touching everything essential, and we recommend its careful study. We believe that a free and untrammeled expression of its doctrines and principles, in the spirit of brotherly love, is conductive to growth in the Divine life, and we exhort that the teachings of the prophets, Jesus and his Apostles, in regard to human conduct toward one another and toward God be carefully followed in order that we may at last be worthy to become partakers of the Divine nature and inherit everlasting life." (All emphases are ours.—Editor.)

The following were the conference board of officers under whose encumbency of office this creed was published: O. J. Allard, president; Eva L. Stearns, secretary; C. A. Nokes, treasurer; G. P. Allard, Jr., corresponding secretary; Susie Todd, state Sunday School superintendent, and Elva Chapin, assistant superintendent. The booklet was published by the state conference through the above officers. They say: "In faith, we are part of the believers scattered throughout the United States and Canada." They believe, they say, that the Bible "teaches"—then follows a list of the things which they believe, to which summary is added: "These and other kindred truths are believed and taught among us." The list of things they have published is ample, and yet it is only fragmentary, for they say there are "other truths" they believe and teach, which are not published in this booklet. "These and other kindred truths ARE believed and taught among us." It may surprise some to find Iowa fathering a creed, but here it is. In a word, the Church of God has been dabbling in creeds from its early history. Were you to burn all the creeds which have been written by our church, you would have a bonfire that would alarm all your neighbors. In point of numbers, our church has written more creeds, are founders of more creeds, than any orthodox church in Christendom. In saying this we are not defending creeds; we are not saying that the good brethren in Iowa today believe in having a creed; we are only calling attention to facts which none deny.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brother Huggins:

The gospel has had such grand success the past three weeks that I want you and all to know of it, that God's glory and the power of his word may be more manifest to all.

Brother Adams came to Palmer October 16, and commenced holding meetings October 18 in the Methodist Church. As is usual at first, the attendance was poor in numbers, but those that did come were very attentive and came regularly. After a few evenings they began to come in large numbers and, from that to the close of the three weeks' meeting, there was very good attendence and splendid interest. There was very little opposition, but those who attended regularly seemed to have their hearts and minds open to the truth from the first. A question box was instituted and the questions that were put in seemed to be put in more with a view to learning, than to oppose. In fact, there was so little said against the truth that we were deceived and thought it was not sinking very deep—not striking home very forcefully. We began to think they were coming just because they saw in Brother Adams an entertaining speaker. We would hear these remarks: "He beats anyone I ever heard;" "I could listen to him all night;" "He is the best talker I ever heard and proves everything he says, too;" "I would come every night if he stayed all winter," etc., but very few questions that would show real interest in the truth itself. Imagine our surprise then when, during the last four evenings, fifteen took a stand for the truth and were baptized November 7, thus placing themselves with us, in such a position that they have a right to enlist Christ's help in making themselves worthy of his coming, so that they need not be ashamed nor afraid to stand before him.

We, ourselves, have learned a good lesson. While we were at home worrying and looking long faced for fear the truth was not taking the right kind of hold, God was giving the increase through the word, as Paul says he does. We have no need to worry over that point. That part belongs to God. All he has given us to do is to present the truth, and there our responsibility ends, and he does away with any possible loophole for us to assume any of the glory. It all belongs to God. It is his word that is presented, and it is his word that changes the thoughts and minds of the listeners. Brother Adams could not even be a clear and convincing speaker if he did not have God's pure truth to back him up, so even in that we must yield the glory to our Father.

Brother Adams commenced Saturday evening to hold meetings in the Methodist church at Cushing, 10 miles west of home. Up to date he has preached three sermons on the "Power of the Gospel;" "What the Gospel Is;" and "The Promises." There has been very good attendance and interest from the first. Nine of the new ones in the faith came in their autos last evening and brought some of their friends along.

May the work here have the prayers and interest of us all; in this way we can help Brother Adams in his untiring efforts to spread the truth.

In the one faith,

ALTA KING.

Dear Brother Huggins:

This week's Restitution reminds we of a purpose I had to write you, saying that those notes on "Two Greek Words" were not originally mine, but were copied some years ago into my Bible from the pages of "Things to Come." Who the author was I do not know. I sent the notes thinking they might be helpful. I know very little Greek myself and never attempted to verify the exactness of the remarks. The main object of the notes showing a remarkable dividing of time, I believe to be correct. I am very thankful, however, at anytime to have errors pointed out, especially when done in such a kindly manner as in this instance.

Faith, Hope and Charity, Only Three Remain

As we have proven, Jesus only promised that the signs should follow until the end of that age, and Paul tells us that they would cease (1 Cor. 12:1: "Now concerning spiritual gifts brethren, I would not have you ignorant."

Seeing that Paul wished his brethren to understand in regard to spiritual gifts, and not to be ignorant in reference to them, how necessary it will be for us to pay attention to all he says in regard to them. He names over nine gifts of the Spirit: 8th verse: "To one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge of the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gift of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues."

After naming over nine gifts, Paul tells us in the last verse of the chapter: "Covet earnestly the best gifts; and yet show I unto you a more excellent way." Here is a striking thought; the gifts were a wonderful thing; to have such power imparted was something they could well covet, but he was going to show them "a more excellent way;" something greater than all the gifts. The next chapter will explain what it is: "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries and all knowledge; and though I have all faith so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing."

Of all wonderful things, charity is the greatest. What is this wonderful charity that is greater than speaking with the tongues of men and of angels; greater than giving all our goods to feed the poor; greater than giving our body to be burned; greater than all miracles, signs and wonders? As all agree, this charity is love; but all do not agree as to what this love is. A sentimental feeling with prayers and cries for mercy, and oft repeated assurances of affection, are too often accepted in place of the genuine article, and people rest in the assurance that they love God; but, let the Apostle tell us what love, or Bible charity is. 1 John 5:3: "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments."

Love and works are synonymous terms in the vocabulary of the Spirit. A sentimental love unaccompanied by obedience will not be accepted. Jesus declared: "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say? Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." What are some of his commands? "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself;" "Till I come give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine; meditate upon these things, give thyself wholly to them;" "Awake to righteousness and sin not;" "Redeem the time because the days are evil;" "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking be put away from you with all malice."

My brother and sister, can we claim to love Jesus if we are not obeying these plain commands? Do we love him with all our heart, and with all our strength, and with all our mind? If we do, we will give attendance to reading—and not only that, but we will meditate upon the things read, and talk of the marvelous works of God. We will not be found reading novels in place of reading the wonderful sixty-six letters written to us, contained in his word. If we love him, we will be found redeeming the time, and that will not be at the theatre, or euchre table, or watching a horse race. If we love him, we will awake to righteousness and sin not, and put away all wrath, anger and evil speaking. Almost the last words that Jesus had recorded for our learning were: 'Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter through the gates into the city."

That is why charity, or the love of God, which is keeping his commandments, is greater than all else—it is the only thing that will give us a right to the tree of life; a right to walk the golden paved streets of the wonderful city of God. Of all rights this is the greatest; the narrow confines of the tomb will never be ours, but immortal beauty, life unending, and pleasures forever more. The pleasures of this life are too short too fleeting—too soon passed away to be worth laboring for. It has truly been said "If any seek for true happiness while sowing to the flesh, he will find in the end that the fruit so much desired will prove to be Dead Sea apples, lovely to behold, but they dissolve into ashes at the touch."

You cannot fail to see that this charity, or love of God comprises many things. You pass along the street, and you read a sign in front of a large building "Groceries"—that term covers many articles: tea, coffee, peas, beans, flour, tomatoes, salt, sugar, etc. So charity, or love of God, is a wonderful compound. Giving our goods to feed the poor is only one ingredient and will avail us nothing, apart from putting away all malice, all evil speaking, all anger and wrath. Many rich men seem to think that they can buy with their thousands a right to the tree of life; and a privilege to walk the golden streets of the beautiful city of God; but they will find the gates barred to all who have not this wonderful Bible charity. The widow, with only her mite to bestow, will pass in, to bask forever in the sunshine of eternal glory, and to behold the wonders of eternity; while the rich, who have given of their abundance, will vainly call for admittance, because not found doers of his commandments. This is what Paul did not want us to be ignorant of—he wanted us to know this wonderful love or charity is indeed "a more excellent way." He also wanted us to know something more about charity and the gifts, so in the 8th verse he enlightens us: "Charity never faileth, but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away." How plain, how forcible, how convincing!

We need no longer be ignorant in regard to the gifts, and think that they are still given to God's people. Prophecies were to cease—who dares to say that any one can prophesy now? Power to speak in tongues was to cease, no more knowledge by divine inspiration.

What would remain after they ceased? (13th verse): "And now abideth faith, hope, and charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."

After the gifts ceased there were only three to remain, not four, or five, or six—but only three and the greatest of all is charity.

When Christ comes, faith will change to sight, and hope to glad fruition; but charity will continue on, during the endless ages of eternity.

Dear reader, is not this evidence in harmony with what you know? Did you ever see anyone who could speak one word of a language that he never learned? Did you ever see the tongue of the dumb loosed, or the eyes of the blind opened? Did you ever know one who had power to awake the sleeping dead, or who could shake off the venomous serpent and feel no harm? You know that you never did; then why not gladly accept the evidence that proves that the Almighty only promised that the signs should follow to the end of that age? No longer support your pretentions after you have lost your power. Can you not see that by so doing you put the sword into the infidel's hand and stand powerless before him?

INVITATION AND REMISSION

Who is it but delights to have a gracious invitation extended from those whom we fondly love and cherish? To those so blessed it is nothing short of a veritable "feast of fat things on the lees well refined." A semblance of unrefinement has no place in the temperature of the felicitious occasion. It may be for a night, a week, or a year, and as "life is made up of meetings and partings," the genial time of concord and good fellowship all too soon abruptly ends.

But "One there is above all others," steps into the gap and commissions Simon Peter his servant to invite the whole world of mankind for time and eternity to "Repent ye and be immersed every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins." Those conditions imperatively appeal for change of mind, opinion, walk and conversation. Because called out from the helpless stranded state which all naturally inherit, at such cost with "Precious blood as of a lamb without blemish, without spot, even the blood of Christ." The price was a ransom, the sacrifice inestimatable, strain and pressure all but intolerable, and the intense pleading in prayer to the Father in the heavens, brought forth drops of sweat tinged with blood, while the Savior asked if it were possible that this cup fraught with suffering be allowed to pass. He who could summon twelve legion of angels to his aid, received no recorded answer to his fervent petition, because he had said: "I lay down my life for the sheep."

Reader, are you among the sheep and still astray on the devious byways and mountains of sin? Listen to the world-wide call of the loving Savior Jesus, because you are included: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest" (Matt. 11:28). Why will you doubting stand, why still delay? You cannot afford to allow the athletes Ahimaaz and Cushi outrun you, as they did from the battlefield when Israel was rent asunder in rebellion. They ran with every unit of nerve and muscle at their utmost tension to bring the earliest obtainable news to their good King David, whom they were pledged to love and faithfully serve. Specially, when the king's business was urgent, so urgent! All this was done in the interest of an earthly kingdom which passed away.

Why not be ambitious and strive for a kingdom that cannot be moved, nor come to an end? Bear in mind, it is yours, on condition you make prompt and proper application to secure emoluments and privileges to obtain heirship and joint-heirship with the great King Jesus when he sets up his kingdom. You will highly enjoy the ecstasy of believing the joyful news " Which maketh rich and addeth no sorrow."

Why delay? Awake today from the sleep of indifference and indecision. Jesus Christ can and will save to the utmost all who will come to him in the Scripturally appointed war. The hand once spiked to a Roman gibbet is held out to you in mercy. The eye that shed salt tears of pity over Jerusalem is looking to you, and the voice which has levingly spoken to and been heard by many a wanderer on the broad road leading to perdition is saying to you: "Thy sins are forgiven;" "Come to me."

In conclusion, we hope you are not one of that unfortunate class who stubbornly declare they cannot believe. Have tried time and again and find they hopelessly cannot believe. Remember the Christ marvelled at his unbelieving countrymen, to whom he said: "Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe." Procrastinate no longer; the door of mercy may be shut any minute and in the reflective diction of the paraphrase it is asked:

"How long to scenes of false delight
Will thou with crowds repair?
How long your strength and substance waste
On trifles light as air?"

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:11-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1: 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

"THE COMING TIME OF TROUBLE"

No. 1

"And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book" (Dan. 12:1).

"For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no nor ever shall be" (Matt. 24:21).

"But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only. But as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be" (Matt. 24:36-39).

"And as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all. Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed" (Luke 17: 26-30).

My beloved brethren, we notice there is a feeling prevalent today throughout the great world of nominal Christiandom that the world (organized society) is growing better, that mankind, by their own efforts are rapidly preparing the world in righteousness, for the setting up or establishment of the kingdom of God under the direct reign of his his beloved Son and his saints. They are extremely optimistic in their views, and point with pride to the various benevolent enterprises, hospitals, asylums, prison reforms, temperance legislature, etc., that are now so manifest as evidence supporting their claims. On the other hand, a respectable minority of society recognizes that the world is becoming more wicked and is fast drifting away from God: living without God and without hope in the world, their own selfish interests occupying the chief attention; and is a pessimistic spirit very forcibly pointing out that in "the good old times" men were more honest and law abiding than now.

We who know the joyful sound of the gospel and preach with intelligence the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, leave these two opposite schools of thought to explain matters the best they can. We will stand by God's word and accept gladly the precious lessons revealed to us as we study it in harmony with God's revealed plan and purpose, viz. the selection from among men a people for his name.

Many people in reading these scriptures, seem to think that God is displeased with mankind because they are eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, building houses and dwelling in them, and showing interest in the various and manifold business enterprises, spring up like mushrooms around us in every direction today. Dear brethren, all these things God instituted himself. In creating man the being he is, surely man must eat and drink and labor to provide the same to sustain his life. Surely he must protect himself from the inclemency of the weather and the vigorous of an unfavorable climate. He must necessarily build some kind of a habitation in which to dwell. Hence, it cannot be that God is displeased with men who indulge or participate in these practical things.

Is he wrong in marrying or giving in marriage? Surely not, for our dear Redeemer himself approved of it, not only by being a guest and present at a wedding, but also performing his first recorded miracle at such a gathering. Our Lord further distinctly declared that God instituted this, and the Apostle Paul declared it to be honorable for all, and used it as an illustration to show the relationship existing between Christ and his church.

To what, then, does our Lord refer in the declaration, "As it was in the days of Noah," etc. We must go back and look a little deeper into this question for a correct answer. What event in man's history placed him in an estranged position towards his creator? We locate it in sin, which is inherent in man, resulting from his fall from innocence when God tested our first parents in the garden of Eden. Previous to the fall of our first parents God blessed them, exhorting them to be faithful and fill the earth with their offspring, bringing the earth into the beautiful condition of perfection revealed in the garden of Eden. His love and goodness prompted him to provide for their mutual pleasure and enjoyment. But through man's disobedience (1 Tim. 2:14; Rom. 5:12), sin entered this blissful abode; man became a changed creature, no longer seeking God and his sweet fellowship, but yielding up his members to unrighteousness and uncleanness, entirely given over to the bent and propensity of his carnal mind begotten in him by the spirit of evil.

We are informed in the scriptures that as a result of sin, mankind has been divided into two great camps, knows as the seed of the serpent and the seed of the woman (Gen. 3:15). The destiny of these two seeds is also fixed. The seed of the woman is Christ and all who by baptism into his death have put on his all-saving name (Gal. 3:29; Rom. 6:3-6). The seed of the serpent are all those out of Christ and therefore not his fellow heirs (John 3:35, 36; 2 Thes. 1:7-10).

Hence we see that the woman's seed destiny is eternal life; the serpent's seed, eternal death. In Gen. 6:2, these two classes are called the sons of God and the daughters of men. Throughout scripture God demands that these two seeds are to be separate and refrain from unity with each other; whenever it has occurred confusion and evil have resulted, and bringing upon their heads the wrath of God, resulting in this case their destruction by the flood.

In Amos 3:2, 3, we read: "You only have I known of all families of the earth, therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities. Can two walk together, except they be agreed?" Of all the nations that have come and gone, God has only recognized one—the nation of Israel. The Apostle Paul in his first epistle to the Corinthians, in the tenth chapter tells us that all which happened to Israel was for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come. So whenever Israel formed an alliance by marriage or otherwise with the heathen nations, their neighbors, it displeased God and brought upon them punishment (Numbers 25:6-10).

God is only dealing today with spiritual Israel, those who have taken upon themselves his name. But all are not Israel who claim to be so. Nevertheless, God will judge them because they have taken his name in vain (Rev. 2:9). Now let us see if we can find an analogy existing today compared with the days of Noah and Lot.

Remember that the great Christian world claims to be Christian, so let us see what her relationship is with the world. Probably at the breakfast table tomorrow morning as you scan hastily the daily newspaper, your eye will be greeted with a scare head line announcing the forming of another great trust, taking into its graps many individual industries and companies, crushing out of existence all who oppose or resist them, whether it be the government or its competitors.

These trusts are being rapidly organized on the one hand by vast combinations of capital, and on the other hand vast and mighty organizations known as labor unions; supporting these are secret societies of many and strange names. Some are semi-military, some semi-political, and others are semi-religious. The great nominal church is flirting with these, and more or less its members are becoming associated with them, and the governments, especially in Europe and the United States, are completing this unholy alliance of church and state, producing and developing within itself Babylon.

God has a controversy with the nations, and in this the day of the Lord's vengeance, he will utterly destroy these giants by the fire of his jealousy (Zeph. 3:7, 8), when his glorious Son shall come again, when the hail of truth shall wash away the lies and errors begotten and fostered by these false and corrupt systems.

GEO. B. ALLDRIDGE.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH A MINISTER

I have a little news for you. There has been a special missionary among the P. B.'s here, giving a lurid chart series of lectures, and as usual the terrors of the orthodox hell loom large in his remarks. Hearing of this, I wrote him a kindly note, saying I was pleased he was preaching the personal return of the Lord Jesus, though sorry to learn he was preaching eternal torment, and would be carefully and prayerfully read enclosed tracts. The following was his reply:

Minister's Letter

Dear Sir:

I received your note and tracts. I have read the tracts and find them ful' of the Dead Gospel, viz., the annihilation of the wicked at death. I do not wonder at God's people in Nottingham not allowing you to have any more fellowship after you had imbibed such fundamental errors. Death in scripture never means ceasing to exist. It means separation, whether spiritual, physical or eternal, or the second death.

Eternal punishment is both negative and positive. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life," not everlasting existence. You mix up the terms; all men have everlasting existence, but only the saved have everlasting life. Then the second part of John 3:36 is: "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life (negative), but the wrath of God abideth on him (positive)." Also see Rev. 14:10, 11, "Tormented." Please note, "no rest day nor night." This is as plain as noonday, isn't it?

Please come along to the chart meeting, and probably you will get some light on this important subject. Yours, etc., ROBERT TELFER.

Reply

Dear Friend:

Your remarkable letter duly received. I am sorry that circumstances utterly prevented my calling at your mission; but, had I been able, I am afraid little would have been gained. In any case I much prefer going to the Bible direct, and taking its plain, simple language.

I will answer your letter fully, as I have time, and will, if you have no objection, publish the correspondence (locally). One thing is very certain—your teaching, as expressed in your letter, is neither logical nor scriptural, and a man of your knowledge should be above such perversion of language. This is strong language, I know, but I am both able and willing to support it. It is evident you can not express your teaching without coining words and phrases not to be found in the Bible.

Yours faithfully, R. H. JUDD.

The following is a note in which I offer to open debate if he can overcome the difficulty of my deafness:

Dear Friend:

Your letter does not in the last surprise me. It is, indeed, what I expected, both in tone and manner of argument.

Your very first sentence is a misstatement of facts, and one needs to be very careful not to misrepresent even ap opponent.

There was no statement in either my tracts or my letter setting forth the annihilation of the wicked at death; in fact, I took exception to the use of the term "annihilation" as not being a scriptural expression; and if your reference is to the first death, which evidently is the case, then your misrepresentation is tenfold worse. I used both to believe and teach as you do, but God opened my eyes to the astounding fact that I could not state the belief I then had in plain scriptural language. I was obliged to resort, as you do, to expressions that are not to be found in scripture; and not only that, you are obliged to make and use terms that are actually antagonistic to the plain unparabolic statements of the Word of God. You say: "Death in scripture never means ceasing to exist." I might almost say it never means anything else. Here is one instance, and there are many, many more: Turn to Gen. 7: 21, 22. I need only ask the question and you may answer it for yourself: Are the cattle and creeping things that died then existing now? And if they did not cease to exist when they died, will you kindly say when they did cease to exist? A third question: Would any unbiased mind, in reading that narrative, have any cause for supposing that the word "died" meant one thing in the case of the animals and another in the case of men, for they are all included in the same sentence, and the same term applied to all? Let an honest, straightforward answer be given to these three questions. See also Ps. 37:10. Surely no language could more plainly state the final nonexistence of the wicked. It is "plain as noonday." You say death "means separation." You will not find that definition in the dictionary, nor will you find it in scripture. But supposing it does mean separation. If a man loses his life he surely loses all that makes existence of any worth to him, for without life he can not live. What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his life? A man can not lose a thing and have it too. Your attempt to make a difference between everlasting life and everlasting existence is not new but it certainly is not logical. Even a schoolboy can see that; and, most important of all, the term is not scriptural. You say I mix up the terms. I can find the terms, "everlasting life" and "endless life," in God's word, and the meaning is plain and simple—just what it says. But as for "everlasting existence," in contradistinction to "everlasting life," it is not, to my knowledge, in the Bible, nor is it in any other literature than that which is forced to coin expressions because they can not put their teaching in the language of the Book of books.

You say "all men have everlasting existence." Will you please give me chapter and verse that says so? I am willing to accept statement of the Bible to that effect if it is there, but not of any man, not even Sir Oliver Lodge; and it is very noticeable that neither he nor you can abstain from using the word "life." Even Sir Oliver Lodge would be amused if you told him people had active existence without life. John 3:36 in no way helps your case, for it certainly speaks of utter extinction of life. The same idea is elsewhere expressed. "The lamp of the wicked shall be put out." Your whole case is bolstered up on two popular ideas which the public have been led to believe true, but which have no foundation in fact, viz., the immortality of all men, and that "for ever" necessarily means "endless" continuance without end. The first even the best scientists admit to be without any proof whatever. Even you admit that the person you address is "mortal" by the quotation stamped on your envelopes; and as for the other, you must know that "for ever" is always limited by its subject. You take advantage of the public's ignorance on these matters.

As for "getting light on this important subject" at your meeting, I must say I prefer going to the Bible direct, and when that good book tells me in the plainest of language that the wicked shall perish I believe it, for anything you may say to the contrary. I hold it is wickedness for a man of your knowledge to try and twist such plain statements of God's word and deny the force of their literal meaning as you do. Such methods in business you would scorn, and you have no right to do it in theology. No wonder the people are leaving the Bible and the churches when they find its professed ministers so flatly denying its plainest statements. We are told the wicked shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord. If that does not mean what it says, how else could it be more plainly put?

Yours faithfully,

R. H. JUDD.

No one is useless in this world who lightens the burden of it to anyone else.—Dickens.

The one who will be found in trial capable of great acts of love is ever the one who is always doing considerate small ones.

We are all dissatisfied. The only difference is that some of us sit down in the squalor of our dissatisfaction, while others make a ladder of it.

Young people should never forget that they have in their brains and hands, while the power of brains and hands remains, actual money yielding the best capital.

We never know for what God is preparing us in his schools, for what work on earth, for what work in the hereafter. Our business is to do our work well in the present place, whatever that may be.—Lyman Abbott.

It is bad policy to be haughty, repellent, unsocial. The most resolute aspirant to wealth or position may stumble as he climbs, and, if no one stretches out a finger to save him, may roll headlong to a depth far below the point from which he started. A lift for a lift is the business rule of today.

True goodness is not without that germ of greatness which can bear with patience the mistakes of the ignorant and the censures of the malignant. The approbation of God is her "exceeding great reward," and she would not debase a thing so precious to her by an association with the contaminating plaudits of man.

It is the pursuit which gives all the zest to life. The toil, the energy, the perseverance, the endeavor that brings the joy both in it and after it—these strengthen the faculties, whet the desires, invigorate the whole nature, and make happiness possible. Without them we should sink into the hopeless misery of inertia. No failure, no adversity can be half so disastrous as the ennui, the discontent, and the vacuity of the idler.

HISTORY OF THE NEBRASKA CONFERENCE
No. 1

Bro. Almus Adams came to Nebraska in the spring of 1881, from Hardin County, Iowa, brought up under the teaching of J. T. Prime, C. C. Ramsey and others. Bro. Adams and wife were baptized by Bro. C. C. Ramsey in Iowa. He began preaching in that State at the age of 29 years, and after coming to Nebraska began to preach, holding meetings around in neighborhood school houses.

J. S. Miller came to Nebraska from Chicago in 1885, where he had learned the gospel from Charles Gardner and C. C. Ramsey, and was living in the neighborhood of Cambridge, coming from there over to Fairview school house, this being the neighborhood where Bro. Adams then lived, when it was proposed that they meet and organize a conference. A meeting was called, and it was decided that September 1 to 3, 1886, was the date of the first conference of the Church of God in Nebraska. The officers of this conference were Almus Adams, President; J. S. Miller, Secretary; J. T. Prime, Treasurer. J. S. Miller was elected evangelist and F. M. Clifton assistant. A. V. Crouk, of Nebraska, was ordained to preach the gospel at this meeting. The days passed by, the officers and brethren as well working away in the discharge of their duties amid the hardships known best by those who took part in building up western Nebraska.

We have now reached September 1, 1887, when the second annual conference was held at the same place, which was near Edison, Neb., holding till the 4th. The same officers were elected again. N. Horlady was appointed collector, and Bro. Miller again was chosen evangelist. The ministers present at this meeting were, C. C. Ramsey, J. T. Prime and Almus Adams. Five were immersed in the Republican River, the first baptized in that part of the State, also the first baptizing done by Bro. Adams. It was at this meeting that Bro. Adams was ordained to preach the gospel.

Program: Called to order by hymn, "Praise God From Whom all Blessings Flow;" reading scriptures; prayer; sermon; singing; dinner. Meeting again afternoon and evening, September 2d; social meeting led by Bro. Adams; subject, "I am the door;" 11 a. m., preaching; dinner. Meeting again in afternoon and evening, September 3d; Bible study, the Ten Commandments; 11 a. m., preaching; dinner; social meeting at 3 p. m.; Bro. Adams talked two hours, preaching again in the evening. September 4th, Bible study, led by Bro. Adams; 11 a. m., preaching; dinner; preaching and baptism in afternoon; preaching; Lord's supper; good-bye in the evening. Thus closed the second annual conference.

Time takes us down to September 20 to 21, 1888, at which time was held the third conference. The officers elected at this meeting were: Almus Adams, President for third term; G. V. Mister, Secretary; John Adams, Treasurer; Almus Adams, evangelist. It was decided at this meeting to send a delegate to the national conference at Philadelphia, Bro. Adams being the delegate chosen. The following ordained ministers were present; S. C. Oliver and J. M. Henry, of Attica, Kan.; J. T. Prime, of Edison, Neb., and Almus Adams, of Arapahoe.

In a grove without tent or shelter, two and one-half miles from Edison, September 3 to 8, 1889, was held the fourth annual conference. The following officers were elected: Bro. Almus Adams, President for the fourth term; J. J. Cady, Secretary; A. F. Harlan, Corresponding Secretary; N. Hornady, Treasurer. Almus Adams was again chosen State Evangelist, at a salary of seven dollars per week. National conference was held this time at Chicago. Bro. J. T. Prime was the delegate chosen but for some reason was not able to go, and Bro. Adams was sent. Ministers present were: A. J. Eychaner, of Iowa; J. T. Prime and Almus Adams, of Nebraska.

September 19 to 28, 1890, the fifth annual conference was held in Judge Allen's grove in Frontier County, the first day being occupied in arranging tents, seats and other preparations. Bro. Samuel Wilson, of New Jersey; Bro. Clifton, of Cairns, Neb., and Bro. Adams, of Arapahoe, were the preaching brethern. Bros. Wilson and Clifton left for their homes during the week, leaving Bro. Adams to finish the meeting. He proved, however, to be equal to the emergency, and delivered some of the best sermons we have ever heard. The one on the last day of the meeting, on the nature of man, was especially grand. The following officers were elected: Almus Adams, President; J. J. Cady, Secretary; C. F. Story, Treasurer. Bro. Adams was chosen State Evangelist at a salary of $365 a year. Letters of greeting were received from brothers and sisters of Bee, Neb., and Bro. Eychaner, of Iowa.

September 25 to October 5, 1891, the sixth annual conference was held at Arapahoe, in the tent belonging to the Iowa conference. The officers elected at this meeting were: Almus Adams, President; J. J. Cady, Secretary; A. F. Harlan, Treasurer. Bro. Adams was again chosen State Evangelist at a salary of $500 per year.

The seventh annual conference was held September 2 to 11, 1892, at Indianola, the former officers being unanimously re-elected. Bro. Adams was again chosen Evangelist. On motion of H. B. Cramer, Bro. J. T. Prime was elected assistant Evangelist at a salary of one dollar per day for time actually employed. Number of miles traveled by evangelist during the year by team, 1100, by rail 4338, making a total of 5438. Total number of members in the State, 209; organized churches, 5, with membership of 59, the rest being isolated members. Bro. Adams started out in a tent June 25, 1892; meetings were held that year at Lyons, Blair and Stockville.

The eighth annual conference was held at Cambridge, commencing September 10 and continuing ten days, and was the largest gathering of the kind ever held in the State; twenty-four families were camped in the park; total attendance, 142. Miles traveled by evangelist by team 1193, by rail 5438; total 6631. Officers elected were: M. D. Newell, President (this was Bro. Newell's first term, Bro. Adams having filled that office, as well as State Evangelist, all the time); J. J. Cady, Secretary; A. F. Harlan, Treasurer. Bro. Adams was elected Evangelist and Bro. Prime assistant. T. J. Bartlett and W. L. Crow were ordained ministers of the gospel, and a certificate was granted J. P. Glenn, of Fairhaven, Kansas. Reports were read at this conference by Bro. M. D. Newell for the Moorefield church; Bro. Wm. Stevens, of the church at South Frontier County, and Sister Rena Gorton, of the St. Paul church, and John Mehrens, of the church at Blair. Their remarks were principally in regard to local work and were very interesting. Number baptized for the year, 100; discourses, 230.

DIALOGUE NO. 4

Mr. Oracle—Good evening, Mr. Christian! I hope you don't thing I have lost interest in the subject of our recent talks, though I had not seen you recently.

Mr. Christian—Oh, no, Mr. Oracle; I understood you were making a study of it, and were making frequent visits to the public library for books.

Mr. Oracle—Well, I did consult a number of historical works.

Mr. Christian—And with what result as to your previous convictions?

Mr. Oracle—I came to just the conclusion that you predicted, Mr. Christian. None other was possible, as you said, to a man who was open to conviction, and I was compelled to reject the "immortal soul" doctrine as unscriptural.

Mr. Christian—I am pleased to hear you express your emancipation from the thraldom of that belief in such unqualified terms. The true way of salvation is offered by God to a mortal race, and by that means alone is there hope of immortal life at the resurrection of the just. Having rid yourself of the "immortal soul" theory, you are now ready to get the Scriptural understanding and an intelligent comprehension of the words of Jesus: "I am the resurrection and the life."

Mr. Oracle—I feel different already about the whole subject of salvation, and realize that I have yet to learn some of the first principles of the Gospel.

Mr. Christian—I would be pleased to assist you in that direction at any time, but I see that you have some of your notes of your recent studies with you. Did you want me to see them?

Mr. Oracle—Oh yes, Mr. Christian; I want you to see a few extracts I made during the first couple of weeks. The first is from Herodotus, the most ancient historian, as follows: "The Egyptians say that Ceres and Bocchus hold their chief sway in the infernal regions; and the Egyptians also were the first who asserted the doctrine that the soul of man is immortal" (Herod. Book II., Sec. 1, 2, 3).

Mr. Christian—Yes, and that is a perfectly valid reason for what the historian Gibbon says in Vol 1, page 530, to wit: "The doctrine of the immortality of the soul is omitted in the law of Moses." Could a better reason be found for its being omitted than that it originated among the Egyptians?

Mr. Oracle—You are right, I think, for Egypt seems to be used in the Scriptures as a symbol of darkness, of mystery, and of idolatry.

Mr. Christian—You probably found something in regard to the belief of Martin Luther, did you not?

Mr. Oracle—In an old work, printed in 1772, entitled "Historical View of the Intermediate State," speaking of Luther's belief in relation to the state of the dead. It says he held "That they lay in a profound sleep until the resurrection," and adds that he "followed many of the fathers of the ancient church in this opinion."

Mr. Christian—In that opinion he agreed with the Scriptures also, for we read in Daniel 12:2: "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." This is further confirmed by the Apostle Paul's words in 1 Cor. 15:51-2, and also Isaiah 26:19.

Mr. Oracle—In a book called "The Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge" I found references to Origen, of whom it says: "He was the first to harmonize the Christian doctrine with the Platonic philosophy"—of an immortal soul. I was more shocked than I can express when I found that the sect of religionists named after him held to the view that the "soul" was pre-existent as well as living after death of the body.

Mr. Christian—Isn't it just as reasonable to believe the "soul" could exist before it possessed a body as after it became disembodied at death? One idea is no more contrary to truth than the other, and those holding the one view ought consistently to embrace the other.

Mr. Oracle—So I though, Mr. Christian, and finding the Platonic theory was only a survival of the old Egyptian paganism, and had no foundation but the speculations of the pagan philosophers of heathen nations, I was willing to look for something having the seal and authority of divine revelation.

Mr. Christian—It gives me genuine pleasure to hear you say so, Mr. Oracle. The belief in an "immortal soul" completely nullifies those teachings of Jesus Christ and the apostles and prophets as to the return of Christ, which was "the blessed hope" of the apostolic church. See Titus 2:13, where Paul tells us "We should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." See also the word to Timothy (1 Tim. 6:14): "That than keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ." He taught his disciples that they could not go to heaven, saying: "Where I go, ye cannot come," but he just as positively assured them of his coming again when he said: "I will return and receive you unto myself" (John 13:33; 14:2). Can we do better than the Apostle John, who greeted the announcement of Jesus, "Surely I come quickly," with the devout prayer, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus"" CHAS. A. GOSS.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

If we all met in one place would we all speak the same thing? Are all studying to show ourselves workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth? Are we indulging in profane babblings, which increase into more ungodliness? Paul says to the Corinthians: "How is it, then, brethren? When you come together every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying."

Today can we not find some believing in a "broad way," when Christ taught the one and "narrow way?" The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." How is it, then, that some believe that these people will have "a fair chance?"

Then we find others who fellowship unbelievers. Paul says, "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? What communion hath light with darkness?" What is the use of our coming out from unbelievers if we invite them to the Lord's table? Brethren, that table belongs to the Lord's children, and we have no right to have "fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." Read 1 Cor. 10:21.

"Whosoever shall eat this bread and drink this cup unworthily shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body." Paul was not talking here to aliens, but to the brethren. If we paid more attention to the household and less to the shortcomings of the world we might please our heavenly Father more.

Some do not seem to realize the duty of meeting around the Lord's table weekly, but allow weeks and even months to pass without celebrating the Lord's death. Not so with the disciples; they met together the first day of the week, and they continued steadfastly in the apostle's doctrine, and in fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. It is around this table that we receive strength to go through this life as true soldiers of Christ. How easy it is to become lukewarm and stay away if one time is missed. Christ knew the weakness of our mortal flesh, so he instituted this memorial, that we, his followers, should not forget why he offered himself. Let us keep in mind Paul's words: "The cup of blessing, which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?"

Again, if there are different opinions and interpretations of God's word among us, can we say, as in 1 Cor. 10:17: "For we, being many, are one bread and one body; for we are all partakers of that one bread." "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scriptures is of any private interpretation" (2 Pet. 1:20). This text excludes us from holding hobbies and causing confusion in the church of God. The word says God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints. So, brethren and sisters, let us be stable in all our ways, and follow Christ in the narrow way, and when it is our privilege to meet with others of like faith let us be faithful in doing so. Let us all "with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom. 15:6).

JESSIE KAUFFMAN.

Dear Bro. Huggins:

Please allow me a few words in The Restitution. I was very much interested in Bro. L. T. Nichol's article November 2d on "The Holy Spirit." He has the correct ideas of "the end of the world" and the gifts given to the apostles. But at the close of his article he is far from the truth when he quotes Rev. 22:17: "And the spirit and the bride say, Come," etc. He applies that call of both the spirit and bride to the present time. The spirit alone is now calling. As yet there is no "bride" to call. Why? Because no marriage has taken place and will not until the bridegroom returns to claim his betrothed, and the marriage takes place. Do you get the thought?

L. S. BRONSON.

The time when Rev. 22:17 applies is a theme now open for discussion in The Restitution. Would like to hear from different writers in regard to it.—Ed.

WHY GOD'S PEOPLE SHOULD REJOICE
Duet. 26:11

"And thou shall rejoice in every good thing which the Lord thy God hath given unto thee and thine house."

Brothers and sisters, there is no one in the world that can really rejoice over anything but God's people. There are things that fall into our lives and in the lives of others that cause us to rejoice for the time being, but they are only temporal. The things that we, God's chosen, rejoice in, are things of the future. They are things that the Lord, "the righteous judge," shall give to us if we are but faithful unto the end. Now brothers and sisters, we see that those of the world have reason for not rejoicing, for unless we follow Christ and believe in him and are baptized, we can not be heirs according to the promise. If we are of the world we are wicked, and we rejoice in wickedness.

We read in John 14:28: "Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away and come again unto you. If ye loved me ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father, for my Father is greater than I." Again, in Acts 1:11, we read that the angels of the Lord appeared unto the men of Galilee saying: "Why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

It seems to me that this verse alone, ought to be sufficient to convince people that there are greater things to be in the future than are now. The word of God appears to me to be as a flower. We hold the Book as a sacred possession. We know that its contents are beautiful, but the real sweetness is when we get down in this beautiful flower, the Bible, and pick this sweetness out. If it were so that we did not have a teacher to help us along in our study, we could rejoice alone for the reason of possessing the true word of God. But how much more we can appreciate and rejoice in these things when we know that we have been cared for and given teachers, many brothers and sisters, to help us bear our burdens.

We know that in the beginning the promises were made to Abraham and his seed. We also know that as generations have passed, that we are still in direct line with the ancient worthies, and that by constant prayer and perseverance and all that is required in the true Christian life, that we too will obtain the promises.

As we are now set aside in the world to rejoice in these beautiful things that are to come, we ought to place ourselves as a picture in an art gallery. We know that there are poor pictures as well as beautiful ones. So let us, as God's children, be a beautiful picture that will attract the attention of those who are of the world. Let us shine forth as a star in a dark sky, so that our light will be noticed. Then let us give all praise and thanks to our Father, who has helped us in our journey: for "without him we can do nothing."

Brothers and sisters, from this brief outline that I have written, I have tried to show one or two points wherein we have reason to rejoice. It would be impossible for anyone to try to show all the beautiful things that are to come, for that precious book, the Bible, is filled from cover to cover with things that are too beautiful for words to express. Anyone that reads this book and then disbelieves, cannot rejoice, for all things that are worth knowing are in this book. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." For "the righteous shall inherit the land and dwell there forever."

That the Lord may help us in our endeavors to become more perfect Christians and lead many more into this marvelous light, is my prayer. May he say at last: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I shall make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

"DISPENSATIONS ARE NOT SOLD"

"What does a dispensation for marriage in the third degree cost? Is the cost the same for a mixed marriage?"

"Dispensations are not sold. The fee which is required in connection with some dispensations has more the nature of a fine, to show the church's attitude against granting the same. This fine does not go to the priest nor to the bishop, nor to anyone connected with the church, but to charity, usually into the 'orphan fund' of a diocese."

The above is from the "Question and Answer" department of the Sunday Visitor, a Catholic paper published at Huntington, Ind. It is certainly an elevating piece of information. The questioner did not ask "What is the price?" He asked: "What does a dispensation cost?" But the priest, supposing a priest has charge of this department, could not let the opportunity pass to dispense the information that "dispensations are not sold." Oh, no; dispensations never were sold. Luther lied, Chiniquy lied, Clark lied, Crowley lied—they all lied who have stated that dispensations were sold by the Catholic church.

"Dispensations are not sold;" those desiring them are simply "fined" for wanting what the church has to dispense. In other words, it is wrong for people to do or have certain things, but the "holy mother church" needs the money, and for a consideration it grants "dispensations" to do or have these wrongful things.

"Not sold." No, but the fines are listed in proportion to the desirability of the thing wanted. If it is a big "sin" the church assesses a big "fine"—gets more money, etc. Isn't it a dandy game of graft? You pay if you do, and you pay if you don't. Nothing is sold—you are just "fined," that'st all.

Will some Catholic logician enlighten The Menace by revealing the difference between a fine imposed before a thing is done, with the privilige of doing it, and setting a price for the same thing?

When it comes to grab and graft, we'll put the Catholic system against all other systems on earth and give the other fellows a five-mile start.

And it goes into the "orphan fund." Oh, you orphans!—The Menace.

He who loves goodness, harbors angels reverres reverence, and lives with God.

Do not expect that, in your own strength, you can make use of even the best opportunities of doing good.—Jean Ingelow.

THE CALL OF SAMUEL.

HUGH DUNCAN

"And the Lord came, and stood, and called as at other times, Samuel, Samuel. Then Samuel answered, Speak; for thy servant heareth"—(1 Samuel 3:10).

What are those calls of God that come to us, but are not recognized? Were we wise in heart there were no need to ask that question. God's calls are as innumerable and incessant as the waves that break around our island home. But they are not always audible voices. Oftener they are the inarticulate longings of our heart. What! the silent yearnings of our heart voices of God? Are they not merely natural desires? Yes, in one sense they are. But who put them there? God himself did, that they might witness for him, and through them he is calling us.

It is a significant fact that, no matter how much a man has in this world, he never has enough. There is always some corner that earth does not fill. This is the Lord's doing. He has set eternity in our heart; and that is why we must go for ever unsatisfied till we find in fellowship with himself our fullest satisfaction. But how, in that case, can man ever be misled as to the real source and nature of his ceaseless cravings? The answer is that man has these needs, but knows not whence they arise; hears these voices, but knows not that they are of God. Like Samuel, he thinks that it is Eli who speaks; and so he hastens to his Eli, saying, Here am I, for thou calledst me. In Samuel's case the mistake was soon discovered, and easily rectified. In our case, it often takes a long time to learn the real truth. We are not disillusioned in a night; it may take a life time to find out our mistake. Some readers know well what this means; bitter exeperience has taught them.

Man has an instinctive longing for happiness, and believes that it can be attained. Now, if he acted wisely, he would begin by trying to understand his longing, and would ask himself how it could be satisfied, lest seeking along mistaken lines he should fail to reach the desired goal. But he seldom acts in so wise a way. He hears a voice that says, You were made to be happy, and happiness is within your reach; come to me, and you will find it. But as Samuel heard God's voice, and thought it was Eli's, so man hears this voice and thinks it is an earthly voice. Eagerly he looks around to discover whence it comes.

Near him he beholds a beckoning figure; it is that of Pleasure. It lures him on, bids him follow, promises that what he seeks he shall find. He sets off in the vain pursuit, and when he has exhausted the resources of pleasure, he learns that he has not attained happiness after all, that happiness and pleasure are not the same thing. There are few experiences more pathetic than that of those who have mistaken pleasure for the chief good, and have imagined that, in pleasing themselves, they would find happiness. All went well with them for a time, and then the things that produced pleasure yielded only weariness and pain. They had thought, like the Prodigal Son, that to find happiness they had only to throw off the restraints of home, and do as they pleased. And like him, they have discovered that the far country is not a land flowing with milk and honey, but a land stricken with famine.

What is the meaning of this too common experience? Is it that happiness lies beyond our reach, and that our lot here is one of inevitable misery? Some there are who would have us accept this dismal creed. But the real lesson is very different. It is that we have been seeking happiness by roads that never lead to it. The voice that calls up to happiness is no deceiving voice. But we knew not who was calling us. Like Samuel, we were called of God; and we thought it was Eli. So we followed Pleasure, saying, "Here am I, for thou calledst me," only to be told at last, "I called thee not."

Similarly we hear this call to happiness, and think it is outward good that summons. The secret of happiness, we say to ourselves, is Wealth. If only we get money enough, we shall be happy. There is some excuse for us, for wealth has an enormous power. Do we covet ease, luxury, honor, power, social status? Money can buy them all. Some people decry wealth, but it is foolish to do so. We need money as the lungs need air; and most of us would gladly have a little more of it. But if it is foolish to disparage wealth, it is equally foolish to overestimate its value and power. It has its place, but it has also its limits. There are many things it can buy; but there are many things it cannot buy. Too often we forget that. There is a deep saying of St. Paul, in which he speaks of "covetousness, which is idolatry." That is to say, the exaggerated love of money is worship misplaced. Money can do so much for us that we imagine it can do everything. So the quest after happiness betrays us into the worship of wealth. Through the unfulfilled wants of our nature God is calling us: and we go and kneel at the altar of Mammon, saying, "Here am I, for thou calledst me." Like Samuel, we mistake the heavenly voice for the voice of earth.

Thus in our own ways we repeat the mistake of Samuel. God calls us, and we respond; but we know not that the voice is God's. We need to learn the lesson which he was taught, that when the Lord comes and calls us again, we may say as Samuel did "Speak; for thy servant heareth." For the voice that calls us is the voice of God. The instinct that bids us seek happiness is no delusion. We can get happiness. But we cannot find it in even the best of earth's good things. The fruitful cause of all our unrest and unhappiness is that we have wandered from God. What ails us, if we but knew it, is homesickness. We remain unsatisfied because we are seeking in pleasure, in wealth, in earthly good, that which we can only find in God.

Reader, you have unsatisfied longings, unfulfilled yearnings. You have many blessings, many comforts. Yet one thing you lack. It is God that you need. The happiness that you are vainly seeking is at his right hand. It cannot be yours till you go to him for it, and find it in fellowship with him. That unappeased hunger of your heart is God's voice calling you. Hear and know his voice. Give him your love, live for him; and he will give you the desire of your heart. Happiness will be yours when you can say, I have found him whom my soul desireth. With God as your portion you will be rich indeed, will fear no ill, will live in hope, will die in peace. And when at length you stand before our Lord at the great Roll-Call, and you hear his gracious voice saying, "Come, ye blessed of my Father," your heart will be filled with a great joy as you answer, "Here am I, Lord; for thou calledst me." Amen.—Selected by Ian Kitchen.

THE REPORT OF THE SPIES
Numbers 13:1-3, 17 to 14:25

"If God be for us, who can be against us" (Rom 8:31).

Fifteen months had passed away since Israel came out of Egypt. The people have reached the edge of the wilderness and are looking out toward the distant hills of the promised land. They are encamped at Kadesh-barnea, a few days' journey from Beer-sheba, the southern outpost of Canaan. To Moses' eager mind there is required now only a strong and steadfast advance, under God's care and with his omnipotent right arm to fight for them, and Israel shall inherit the land of their fathers. But a spirit of trembling is brooding over the people. It may have been unknown to Moses and Aaron. It is a mind and mood of faint-hearted fear. It was doubtless supported by plausible reasons and prudential maxims. The daring course never seems the wisest to fearful minds. But it is not caution which moves these revolting hearts. It is cowardice, the cowardice of unbelief. As the writer to the Hebrews declares: "They could not enter in because of unbelief." The story falls into four movements—the sending of the spies, the giving of their report, the effect upon the people, and the issues in discipline and judgment.

The request for a search party came from the people (Deut. 1:22). But God, who is "sorry for our childishness," deals patiently and sanctions the sending out of this band of scouts. They are picked men, "every one a ruler," chosen to represent every tribe except that of Levi. But this was not an exploring or a reconnoitering expedition, such as might precede an invasion. They were spies, sent to search and see whether the fertility and beauty of the land were a legend, told by romancing Hebrew parents to their children, or a veritable fact, and whether their fears of the strong and warlike people who occupied the land were justified. At a glance we see that there are men who are not living under the power of the invisible, who are making an estimate of their worldly chances, who are resolved to walk by sight and not by faith. Few of us can cast a stone at them, for this mirrors the attitude and conduct of multitudes who forget Christ's counsels, and make themselves secure by worldly means, and forget or doubt the promises of God.

The report betrayed the inner mind of the people and set their unbelief in clear terms. With Caleb and Joshua in this company it could not fail to be accurate. As the twelve men, in the month of August, passed up through the land, along its high ridge, as far north as Rehob, under the shadow of the Lebanons, and as they came back by the Jordan valley, they say that it was a land flowing with milk and honey. But a report depends not only on the things which are seen or the words which are used, but on the emphasis and tone which it is given. They had the famous cluster of grapes cut beside the brook Eschol, and the figs and pomegranates, entrancing to the eyes of these desert wanderers. They told the story of its wealth and beauty. But the black word "Nevertheless" (verse 28) shadowed the picture. The resolute people, the walled cities, the huge stature of the men, and the occupation of the whole central core of the land by Amalekites, Hittites and Jebusites, while Amorite Highlanders held the heights, and Canaanite Lowlanders dwelt in the valleys, roused the listening people to a clamor of wailing which Caleb could scarcely still.

There was not a majority and a minority report. The whole twelve were in agreement. The difference lay in what should be done. "Let us go up at once and possess it," urged Caleb, the man, "who hath followed me fully" (Num. 14:24). "We be not able to go up," was the cry of the cowardly ten. The entire disagreement was founded upon this one fact, that Caleb and Joshua reckoned on God, while the ten left God entirely out of account. "We be not able" was an undoubted truth. The untrained men of the wilderness, who had never seen a battle, and had been broken in spirit by their long bondage in Egypt, were not able to assail the disciplined forces which were entrenched in the strongholds of the land. But men of faith, men who are sure of God, whose hearts are kindled by a passion for righteousness, men who have counted not their lives dear unto them, and, above all, men who know their God is working with them, so that iron gates will open, and massive walls fall down, and the stars in their courses fight against their foes, can subdue kingdoms and cast down the mighty from their seats. This is the alternative which faith always faces. When the early church set out to conquer the pagan world, when Luther faced the enormous power and the deadly craft of the papacy, when Cromwell gathered his valiant hearts around him, "We be not able" was the cry with which faint hearts met them. The answer is: "If God be for us, who can be against us?" That rings through the words of Joshua and Caleb.

The effect of this conflict in counsel was immediate. The mind and mood of the ten infected the two willing people with their own fears. We need not wonder. Egypt had sapped their virility. Faith had not yet been deeply rooted in their hearts. All night long they wailed. The morning brought them murmuring to Moses. But now they had resolved on mutiny, and a return to Egypt under another leader. Moses and Aaron fell on their faces in anguish. Joshua's courage rose, and in his brief, soldier-like speech he chastened them. The now half-maddened mob threatened to stone him and Caleb. But the pillar of cloud, in an added glory, caught their eyes. God had intervened. This was evident, that this people were not worthy of the high calling. God rejects them, for his people must be willing "in the day of his power."

The issues are twofold. The first is that Moses is bidden lead the people back to the wilderness to wander for eight and thirty years, until this generation has been buried in its sands. That is the punishment of their sin. The second is that in this wandering, with its discipline of simple living, chastening hardship and constant dependence on God, a new race shall be trained to know God, to trust him, and to dare all at his command.—W. M. Clow.

PRAYER

O Lord, help us to claim thee for our God. Thou art daily giving to us. May we, by faith and love, by desire and hope, take thee for ours, and yield ourselves more and more to thee. We thank thee that we can come to thee now, not repelled from thee by thy terror, nor even awed into distance by thy majesty, but knowing that in the midst of things there is a heart, and that the great heart of God is opened for all his children. We come to thee and beseech thee for the cleansing of our hands and the fulfillment of that great promise that, however red and deep-dyed our sins may be, thou wilt make us white as snow. We pray thee that it may be so with us Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:16, 17) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:42-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

IN PRAISE OF KIND WORDS

How many days might lose their gloom,
How many nights their sorrow,
If we should wait to criticise;
Until a kind tomorrow!
A night of changes hate to love;
A taunt, if left unspoken,
May change to sympathy and cheer,
And keep a heart unbroken.

How many tears we might have saved,
How many hours of sadness,
If men would utter only good
And speak but cheer and gladness!
A word can break a lonely heart,
Or save a life that's broken;
Then let all evil words be stilled,
And only good be spoken.

PRAYER.

Our Father, unveil to us, we beseech thee, all the points in life, in conduct, in disposition, which are contrary to thy will; and do thou help us, with earnest purpose and perseverance that does not flag, to set ourselves to make perfect our holiness in the fear of the Lord, and, animated by the promise of the Lord, we beseech thee for purity of heart and mind. We pray that our wanderings of will may be drawn together and fixed upon thyself and thy law, which is good and acceptable and perfect. We beseech thee that we may never permit ourselves in anything of which we are not sure that thou permittest it, and may never condemn ourselves in the things which we allow ourselves. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"WHAT SAITH THE SCRIPTURE?"

What the Church of God Believes in the Plain Words of the Spirit

Man is wholly mortal (Job 4:17; 1 Cor. 15:53; Job 14-20; 2nd Peter 2:12; Eccl. 3:18-22; 1 Cor. 15: 47, 48; Job 25:6).

The dead are unconscious till the resurrection (Eccl. 9; Ps. 146:4; Isa. 63:13; Jer. 15:1; Job 14; Job 17:13; Job 19:23; Ps. 6:5; Ps. 17:15; John 11; 1 Cor. 15:17, 18, 32, 58; 1 Thess. 4:13-18; Ps. 88:10-13; Matt. 2:17, 18; Jer. 31:15, 16; Job 7:21).

The dead are not in places of reward or punishment (John 3:13; John 13:33; John 20:17; Acts 2: 34; 1 Tim. 6:16; Jer. 15; 1; Isa. 63:16; Heb. 11:13, 39, 40; Gen. 3:19).

The judgment, reward and separation of righteous and wicked are not at death, but at Christ's second coming, and will be on the earth (Matt. 16: 27; Matt. 25:31-46; Rev. 22:12; Luke 14:14; Jas. 1:16, 17; Col. 3:4; 1 Pe. 5:4; Pro. 11:31; 2 Tim. 4:1; Matt. 13:18-44; Rev. 11:15-19; Matt. 19:28).

Resurrection is an awakening to consciousness and life of those who are asleep in the dust (1 Cor. 15; 1 Thess. 4:13-18; Rev. 20:4-15; Dan. 12:2; Ez. 37; Isa. 26:19-21; John 5:25-30; John 11; Acts 24: 15).

Immortality is not now possessed by any one of the human race but the Lord (1 Tim. 1:17; 2 Tim. 2:10; Rom. 2:7; 1 Cor. 15:53-55; 1 Tim. 6:16).

Eternal life is promised to the righteous only, and is conditional (Gen. 3:22; John 3:16; 1:11; 6: 49, 51, 53, 58; John 10:27, 28; 11:25; Rom. 6:23; 1 John 5:11, 12; 1 John 5, 10-13; 2 Tim. 2:1; Titus 1: 2, 1 Tim. 2:5; John 5:40; 11:6; 20:31; Mk. 10:30; Luke 20:35; John 6:68; Rev. 1:18; Col. 3:1-5; Rev. 2:7, 11; 3:5; 20:6).

The destiny of the wicked is destruction. We give a few samples of the many texts which teach the complete obliteration of the being and existence of the wicked.

a. (1) texts teach that the wicked will not see eternal life. Examples: Gen. 2:17, Deut. 30:18; Ez. 18:4; Rev. 21:8; 1 John 5:10-13; Jas. 1:15; 5:19, 20; Ezek. 18:32, 33; 2 Cor. 2:16; Rom. 6:21).

b. The wicked will perish. 31 texts. Examples: Ps. 92:15; Luke 13:3-5; Ps. 2:12).

c. Be destroyed. 42 texts. Examples: Ps. 145:20; Job 21:30-32; Acts 2:23; Phil. 3:19; 2 Thess. 1:19; 2 Thess. 1:9; Prov. 10:29; 21:15).

d. Be consumed. 6 texts. Ps. 37:20; Mal. 4: 1; 2 Thess. 2:8.

Be devoured. 2 texts. Heb. 10:27; Rev. 20:9).

e. Slay or killed. 8 texts. Examples: Isa. 11: 4; Luke 19:27; Rev. 2:23; 19:21).

g. End. 5 texts. Heb. 6:8; Ps. 37:38; Rom. 6:21; Ps. 11:12. 1 Peter 4:17).

h. Not be. 5 texts. Examples: Ps. 37:10; Obad. 16).

i. Cut off. 6 texts. Examples: Ps. 37:9; Pro. 2:22; Job 8:14).

k. Wicked are always compared to the most combustible material: chaff, tares, stubble, beasts, etc. Matt. 3:12; 13:30; Mal. 4:1; 2 Peter 2:12; Jude 10, Ps. 49:14-20).

Everlasting fire, tormented forever and ever, the worm that dieth not, and eternal punishment, expressions which occur in about fifteen places, must be interpreted by the similar figures and expressions of the O. T. prophets. The fire that consumed Sodom is called "eternal fire" because it was eternal in its effects upon that city, blotting it from existence, as an example of the fate of the wicked (Jude 7).

The fire kindled by John Hyracanus, 109 B. C. in Idumea, was not to be quenched day nor night, and the smoke was to go up for ever and ever (Isa. 34:9).

Jonah's "forever" in the belly of "hell" lasted three days and nights (Jonah 2:2-7; Matt. 12:40).

Forever in Ex. 21:6 was a lifetime. The righteous are to dwell with devouring fire and everlasting burnings, unhurt, during the coming fiery judgment day (Isa. 33:14-17).

The priesthood of Aaron and circumcision, were both called everlasting, although both are now done away in Christ (Gen. 17:13; Ex. 40:15). Hence the meaning of these words must be decided by the connection, and the nature of the subject to which they apply, as they do not always mean endless, as all dictionaries agree.

Hell, from shoel in the Hebrew, and from hades in the Greek, means simply the grave or death state (Ps. 16:10; Acts 2:31; Matt. 16:18; Ezek. 32:27). See marginal reading of "hell" or "grave" in Ps. 49:15; Rev. 20:13, 14; 1 Cor. 15:55. Both the righteous and wicked go to shoel and hades—hell or the grave, at death.

The King James' translation of the Bible renders shoel 31 times "hell," and 31 times "grave," and 3 times "pit." They translate hades 10 times "hell" and once "grave" the latter text is 1 Cor. 15:55. See the following texts where the good are said to go to sheol—hell or the grave—and know nothing while there: Gen. 42:38; Job. 14:13; Job. 17:13; Ps. 31:17; Eccl. 9:10; Isa. 38:18; Hosea 13:14.

Gehenna occurs 12 times in the New Testament, and is always rendered hell. It is the valley south of Jerusalem, where fires were kept burning to consume the waste of the city, and the place of capital punishment of criminals. Here the worm preyed upon the carcass of the dead and the fire was not quenched (Isa. 66:24). Jesus spoke of it as the place of destruction of the wicked in the future judgment: it is the place of the lake of fire, which is called the second death (Rev. 21:8).

These hells are all on earth sheol, hades and gehenna. Spirits are never threatened with hell, but only bodies dead or alive.

We give below all the texts on gehenna, and the reader will see that it is generally dead bodies that are to be cast into it, and not immortal souls (Matt. 5:22, 29, 30; 10:28; 18:9; 23:15, 33; Mk. 9:43, 45, 47; Luke 12:5; James 3:6).

Soul in the Bible applies to man and beast alike (Gen. 1:30, margin; Gen. 2:7; Lev. 22:11; Num. 31:28; Job. 12:10; Prov. 12:10—nephesh of beast; Rev. 16:3).

Souls are born (Gen. 46:18, 22, 25; Ex. 1:5).

Souls have blood and can die (Jer. 2:34; Job 7. 15; Joshua 11:11; Ezek. 18:4; Ez. 13:19; Isa. 53:10, 12; Ps. 29:30; James 5:20; Job 11:20, margin).

Souls go to hell or the grave Acts 2:31; Ps. 49:15, margin; Isa. 53:8, 10, 12; Job 33:22, 28, 30; Rev. 20:13, margin; 1 Cor. 15:55, margin; Matt. 16:18; Isa. 38:17; Ps. 26:9; 78:50; Isa. 14:9, margin; Jonah 2:2, 6, margin).

We must believe in the doctrine of the Bible in order to be saved (1 Tim. 4:16; 2 Tim. 1:4, 5; Matt. 15:14; 2nd John 9-12; John 15:6, 7; 14:17, 18; Mk. 16:15, 16; 2 Thess. 2:10-13; Rev. 21:18; Heb. 3:12; 19).

The gospel of Christ embraces (1) his life; (2) death; (3), burial; (4), resurrection; (5), ascension; (6), his coming kingdom, and must be believed in order to salvation (Rom. 1:16; Gal. 1:8, 9; 2 Cor. 4:4-5; 1 Cor. 15:1-7; Eph. 1:13; Matt. 24:14; 13:33; 2 Thess. 1:7, 11).

Repentance is necessary to salvation Luke 24:47; Acts 11:18; 20:21; Luke 13:3, 5; Rev. 2:5; 2 Peter 3:9; Ezek. 18:20-33; Luke 15:7).

Cause of repentance (Rom. 2:4; 2 Cor. 7:10; Jas. 1:18; 1 Cor. 4:15; 1 Peter 1:22-25; Ps. cxix:9; John 15:3; Acts 15:8; John 3:-6; Matt. 13:23).

The true sacrifice (Heb. 10:4; 1 Sam. 15:22; Matt. 9:13; Rom. 12:1; Heb. 12:6; Ps. 57:22; 1 Peter 2:5; Ps. 51:17; Gal. 5:19-20).

Baptism is essential to remission of sins, to adoption into Christ, to heirship of the promise made to Abraham and to salvation and entrance into the kingdom of God which is set up when Jesus comes (Acts 2:38; 22:16; Rom. 6; Col. 2; Jno. 10:1, 9; Gal. 3:27; Mk. 16:15, 16; 2 Thess. 1:6-9; Rom. 2:10; Matt. 25:31-35; Rev. 4:9, 10; 2:26; 3:21).

Conversion is essential (Matt. 18:3; James 5:20).

After baptism we must follow Jesus and not be conformed to the world, striving to become new creatures in character and disposition, and to become molded into his likeness, in purity, meekness and holiness and love (2 Cor. 5:17; 7:1; Gal. 5:24; 6:14-17; 1 Peter 2:1-13; 2nd Peter 1:4-10; Col. 3:1-6; Eph. 4:20-32; 5:1-6; Heb. 12:4; Ro. 8:1-18; 1 Cor. 8:1-11).

Reader, if you do these things you shall never fail, for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ (2 Peter 1:11, 12).

"THE COMING TIME OF TROUBLE" No. 2

GEO. B. MALDRIDGE

God will not give his honor to another. All that God created has been brought into existence as the result of the reign of sin, the great adversary of the human race. He will destroy that utterly.

Noah was inspired and instructed to build an ark of gopher wood, exactly in the proportions that God instructed him so to do. Had he done otherwise it would not have carried him and its occupants safely over the period of the flood into the new order or world immediately following. Dear brethren, it was the knowledge of the coming flood which spurned Noah on his labors. He believed God and understood that part of his plan pertaining to his day.

It is absolutely essential that we possess in our day a clear knowledge of God's plan, and labor faithfully along the lines therein suggested. Christ is the only Ark that will be able to bear us safely over the tempestuous sea of trouble that will soon burst forth (2 Pet. 3:5-8). Noah delivered his message of a coming flood to his friends and neighbors, warning them to take heed, pointing them to his ark, but his message fell on unheeding ears. We too have a message to proclaim, but only a few—just a few, a little flock—heed or give attention; nevertheless we, like Noah, will continue to be faithful to our trust, even though, like him, we meet only ridicule and contempt.

Beloved, let us see that our ark is constructed upon Biblical lines. First, its keel must be laid firmly upon the word of God, as the whole structure rests upon it. Secondly, its ribs stand for baptism, upon which the rest of the craft hangs. Our ship now has shape. The next thing is its cross-beams, which is consecration. This lends symmetry and order to the whole arrangement. We can now lay our planks or deck upon which to walk, and that is faith, for we walk by faith and not by sight as yet. We will now nail our planking to its sides, which to me is my hope, for it keeps out all that is not of Christ and shuts us in. Lastly, we must cover it all over with pitch, which is love, the bond of completeness. Oh, beloved, pitch can only be applied when it is hot, so we understand what this means by having fervent love among ourselves.

The world in a measure, sees the signs of the coming storm. They too are building an ark, but its keel is made of evolution, its ribs out of poor wood (higher criticism), the beams that are trying to hold these together are composed of that strange belief, Christian Science. The deck that supports its passengers is no more nor less than spiritism, while the planking around its sides trying to hold in this motley crew is self-culture, or salvation by works. The pitch, not having the proper ingredients of love in this ark, is Socialism, which will never keep the vessel from leaking when the storm breaks forth in all its fury.

We wonder sometimes how God can bring all this about, but during the past week God has been speaking and intimating one of the methods he may use. In Job 38:22 we read: "Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow, or hast thou seen the treasures of the hail, which I have reserved against the time of trouble, against the day of battle and war?"

In an editorial in the Plain Dealer the writer states these facts, which shows clearly that the "man on the street" has his eyes open: "Any natural disaster—blizzard, flood, earthquake, hurricane—is likely to reduce man to elemental conditions. A multitude of conveniences which have been exalted almost to a place of necessities are put out of commission almost in an instant. In thousands of rural communities on Monday and Tuesday conditions much like those of a century ago were restored, and lucky were those families capable of adjusting themselves to the necessities of their involuntary pioneership. Railroads ran no trains, suburban trolleys were at a standstill, telephones were down, telegraph lines could render no service, there was no delivery of mail, roads were impassable, fences were obliterated, barns stood across deserts of waist-deep snow. Even near neighbors often had no means of communication. Cities suffer more than the country on occasions like these, because they have come to depend more upon the conveniences which man has devised for himself. Cities live more nearly a hand to-mouth existence. They depend more upon delivery systems and telephones, they buy fuel, as they buy food, in small quantities. The average country home is more likely than the city house to be equipped for a siege. The idea of a food shortage has no terrors for a thrifty farmer's wife, nor does a broken wire somewhere in the wilderness affect the burning of her parlor lamp. A severe storm like this causes much suffering and loss of life. The property it destroys and the waste it occasions count heavily in the balance. At the same time it may teach a useful lesson or two. It shows people that a good many conveniences they had thought necessary were not necessary at all. If cars do not run one can walk, and perhaps be the better for it. If merchants can not deliver purchasers can go after the goods, be the better for the exertion, and perhaps save money. If electricity is not available oil lamps give good light and candles will do in an emergency. The procession of man-carried market baskets which wended its way down town into the residence districts yesterday afternoon and last evening was an object lesson in household economies. If baskets can be carried with no loss of dignity in an emergency they might be in ordinary times. Could this storm teach people the economy of personal marketing and delivering of food it would accomplish one good purpose."

There is another remarkable scripture bearing upon this question. It is found in Isaiah 47:13, 14: "Thou art wearied in the multitude of thy counsels. Let now the astrologers, the star-gazers, the monthly prognosticators, stand up and save thee from these things that shall come upon thee. Behold, they shall be as stubble; the fire shall burn them; they shall not deliver themselves from the power of the flame; there shall not be a coal to warm at nor fire to set before it. Thus shall they be unto thee with whom thou hast labored, even thy merchants from thy youth; they shall wander every one to his quarter, and none shall save them."

Apparently to confirm this prophecy this item of news recently went the rounds of the press: "The miners of Europe are making history more rapidly than all the crowned and cracked heads on the combined thrones. Already those workers in several countries have declared against war, and this coming autumn a great international convention will be held in London to perfect plans. Delegates will be present from Great Britain, Germany, France, Austria, Belgium, Holland and several other countries. The miners have become convinced that they hold a vital and strategic position in the world's labor movement for peace. The radicals are advocating a plan that when the ruling class in any nation declares war a general strike should be called by the miners. This would have the effect of paralyzing the railways, preventing the transportation of troops and crippling the navies of the world."

Thus we see, beloved brethren, that God is rapidly gathering together the various elements that will soon break forth. Soon mankind will wake up to the fact that a flood is imminent and then they will call upon the rocks and seek the caves, the secret societies, unions and governments of men, to hide, cover and protect them from the face and wrath of God's Anointed One. But it will not avail as the fierce fire of trouble will search out and burn up, laying bare everything which is contrary to God's will, law and power.

Then, immediately following this, the glorious Ark, represented by Christ and his saints, will rest upon Mount Olivet. The dove of peace will go forth, bearing the olive leaf in her mouth, proclaiming glory to God in the highest and good will towards men. The floods will be dried up, the desert places will burst forth and blossom as the rose; the trees will bear fruit that shall be food for the healing of the nations then existing which remain after the rebels have been selected and destroyed.

"Even so, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly," is my prayer. Amen.

THE HOLY SPIRIT
No. 4
L. T. NICHOLS
He Spake as a Child

Paul will give us further light on this subject in this wonderful 13th chapter. After telling us in the 8th verse that prophecy, power to speak in unknown tongues, and knowledge imparted by divine revelation should cease, he continues: "For we know in part, and we prophesy in part; but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away."

It was a partitive arrangement, the prophets proclaimed truths unto us, Jesus imparted knowledge all divine, and Jesus sent his chosen ones to speak unto us words of life. Peter spoke to us, and Paul further elaborated the wonderful truths; James and Jude added to the store and John completed all in his wonderful Revelation. Then the perfect had come, for we are told in Psalm 19:7: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple."

When John completed Revelation and added his final "Amen" the perfect revealed will of God had come—the partitive arrangement ceased, and with it the gifts; for, there being no further revelations, there was no need of the signs to follow, to confirm the truths proclaimed. Paul clearly shows that to speak by divine revelation, to have the knowledge imparted without any effort on his part, was not so great a work as to gain it by diligent study. "When I was a child I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man I put away childish things."

When knowledge came to divine relevation it required no ability or effort to receive it. Take Moses, for example, Ex. 4:10, 12: "O, my Lord, I am not eloquent; neither hitherto, nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant; but I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue." And the Lord said unto him * * * now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say."

Again, in the case of Jeremiah, the Lord told him that he had ordained him a prophet unto the nations, but Jeremiah said: "Ah, Lord God! Behold, I can not speak, for I am a child." Then the Lord put forth his hand and touched my mouth, and the Lord said unto me, Behold, I have put my word in thy mouth."

This was how knowledge came by Divine revelation. Jesus said to the apostles, when he sent them out: "But when they deliver you up, take no thought, how or what ye shall speak for it shall be given you in the same hour what we shall speak."

Paul could truly say that he was a child when speaking the words that were put into his mouth. It only took the ability of a child to proclaim the truth when it came as knowledge comes to a child. Look at the little four-year-old girl: she can sing her A B C's, and repeat verse after verse of the Bible: she can name the days of the week and month, and count, and spell, and sing; but she has never studied one thing herself; she has learned to repeat it by hearing it constantly repeated. Paul said that he "thought as a child." A child only thinks the thoughts that are put into his head. He "understood as a child." A child only understands that which is brought out and made plain to it. Since knowledge by divine revelation has ceased, the man or woman who wishes to understand the blessed word, has to study what was revealed to those holy men of old by the spirit. They have to obey the command given in 2nd Tim. 2:15: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." They have to study—not the creeds of uninspired men like themselves, but have to study what the prophets, and Jesus, and Paul, and Peter, and John were inspired to say.

When knowledge came by divine revelation, there was a greater manifestation of God's power, more glory to him, but to the man or woman who gains this knowledge by self denying toil, by mid-taught study, there is more virtue, than to the one who had it divinely imparted.

The Former and Latter Rain

As was stated before, the former and latter rain of Joel 2 makes this subject very clear. "Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord, your God: for he hath given you the former rain moderately and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain as at the first."

It must be evident to all, there could not be a former rain and a latter rain, without there elapsing a time in which there would be no rain. There is great beauty in the orignal of "the former rain"—the Hebrew word for rain is "moreh" -Young gives it "the sprinkling rain," and it has for some of its definitions: "One teaching; a teacher." As an example of how it used, the Lexicon gives: "Behold, God is great, and we know him not, who is a teacher like unto him?"

God was the teacher in giving the former rain: he told them what to say, and in every instance he confirmed it by signs following. For rain, it reads in the margin of your Bible, "A teacher of righteousness." The prophet continues and says that he will not only give the former rain, or teacher of righteousness, but he will also give "the latter rain." This comes from another word, "malqosh." Young gives it the "gathered rain." It is "the rain before the harvest." It is not the rain that only came moderately, or on a few -but it is the gathered rain -the rain that will commence just before the harvest. It won't come moderately, but it will come a copious shower. Joel thus describes the latter rain: "And it shall come to pass, afterwards, that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh, and your sons, and your daughters shall prophesy, and your old men shall dream dreams, and your young men shall see visions."

There was to be an outpouring of the spirit upon all flesh, but that promise was not fulfilled in the former rain, which only came "moderately," upon a few. Now, keeping in mind that Joel promised two rains, not one, we will go to Acts 2, where one promise was fulfilled. Jesus had promised to send the Holy Spirit upon them, and in fulfillment of that promise we read: "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place, and suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a mighty rushing wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting.... And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak with other tongues as the spirit gave them utterance." When this wonderful occurrence was made known, the multitude came together and were confounded because every man heard them speak, in his own language, the wonderful works of God; and they cried one to another: What meaneth this?" Then: "Peter standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice and said unto them: Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words. This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel."

Dear reader, pay particular attention to the reading here. this is one place where men and women have made a great mistake. They have read the words of Peter over, as though Joel had only foretold one rain; but no man or woman can intelligently understand this point unless they keep in mind that Joel promised both the former and the latter rain. So in verse 16 Peter referred to the former rain which was being fulfilled then, and in the next verse he said: "And it shall come to pass in the last days saith God, I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams."

Peter wanted them to know that one promise of Joel was being fulfilled, so he said: "This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel."

But he did not want them to understand from that, that the promise of the spirit to be poured out upon all flesh was fulfilled, so he added: "And it shall come to pass in the last days," etc. Not at that time, but a future event, to be fulfilled in the last days, at the coming of Jesus, just before the harvest, when the latter rain shall be poured out.

Study the words of Peter in Acts 2 -with what Joel foretold, and it becomes perfectly plain that Peter testified to the fulfillment of the promise of the former rain, and also that the latter rain will be poured out in the last days.

They Shall Do Greater Works Than Jesus Did

How many have said to me: "Mr. Nichols, you claim that the power to work miracles ceased at the close of the Jewish age; yet Jesus promised that all his faithful followers should do greater works than he did." Jesus certainly did make the gracious promise, and we believe it as firmly as any one can.

My dear brother and sister, do you not perceive that by claiming that it is fulfilled now, you put the sword into the hand of the infidel to cut off your own head! Where is the man or woman living who can even do the works that Jesus did? Where are they! and echo answers--"Where?" Where is the man who can drink any deadly thing and feel no of the blind, and raise the dead? Bring forward harm? Where is the man who can restore the sigh one man who can even do what Jesus did—before you talk about doing "greater works." Jesus never promised that his followers would do greater works than he did, between the former and latter rain; during the time that Paul testified that all the gifts shall cease, and only faith, hope and charity remain. The promise of Jesus is plainly qualified in John 14. In the third verse, Jesus spoke words fo comfort to his apostles: "If I go and prepare a place fo ryou, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."

The blessed words of comfort were that he would "come again:" and in the 12th verse he continues: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also and greater works than these shall he do." 18th verse: "I will not leave you comfortless I will come to you." 20th verse: "At that day," etc.

"At that day," the day of his coming, that is the time that they will do greater works than ever Jesus performed. There will be a greater manifestation of power in connection with Christ's second coming, than there was in connection with his first coming. He wisely gave us this wonderful evidence to put us on our guard. A Stroud could not deceive us by causing a lame man to walk; a Dowie cannot deceive us with a houseful of crutches, for we must have "greater works" than Jesus ever did, when the latter rain commences.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brother:

It has been many months since I have written a letter to The Restitution. I wish the brethren and sisters would speak oftener to each other through its columns. We need the encouragment of each other continually in this trying age when the satans come so clothed in garments of light that we hardly know them, that we may resist their blandishments.

May God bless you, dear brother, for your labor of love in giving us "meat in due season," laboring without money and without price. Surely all the faithful are holding up your hands that the truth may prevail. Be not weary in well doing. Our Lord will come and will not tarry and then every man's work shall be made manifest. I often marvel at the Lord's words when speaking to Ananias of Paul: "I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake." Not glory and honor in this world is promised to those whom the Lord calls to be over his brethren as pastor and examples of the flocks. Paul suffered all that a disciple of Christ could suffer -hunger, thirst, stripes, imprisonment, weariness, heat, cold and last death, and hardest of all, in peril among false brethren. Jesus says that as he was in the world his brethren would be. All who are in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. Let every brother and sister rejoice if it is their lot to so suffer for our blessed Lord says who suffers with him shall reign with him. Our brother Paul called them "light afflictions," and truly they were compared "with the exceeding great and eternal weight of glory." May the Lord help us all to be faithful to him.

Your sister in the Anointed One,
MRS. FLORA A. WOOD.

THE FATHER LOVETH YOU
No. 1

Be still, my soul, Jehovah loves thee!
Fret not, nor murmur at thy weary lot;
Though dark and lone thy journey seems to be,
Be sure that thou art ne'er by him forgot;
He ever loves; then trust him, trust him still;
Let all thy care be this--the doing of his will.

Thy hands in his, like fondest, happiest child,
Place thou, nor draw it for a moment thence;
Walk thou with him, a Father, reconciled,
Till in his own good time he calls thee hence.
Walk with him now; so shall thy way be bright,
And all thy soul be filled with his most glorious light.

EDITORIAL

Sister Carrie Free writes that she expects to visit in New Mexico this winter.

Owing to the fire, reported last week, several of our editorials this week are tardy. Excuse the unavoidable delay.

We regret the death of Sister Abbie Baker, of Brooklyn, Ohio, formerly of Dover, Del. She was in advanced age, and died in the faith of the promise made to the fathers.

We were gladly surprised this week to receive a box of apples from Bro. N. D. Titchenal, of Washington. The apples are large in size, lustrous in appearance and palatable to the taste. Brother Titchenal could not have sent us anything that we would have appreciated more. Sister Huggins and "Baby Huggins" join us in sending our brother hearty thanks for his kindness in remembering us with these "gift apples," as he marked them on the box.

MINISTERIAL "SHOTS OF DULNESS"

The following letter we were moved to send to a paper here in the city, but as was expected, it was not published:

Editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer:

Although a minister myself, I feel obliged to confess that real scriptural sermons are becoming almost obsolete in Cleveland. To show that this charge is founded on fact and not theory, allow me to select some subjects our ministers advertised in the church department of the Plain Dealer November 29, and which were expounded in different denominational pulpits yesterday. I select the subjects at random, so they are representative: "A Man's Choice—the Mastery of a Mountain," "The Lad with a Lunch Basket—the Conservation of the American Boy," Longfellow's "Gaspar Becerra," "Modern Amusements" (illustrated), "The Imagination" (mental series), "The Story of Confucius," "The Seven Roomed House of Life," "Mohammedanism," "St. Andrew, Patron Saint of Scotland," "Some Good Reasons Why Otto Leisy Should Give a Playground to Cleveland," "Why I Am a Reformed Episcopalian," and then to finish the themes in absurdity and contradiction, a Universalist preached on "The Responsibility of the American Church in Christianizing Japan." How universalism admits of "responsibility" in the premise, would be a subject worth hearing, but about this the preacher said nothing, as such a subject would necessitate scriptural elucidation.

The subjects discoursed upon in our city last Sunday would interest politicians, the general reader who keeps posted on current events, moralists, novel readers, theater frequenters, Mohammedans, pagans, etc., etc., but they were dull as a beetle droning on a summer's night to the poor soul hungry for the pabulum of God's Holy Book. Sinners had a feast of fat things; saints only a dry bone. The sermons would be to them a "shot of dullness," like Alexander Pope is said to have received when, in one of his better moods, he betook himself to church in the Strand, hoping to hear some God-given truth there which would sweeten his cynical life. But the minister, as fate would have it, discoursed from "firstly" to "twelfthly" on so many impertinent profundities that the poet fumed with fidgets and impatience; and, to make the occasion bearable, he wrote on the fly-leaf of a prayer book this stanza, which is not found in his published workers:

> ...."I whispered, 'Gracious God,
> What have I done to merit such a rod;
> That all this shot of dulness now should be,
> From this, thy blunderbuss, discharged on me?'"

Any "blunderbuss," any blind fiddler, can talk on politics, lunch baskets, amusements, Confucius, St. Andrew, playgrounds in Cleveland, etc., but it takes a man to preach the word of God. Let ministers who are fast degenerating into "blunderbusses," and who from Sunday to Sunday are letting go from their homilitic bow "shots of dulness," degrading the pulpit to the level of the stage, feeding theater attendants and leaving Christians to starve—let them preach the word of God (2 Tim. 4:1, 2) faithfully (Jer. 2:28), and to the people of God they will be as fresh as the morning dew and renewing as the gentle showers of rain in the summer's afternoon. Abandon all sidetracks, eliminate every thing extraneous to sound Bible teaching—Back, back to the word of God!

RESTITUTION NEEDS

The holidays are just before us. Thousands of dollars will be spent during these joyous days for trifles light as air. Children will be treated to all kinds of toys, which they will tire of and cast aside in a few days; hard earned money will be poured out by fond parents with a prodigality that knows no bounds, for things of time and sense; all in the name of Santa Claus. After we have entered the new year, many can look back to a "good time" they had in serving themselves and their friends; but how few can take a retrospective view and say that they have served God and his truth? The Lord help us to think now soberly and righteously on this matter.

A standard organ of the Methodist church in this country recently published a deficit of one hundred thousand dollars. This body is perhaps as large numerically and as strong financially, as any religious organization in the United States. If, then, they run their paper at a loss, it will not surprise our readers to be told that The Restitution has hard work to keep "even." Last year we had a small deficit, and with a constituency few in number and weak in purse, we cannot hope to do more than get through the year on the square. The editor, manager and treasurer do their work gratis; many evenings they come home from a hard day's work, weary already with labor, and work till a late hour on The Restitution. If they willingly give their time and labor that you may have the weekly visits of The Restitution, it is surely not asking too much of its readers to support the paper and support it well. Do not half-heartedly send in your subscription; do not support the truth with a parsimony that the world would be ashamed of in furthering its schemes and enterprises; but let us please God and give our good manager the surprise of his life by flooding him with renewals, new subscriptions, donations, "Christmas gifts" to God-gifts to our friends and relatives that mean fifty-two sermons will be preached in their home during the year. Let us all "honor the Lord with our substance" (Prov. 3:9). "A son honoreth his father, and a servant his master: if I then be a father, where is mine honor? and if I be a master, where is my fear, saith the Lord of hosts unto YOU?" (Mal. 1:6).

1. The Eighth Angel Standing at the Altar" 1. The church in prayer (vs. 3; 5:8; 1:20). 2. He offers "the prayers of all saints" during the half hour of "silence." He prays for the avengement of his wrongs (vs. 5; Lk. 12:49, 5; 18:7).

2. The Apocalyptic Temple. 1. Two kinds of temples: (a) Temple of God (1 Cor. 4:15; 12:13; 3:16, 17; Eph. 2:20; 1 Pet. 2:5; 2 Cor. 6:16). (b) Temple of the man of sin—an imitation of God's (Matt. 21:13; Dan. 11:37, 38, mar.; Rev. 13:16, 17; 18:9-13, mar.; 2 Thess. 2:3-10). 2. God's temple, the church, manifested in two states: (a) "Tabernacle of the Testimony" only visible—saints in the state of mortality giving "testimony" against the Outer Court (Eph. 1:13, mar.; 1 Cor. 9:13; 10:18; Heb. 13:10; Rev. 11:1; Eph. 1:20; Rom. 5:2; 1 Pet. 2:5, 9; Rev. 8:3, 4; 12:17; 19:10; 1:2, 9; 6:9; 12:11; Eph. 2:6; 1 Jno. 1:2, 3). (b) "Tabernacle of the testimony opened," the most holy made visible saints in the immortal state (Rev. 15:5; 21:17, 22; 11:1, 2, 15, 19; Jno. 4:23, 24; Rom. 8:19; 1 Jno. 3:2; Rev. 3:12; 15:8; 21:24; Eph. 4:6; 1 Cor. 15:28).

3. God Answers the Prayers of His Saints. 1. The seven angels stand inactive before God during the time of prayer (Rev. 8:2, 6, 7; 1:3; Ps. 103:20, 21). 2. Fire of the altar was then "cast upon the earth" (vss. 5, 7), and there followed: (a) "Voices," local discontent (death of Constantine, May 22, 337; Rev. 12:5; Lk. 18:7; Julian and his half-brother Gallus, six and twelve years of age respectively, saved from the fury of the soldiers; Isa. 14:20). (b) "Thunderings," international wars (Constantius; Persian wars, swarms of Franks). (c) "Lightnings," civil discord and revolution (Magnentius). (d) "And an earthquake," paganism re-established under Julian "the apostate." 1. He apostatized from Christianity and embraced the mythology of paganism. 2. He wrote against Christianity. 3. He tried to nullify prophecy by rebuilding the temple at Jerusalem. 4. He prohibited Christians from teaching school. 5. He required the Christians to restore the pagan temples which had been destroyed during the reign of Constantine (Gib. 2: chapter 23).

A NECKLACE

A necklace or chain consists of a series of links held in place by a clasp; and the more valuable the chain and pendant the stronger the clasp must be. The diamond attached to the centre of the chain is something to be displayed and protected. Hence, the function of the corresponding links and the real purpose for which the links have been made.

Monday: "My voice shalt thou hear in the morning, O Lord, in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up." "The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord; but the prayer of the upright is his delight." "Confess your faults one to another and pray one for another that ye may be healed. The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

Tuesday: Prayer gives faith and confidence and leads to works and upright living. "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith and have not works?" Can faith save him? The scripture was fulfilled which saith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness, and he was called the friend of God. Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not faith only. "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." "Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverance and godly fear."

Wednesday: In character building and the working out of salvation these words must be heeded: "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith; quit you like men, be strong. As a protection against wicked darts, take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

The diamond pendant: If the following condition did not exist then the Christian effort would not be necessary. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Thursday: The reward of labor: "And he that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron, as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers, even as I received of my Father." "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day and not to me only but unto all them also that love his appearing."

Friday: Future blessings: "Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord; that walketh in his ways. For thou shalt eat the labor of thine hands; happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee.... The-Lord shall bless thee out of Zion; and thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem all the days of thy life. Yea, thou shalt see thy children's children, and peace upon Israel."

Saturday: "Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercy, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering. For bearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye. And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness."

Sunday: The golden clasp: Surely it is the love of God and the full appreciation of Christ's sacrifice and love that draws us into a bond of sympathy; and makes us desirous of remembering him. "Let us consider one another, to provoke unto love, and to good works; not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come."

Dear readers, a chain is as strong as the weakest link; so let us perfect our links and our days, working acceptably until the glorious appearing of our beloved Master. FRANCES H. RUSSELL.

HISTORY OF THE NEBRASKA CONFERENCE
No. 2

The tenth annual conference was held at St. Paul, September 6 to 16, 1895. The following officers were elected: M. D. Newell, president; W. L. Crowe, vice president; Rena Gordon, secretary; John Mehrens, treasurer; Almus Adams, evangelist; J. T. Prime, assistant evangelist. Number of discourses, 175; number baptized, 31.

The eleventh annual conference was held at St. Paul September 11 to 21, 1896. Officers elected: M. D. Newell, president; Wm. Stevens, vice president; John Mehrens, treasurer; Rena Gordon, secretary; Almus Adams, evangelist. The speakers at this meeting were: J. G. Haup, of Dakota City; J. L. Herriman, of Ainsworth; T. J. Bartlett, of St. Paul; Almus Adams, of Araphoe; G. M. Myers, of Belle Plaine, Iowa; J. R. Oglevie, of North Branch, Kansas. It was moved and carried that Brother Oglevie be admitted to this conference, and that this conference grant him license to preach. The conference accepted Brother J. G. Haupt's most kind offer to work without pay.

The twelfth annual conference was held at Cambridge, September 25 to October 4, 1897. M. D. Newell was elected president, Wm. Stevens, vice president, Rena Gordon secretary, John Mehrens treasurer. Brother Adams was again chosen evangelist. Encouraging letters were read from Brothers Myers, Glenn, Mehrens, Crowe, Herriman, Haupt and Sister Anna Lippincott. Brother Adams worked this year for $365, making the offer himself.

The thirteenth annual conference was held at Omaha, August 23 to September 1, 1898. This being the year of the Trans-Mississippi Exposition, it was a meeting long to be remembered. Brethren from all parts of the United States, many of whom are now sleeping in their graves awaiting the sound of the trumpet, were present. The meeting was held in a beautiful orchard owned by Brother Elton, and was indeed a foretaste of the kingdom, sheltered as it were in the garden of Eden, where all was peace and harmony. The old officers were all re-elected, and we parted knowing that many of us would not meet this side of the kingdom. It was the last meeting in this age for some of our dear ones.

The fourteenth conference was held in a beautiful park in the north part of Blair. The officers elected were: R. H. McLaughlin, president; Rena Gordon, secretary; John Mehrens, treasurer; Almus Adams, evangelist. The speakers at this meeting were Almus Adams, G. M. Myers and W. L. Crowe. We find there was $621.09 due Brother Adams for work that had not been paid. In 1895 there was $51.12; in 1896, $123.17, in 1897, $225.41; in 1898, $95.60; in 1899, $125.49; making a total of $621.09. It was moved and carried that the conference extend a vote of thanks to Brother M. D. Newell for the faithful discharge of his duties for the past five years.

The fifteenth annual conference was again held at Blair in September, 1900. The old officers were re-elected, and Brother Adams again chosen evangelist.

The sixteenth annual conference was held at Blair in September, 1901. Officers elected were: M. D. Newell, president; Eva Mehrens, secretary; John Mehrens, treasurer; Carrie Free, local collector; Brother Adams, evangelist. Brother Adams came to Omaha this year.

The fifteenth annual conference was again held September 5 to 15, 1902, in St. Paul. The speakers were: W. H. Wilson, of Chicago; Brother Shultz, of Bassett, and Brother Adams. The officers elected were: E. C. Lippincott, president; Emma Elton, secretary; John Mehrens, treasurer; Brother Adams, evangelist.

The sixteenth annual conference was held at to September, 5, 1903, at St. Paul. The speakers were Brother Adams and Prother Prime. Officers elected: R. E. Arthand, president; Emma Elton, secretary; John Mehrens, treasurer; Brother Adams, evangelist. The salary paid was $400 for this year.

October 1 to 11, 1904, the nineteenth annual conference was held at St. Paul. Officers elected were: Almus Adams, president; Fanny Welch, secretary; Chas. Crowe, treasurer; Almus Adams, evangelist, at a salary of $50 per month. Speakers were W. L. Crowe and Almus Adams.

In 1905 the twentieth annual conference was held at St. Paul, September 16 to 25. Speakers were: A. J. Eychaner, of Iowa; W. L. Crowe and Almus Adams. Old officers re-elected.

The twenty-first conference was held at St. Paul, October 25 to 29, 1906. Speakers were: Joseph Williams and G. M. Myers, of Kansas, and Brother Adams. Brother Adams again was chosen evangelist.

The twenty-third conference was held at St. Paul, September 14 to 20. Speakers at this meeting were Brother Adams, Joseph Williams and O. J. Allard. Officers elected: M. D. Newell, president; Minnie Rodgers, secretary; Henry Robinson, treasurer; Brother Adams, evangelist.

In 1908 the twenty-third conference was held at St. Paul, August 29 to September 9. Ministers present were: S. J. Lindsay, of Oregon, Ill.; Joseph Williams, St. Paul; O. J. Allard, of Iowa, and Almus Adams, of Omaha. Old officers re-elected, and Brother Adams again chosen evangelist.

August 28 to September 8, 1909, the twenty-fourth conference was held at St. Paul, having been held at that place for eight consecutive years, nine years in all. Speakers were: Eldred Marsh, of Oregon, Ill., and Brother Adams. Officers elected were: M. D. Newell, president; Levi Crouch, vice president; Alta King, secretary; Emma Davis, treasurer; Brother Adams, evangelist, salary raised to $65 per month.

The twenty-fifth annual conference brings us to 1910, which was held at Benson, September 3 to 11. The speakers were: R. G. Huggins, of Cleveland, Ohio; G. E. Marsh, of Illinois, and Brother Adams, of Omaha. This was our first acquaintance of Brother Huggins, who is now the editor of The Restitution. The officers elected at this meeting were: M. D. Newell, president; John Adams, vice president; Alta King, secretary; Emma Davis, treasurer; Amos Adams, evangelist. Brother Adams' salary was raised to $75 per month.

Agust 26-September 3, 1911, at Moorfield, Neb. The speakers were: Brother R. G. Huggins, of Ohio, and Brother Adams. Officers elected were: M. D. Newell, president; Wesley Stephenson, vice president; Alta King, secretary; Brother Adams, evangelist. On account of shortage of crops Brother Adams offered to work for $65 per month.

August 16 to 26, 1912, the twenty seventh conference was held at Moorefield again. Owing to a misunderstanding of dates, Brother T. J. Daniels failed to be with us, and Brother Adams was the only speaker. He, however, proved to be equal to the emergency, and a most interesting and enjoyable meeting was had. The following officers were elected: M. D. Newell, president, P. E. Brown, vice president; Alta King, secretary; Emma Davis, treasurer. There was a shortage of $65 this year, some not being able to pay the amount they had subscribed. Brother Adams thought perhaps they had done the best they could and, as he has always done on former occasions, agreed to wipe it off the books; but I am glad to say the brethren thought it best to share the burden by each one paying one dollar, and in that way it was paid. In the early history of the conference, when most of the members were in the western part of the state, it was often the case, even with the small wages paid, some was lacking until there was more than $800, which debt Brother Adams forgave.

This brings the history of our conference down to the present year, 1913. In the history taken from the records, we have a history of Brother Adams' life work. We have had twenty-seven conferences, and find him a speaker at them all; state evangelist twenty-five years; president of the conference eleven years, serving nine years as president and evangelist at the same time. Surely Brother Adams has been a faithful soldier, and bears the scars of many battles. A few of us know something of the hardships he has endured, and the battles he has fought for the sake of the gospel. Brother M. D. Newell is another faithful witness, having served the conference as president for twelve years. All who have the pleasure of knowing Brother Newell, can tell of his faithfulness in the discharge of his duty.

We find many other names of faithful ones, all along the line; some have fallen asleep, and like Paul they could say: "I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith." May it be said of them all: "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

ARE CHRISTIANS PERSECUTED NOW?
2 Tim. 3:12

History furnishes the answer. Persecution as a deliberate policy is either civil or ecclesiastical. The former is inevitable under an absolute monarchy, where the ruler is irresponsible and the liberties of his subjects are at the mercy of his caprice. It is, however, impossible under a constitutional monarchy, where the prince acts on the advice of his ministers, who in their turn hold office by the will of the people and are commissioned to carry the popular judgment into effect. And as for ecclesastical persecution, it is possible only where one creed holds a position of preponderance over its rivals and is reinforced by the civil authority. The remedy lies in the recognition of the sacred right of liberty of conscience, which carries with it as an inevitable corollary that no sect should occupy a position of advantage. Every religious persecution has arisen from the violation of this elementary principle, and there is no church which is guiltless. The Roman Catholic church persecuted savagely in the days of the Reformation when she was armed with civil authority and sought by its ruthless exercises to extirpate heresy. And in after days it was the Episcopalian church that during her ill omened ascendancy dragooned the Scottish Covenanters. The Presbyterian church presently came to her own, and her behavior during her long ascendancy might seem to disprove the principle that privilege and persecution. Scottish church has never seriously persecuted. But this due to the essential sanity of the Scottish people and their democratic spirit, and not to their Presbyterianism. A hierarchial system lends itself to tyranny, but the burning of Michael Servetus for his ideas of the Trinity and Calvin's rabid vituperation of his fellow-reformers who differed from him by a hair's breadth, his abuse of them as "scoundrels," satans," "obscene dogs," "impostors," "serpents" and the like, prove what Presbyterianism is capable of when it gets the chance.

"We find," says Buckle, "the professors of the dominant creed enacting laws against the professors of other creeds; laws sometimes to burn them, sometimes to exile them, sometimes to take away their civil rights, sometimes only to take away their political rights. These are the different gradations throu which persecution passes."

And what is it that, even where the evil system of a civil establishment still survives, has curbed its arrogance and refrained persecution? It is the growth of the democratic spirit. A democracy may be misled and do wild things, but it is never persistently unjust, and when its mad fit passes, it always reckons sternly with the mischief-makers who have inflamed it. A deliberate policy of persecution is impossible in these days, for the simple reason that democracy has come to its own and the age of priestcraft and tyranny is past. A church that attempted to persecute would get a rude awakening. Of course there is no denying that there is still, in certain quarters, a good deal of petty persecution, particularly where political animosity is rampant; but I hardly think that "anybody would be persecuted for living a real Christian life." At all events, I have never known a genuine instance. It may happen, for example, that a conscientious employee is dismissed for scrupling about engaging in "sharp practice" in business; but this is not persecution, and the likelihood is that the employer respects him all the more, though he requires a worse instrument for his nefarious work. One frequently meets people who complain of being persecuted for their religion; but the truth generally is that their religion is a disagreeable sort of thing, and it is little wonder that it renders them odious and exposes them to annoyance. It is not "living a real Christian life" to be censorious, uncharitable, conceited, ignorant, and mawkish; and when we suffer for this sort of disposition, it is not persecution but punishment richly deserved. There is wholesome truth in Mrs. Cadwaller's epigram that "it is not martyrdom to pay bills that one has run into one's self." We would get fewer knocks and bruises in our passage through the world if we would smooth away our angularities. An unamiable Christian is a contradiction in terms.

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). DRAW NIGH TO GOD

Distrust thyself, trust Jesus.
He is thy strength and shield;
Draw nigh to him, he sees us,
Each secret thought revealed.
Your days with gladness shall be filled,
Your anxious fears shall all be stilled,
Your heart with love of Christ be thrilled,
If you to him are sealed.

He will lovingly regard us,
Though once sinners, now as friends;
He has promised to reward us
With a life that never ends.
And he'll draw nigh and gracious be
If we but seek him earnestly,
Accept the truth and pardon free
Which through his Son he sends.

PRAYER

Our Father, we pray for a deepened consciousness of our own weakness and tendency to fall and err. We pray for the stronger faith in the continual presence of him who is wisdom and righteousness and strength. We pray that the impression of the great truths of thy word may lie more weightily, with a blessed weight, upon all the springs of our actions. We beseech thee that day by day we may bring increasingly heart and mind and will into accord with thine; that we may love the things which thou lovest and hate those which thou hatest, and do the things which thou dost reveal and promise Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"THE MORNING COMETH"
No. 1

Sermon by M. JOBLIN

The following words of the spirit are found in Isaiah 21:11, 12: "The 'burden of Dumah.' He calleth to me out of Seir, Watchman, what of the night? The watchman said: The morning cometh, and also the night; if ye will enquire, enquire ye; return, come."

This passage is regarded by many expositors as one of the obscurest in the Bible; but it is owning to the defective system of theology they have adopted. Not knowing what Jehovah's purpose in creation and redemption is, the question put to the watchman would naturally puzzle them. We humbly conceive that we have the key to unlock the truth they need, and therefore attempt to use it. Dumah is an abbreviation of Idumea, denoting the land of Edom, the country of Esau, southeast of Judea. "A burden" in prophetic diction, is a sorrowful story which God has laid upon one of his servants to be told; and so the burden of Dumah is what God laid upon Isaiah to declare concerning Idumea, which was also a burden to the prophet, as it involved calamities of his own people. He forehears a voice concerning a time of gloom and adversity, from out of Seir, the rocky mountains of Edom, in the valleys of which the children of Esau dwelt. These Edomites were Israel's bitterest enemies. Between them and the Jews, though descended from twin brothers, there had always been a deep and wide alienation. Esau, in a moment of passion had profanely sold his birth right, and for a mess of pottage relinquished his place in the Messianic line and the accompanying promises. The blessings of the covenant therefore passed over to his brother Jacob. Finding himself thus dispossessed, and afterward deceitfully supplanted, he conceived for his brother the intensest hatred, which was handed down through all the generations of his posterity. It inhered in the very blood of an Edomite to despise the children of Jacob, to insult them and their faith, whenever he could, and to hurt and annoy them in every possible way. When Israel came up out of Egypt, then Idumeans would not allow them to go through their country on any conditions whatever. When Nebuchadnezzar overran Jerusalem, though themselves sufferers from his conquests, they eagerly joined in to deepen the ruin which he had brought upon the City of David, crying: "Raze it, raze it to the foundation." And so, in the anticipated evil time for Israel, the prophet hears them calling through the gloom, "Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night!" It was not a sympathetic call from that quarter, not an address of anxious compassion concerning the children of their father's brother, but a question of spite and ridicule, an insulting slur upon their religion and their hopes, a sarcastic taunt over Israel's calamity.

The precise "night" in the prophet's [illegible] we may well take to be that of the seventy years' captivity. It was a dark and dreadful night; and to all human foresight there was no answer to be made to these Idumean reproaches. Such a night drawn out through seventy years left poor hopes, as men would reckon, of a morning beyond, and presented a fearful obscuration of Israel's prospects. But God could see through the gloom, and he put the proper answer into his prophet's mouth. The watchman said: "The morning cometh." As much as to say, "The night is dark, and long, and heavy. No sign of morning appears to you; but the end is not yet; another chapter will yet open out. Israel may seem to you to be stripped of all its glad anticipations, but this adversity will not last forever. This desolation will be healed. Babylon will have to give up her slaves. Zion shall be rebuilt. Deliverance, though long delayed, will come. The morn of a better day will break." I need hardly describe how exactly these prophecies were in due time fulfilled. True as Israel's night, or Edom's reviling, came the morning of the one and the night of the other. Babylon fell. Liberty was proclaimed to the captive Jews throughout all the Medo-Persian realms. The treasures taken from the temple were restored. The City of David and the fallen tabernacle were rebuilt at the expense of their former masters. In one company alone 50,000 Jewish captives came back to repossess the land of their fathers. At another time 6,000 more went up to re-people the wastes of Israel. Nor was it long before Judea was again in the hands of its proper owners, and Moriah, crowned with its glorious temple, and the sons of Jacob once more rejoicing in the administration of governors of their own faith and blood.

Such was the immediate application of the prophecy. But this by no means exhausts it. Deeper and broader and vastly more enduring calamities have since befallen the Jews their city and their temple, than those which attended their deportation into Babylonish captivity. Through eighteen centuries their cries and sighs have been going up to God under his sore judgments for their rejection of their Lord. Kings have issued edicts to destroy them: spiteful multitudes have never ceased to inflict the greatest outrages upon them. Princes and people, civilized and savage, pagans, Mohammedians and Christians, so-called- have made common cause in persecuting and oppressing them. For nearly 2,000 years they have now been without a temple, prophet, sacrifice, king, country or home; scattered everywhere, suffering everywhere, despised everywhere. And this night also was in the prophetic vision, for which also he heard the reproaches of Israel's foes. But even to this he announces a termination, and a succeeding morning when the Jew shall return to his old estate. Are we not divinely told that the gifts and calling of God are without repentance? And that for that very Israel which has been broken off, there remains, as Paul so clearly affirms, a coming "fullness," a recovery, a grafting in again, when the deliverer shall come to Zion and turn ungodliness from them.

But even that does not exhaust the prophet's words. Besides the fleshly descendants of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, they have had all along the ages a spiritual progeny, which in the aggregate will make an innumerable company. In the inspired words of Paul, they are called inward Jews; not outward, or fleshwise, they have not been circumcised in the flesh, physically or literally, but are subjects of heart circumcision, in the spirit; the subjects of mind changing, and renewing; subjects of affection, transparence (Rom. 2:27-29). In other words, there was an ecclesia of God; a company of called out ones; that is a company called out of the world. Attracted by the promises of God to Abraham of future and everlasting good, they forsake the follies, pleasures and environments of the present evil world. They were sustained in this life of isolation and self denial by their faith in God's promises to be made good in the future; they lived a life of faith in this way; hope growing out of faith, sustained them. The godless world treats these inward or faithwise Jews just as the Edomites treated Israelites after the flesh, despises and hates them, scoffs at their faith and rejoices over their calamities.

When the church went down from that supper hall at Jerusalem which witnessed the advent of the Holy Spirit, it was doubtless full of glad hopes of speedy triumph. But instead of that, ages of darkness and corruption and conflict, and depression and wearisome waiting ensued. The church was called to mourn the loss of her noblest sons, slain by wicked tyranny, while those that remained were driven to the mountains, deserts, caves and dens of the earth. Foes and traitors arose in her own folds to waste her substance, deceive her children, and betray her cause. Heresy and schism, and worldliness, and unbelief, and dreadful apostasy came upon her like an avalanche, until it was as much as life was worth to confess Christ in what was called his own church. Partial reformations were now and then affected, and hopes of better days excited, and a ray or two of light flashed upon her sorrowful way. But down to the present time she has been a little flock among beasts of prey, a [illegible] upon a boisterous sea, a weary pilgrim in an enemies' country, a nameless stranger in a persecuting world. And to this hour, figuratively speaking, Ishmael mocks Isaac, and Esau taunts Jacob, and Seir calls deridingly to Zion's watchman: "What of the night? What of those hopes you have been boasting of? Where is the promise of his coming you have confided in?"

Besides all this science sneers, and philosophy laughs, and infidelity boasts, and power in high places spiritually tries to put her light clear out or spitefully persecutes in a modern way!

But beloved, our text comes to the rescue of faltering faith. It is the true and glorious answer to all reproaches: "The morning cometh." God's promises have gone forth, and they can neither fail nor be taken back. The deliverer will surely come, and darkness and gloom and fearfulness and disability will give way. But she will have to weather this adverse age to its end. It is false and foolish to cherish the illusion that she can gain supremacy by means now at her command. It cannot be done! She cannot dispossess the god of this world. No, with all her afflictions, thank God, her "morning cometh." And the thicker the darkness, the nearer is her day. Out of the black winter comes the glory of spring, out of the darkest hour bursts the new born day. But for the present every believer is suffering Jacob, and every unbeliever is a deriding Esau. While it is true we have many glad hopes, and some blessed experiences, our night is dark and our hope deferred. We still carry around fleshly instincts, and, although we would fain be holy, as God requires us, we are compelled to cry to him every day: "O God, forgive, forgive us, for Jesus' sake!" Our duties lie in the way of all sorts of hindrances. We are linked with a disturbed, fitful and changeful order of things, and not infrequently the comforts of today are the harbingers of grief for tomorrow. Let us thank God again, if we are journeying to the place concerning which the Lord hath said: "I will give it you;" there is no night there: once there, we will not be bound to such scenes of change and trial, and disappointment. There was a Cyrus for the deliverance of Israel's captive children, and a day of redemption is nearing for us—a day when the blessed and exalted Jesus shall let himself down through these heavens in the glory of the Father, and issue his proclamation to gather his saints unto him, those who have made a covenant with him by sacrifice, thrill them with immortality, and welcome them into the glorious rest waiting the children of God. And what adds to the satisfaction of those who made it the aim of their lives to keep their garments unspotted, to keep their records clean, is that any day may make an utter end of their adversities, and introduce them to the felolwship and equality with angels, and crown them kings and priests to God.

HOW TO ACQUIRE THE ART OF PUBLIC SPEAKING
No. 1

"Behold I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest" (John 4:35).

"How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard and how shall they hear without a preacher?" (Rom. 10:14).

"For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save those that believe" (1 Cor. 1:21).

"Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God which is in thee" (2 Tim. 1:6).

At a recent meeting of the Conference Committee, to which several brethren in Cleveland were invited and were present, it was pointed out that there are several good openings where brethren having a gift for public speaking may find excellent opportunities for presenting the truth.

Several expressed a desire to do so, but felt they lacked the necessary qualifications required to serve the church in this capacity. It was suggested that probably some instruction may be given by which the said brethren may improve themselves in this respect, hence this paper.

In the first place, we must realize that to acquire the art of speaking, like that of acquiring knowledge, there is no royal road, but requires on the part of all those who seek to obtain it, diligent and close study, patience, perseverance, observation, practice and possessing to a marked extent the faculty of memory and imitation.

We have heard of the pursuit of knowledge under difficulties. The shepherd with no apparatus besides his thread of beads, has laid on his back on the starry night and mapped the heavens, and unconsciously become a distinguished astronomer. The peasant boy, with no tools but his rude knife and a visit now and then to the neighboring town, has began his scientific education by producing a watch that would mark the time. The blind man, trampling upon impossibilities, has explored the economy of the bee hive, and, more wonderous still, lectured on the laws of light. The timid stammerer, with pebbles in his mouth and the roar of the sea surges in his ears, has attained correctest elocution, and swayed as one man the changeful tides of the mighty masses of the Athenian democracy. All these, dear brethren, were expedients. It is thus in acquiring the art of public speaking; no man can tread exactly the same path that others have trod before him.

The art of public speaking is termed "elocution." Elocution means utterance, delivery, or pronunciation. It is a branch of oratory or greater power and importance than is generally imagined; so much so, indeed, that eloquence takes it name from it. It was studied by Quintilian; but before his day, so greatly was it neglected by the Roman orators that he remarked that he had met with many men who were famous for eloquence, but not a single one who understood elocution. What stress was laid upon elocution by the Greek orators appears from the remarkable observations of Demosthenes. Being asked what was the first chief thing in oratory, he replied, enunciation. Being asked again what was the second, he answered enunciation; and again what was the third, enunciation! intimating by these replies that the whole art, spirit and power of oratory consisted in this.

In relating this story about Demosthenes, Cicero says that the repeated answer was actio (action).

This shows us that by enunciatio and actio, the Latins meant the same thing; and that by each they understood the right and just management of the voice, looks and gesture in speaking. And hence they, whose business it is to speak publicly on the stage, are by the world called "actors."

Cicero, and after him Quintilian, divided oratory into five parts:

Firstly, invention; by which we provide ourselves with suitable and sufficient matter for a discourse.

Secondly, disposition or arrangement; by which they meant the division of their subject into parts and sentences, according to the most natural order, and consequently, the proper distribution and arrangement of the ideas.

Thirdly, elocution; by which they always meant what we call diction; which consists in suiting our words to our ideas, and the style to the subject.

Fourthly, memory; the faculty of clearly discerning and remembering our ideas, and of calling to mind the fittest words by which to express them.

Fifthly, enunciation; or the art of managing the voice and gesture in speaking.

By enunciation, then, the ancients understood both elocution and action; and comprehended in it the right management of the voice, looks and gestures in speaking and reading. The great object of a good enunciation is to make the idea seem (as they always should) to come from the heart; they will not fail to excite the attention and the affection of our hearers.

We will now discuss the subject of a bad enunciation and show how to avoid it.

First, when the voice is too loud; a thing very disagreeable to the hearer, and extremely inconvenient to the speaker. We should try to pitch our voice so that it will fill the place where we may speak, for if it exceeds its natural key, it will be neither sweet nor soft, nor agreeable, or we will be unable to give every word its proper distinguishing sound.

Second, another fault is when the voice is too low; a thing not so inconvenient to the speaker, but as disagreeable to the hearer as the other extreme. To the generality of hearers, indeed, a voice too low is much more displeasing than one too loud, especially to those who (and there are many among us) have a difficulty in [illegible]ng and those who are best pleased with a lively and pathetic address as most persons are. It is always offensive to an audience to observe anything in the reader or a speaker that looks like indolence or indevotion. The hearer will never be affected while he sees the speaker indifferent.

The art of regulating the voice consists in a great measure in dexterously avoiding these two extremes. You may take this as a general rule: carefully preserve the key; have the command of your voice, and at the same time adapt the elevation and strength of it to the condition and numbers of the persons you speak to, and the nature of the place you speak in. It would be altogether as ridiculous in a general, who is addressing an army, to speak in a low and languid voice, as in a person who reads a chapter in a family, to speak in a loud and impassioned one.

Third, another fault in enunciation is a thick, rapid and mumbling voice. When a person mumbles or clips his words, and hurries on without any anxiety to be heard distinctly, or to give his words their full sound, or his hearers the full sense of them, we may consider it owing to a defect in the organ of speech, or to a too great rapidity of the animal spirits. More frequently, however, to a bad habit uncorrected. Demosthenes, the greatest orator that Greece ever produced, had, nevertheless, three natural impediments in pronunciation, all of which he overcame by invincible labor and perseverance. One was a weakness of voice, which he cured by frequently declaiming on the seashore, amidst the noise of the waves. Another was a shortage of breath, which he corrected by repeating his orations as he walked up a hill. The other fault was a thick mumbling way of speaking, of which he broke himself by declaiming with pebbles in his mouth.

Fourth, another fault in enunciation is when persons speak too rapidly. There is scarcely any fault more common than this, especially among those who imagine that they can read or speak well, and who have no fear of coming to a standstill by the unexpected appearance of any hard or unusual word, or when speaking the mind suddenly becomes vacant the ideas or thought no longer suggesting themselves. The great disadvantage of this manner of enunciation is that the hearer loses more than the half of what he hears, and would gladly remember but cannot. A speaker should always have regard to the memory as well as to the understanding of his hearers.

Fifth, it is also a fault to speak too slowly. Some persons read in a slow, droning, sleepy way, and through mere carelessness, make pauses at improper places. To anyone of the slightest taste this is most disagreeable. Too slow an enunciation is usually met with in persons advanced in years (in whom it may be excusable), and in those who naturally speak so in ordinary conversation.

Sixth, an irregular or uneven voice is a great fault in reading or in speaking; that is, when the voice rises and falls by fits and starts, or when it is elevated or depressed unnaturally or unoccasionable, without regard to sense or stops, or when it begins a sentence in a high tone and concludes in a low one, or the reverse of this; or when it begins and concludes in the same key.

Seventh, another fault is enunciation as a flat, dull, uniform tone of voice, without emphasis or cadence, or any regard to the sense or subject of what is read; a habit into which children who have been accustomed to read their lessons by way of task, are very apt to fall, and retain as they grow up. A just enunciation is a good commentary. No one, therefore, ought to read or speak anything in public before he has carefully read it over or spoken it audibly to himself once or twice in private.

Eighth, the greatest and most common fault is reading or speaking in a peculiar tone. No habit is more easily contracted than this; none more difficult to overcome. Some have a womanish, squeaking tone, some a singing or canting tone. Others affect a nigh swelling, theatrical tone; ambitious of being accounted fine orators. They lay too much emphasis on every sentence and thus trangress the rules of fine oratory. Others affect on awful and striking tone, attended with solemn grimace, as if they would move you with every word, whether the weight of the subject bears them out or not.

[illegible]sons of a gloomy or melancholy cast of mind are most apt to fall into this mistake.

These are the most common faults of bad enunciation. GEORGE B. ALLDRIDGE.

THE TWO PATHS
Matt. 7:13, 14

"Enter ye in at the straight gate, for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in there at. Because straight is the gate and narrow is the path which leadeth unto life and few there be that find it."

Brothers and sisters, in thinking over the many, many things that there are to thing and write about, my mind wanders back to this old but faithful text. The reason I look upon this as being such a good one is because every one, whether he is a Christian or not, is set at the entrance of one of the two paths, either for salvation or destruction. Brothers and sisters, this is the way I picture our lives: When we are starting out in life we are placed on one large path. We journey along together. We meet many people. We are taught to pick out our own path and then follow on. We reach a certain place in this road where it seems to branch off in different directions. One of these leads to destruction; the other one to salvation. The one leading to destruction is full of things that look bright to us for the time being. This is why so many choose this path; but finally at the end they are carried away in their sin to the soft sands, and death eternal is their reward.

Now on the other path we can see fewer people. There are stumbling stones, but as we reach each one of these dark places and are not tempted to fall, we see in the distance a bright shining star which is set aside for us. This is a path that leads to perfect bliss. When we come to the end of this road we are worn with our efforts and the temptations that we have come up against, but we are preparing ourselves to reach the top of this rock which has a firm foundation and can stand the strong winds and waves of storms.

Let us look at this destructive path for a few minutes. I can picture this as a path of grandeur, for such must be the case in order to attract the attention of so many people. I can see its rays of sunshine looming over the fragrant flowers. Its many mansions are also there. I can see things that are done, wherein the individual himself obtains the glory and keeps it to himself. This we know is wrong, for God deserves all of the honor and glory we receive for anything. I cannot picture it as a narrow path, enclosed with a fence, but a spacious place with a huge sign at its entrance, upon which is written: "Everybody welcome." It is when we reach the end of this path that we fall after our high spirited and high minded journey is over, for "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall."

Now let us look at the other path for a little while. I can picture this one as being one without an elaborate sign at its entrance for we must "seek" in order to find this path. When we find it and start out on our life's journey, we can see things that look gloomy and dark to us. This path does not contain beauty in the same measure as the other one, but I am now constantly looking ahead. I see away off at the end a light. It is the only light and the one that illuminates our pathway. As I travel along I run up against stumbling blocks and all sorts of obstacles, but they are but trifling matters when I see this wonderful light ahead of me. My whole aim is to reach this light. I can hear my Master say: "Come unto me, all ye that are weak and heavy laden." So we journey on, and finally when we reach the end of this path, the gate is opened. By this gate I mean baptism. After this we come up and walk in the newness of life. We have now set our feet on a firm foundation, a rock, the rock of salvation.

Now we can say with a cheerful heart: "I waited patiently for the Lord and he inclined unto me and heard my cry. He brought me up also out of a horrible pit, out of the miry clay and set my feet upon a rock and established my goings. And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God. Many shall see it and fear, and shall trust in the Lord. Blessed is he that maketh the Lord his trust and respecteth not the proud, nor such as turn aside to lies."

Now dear ones, why shouldn't we rejoice when we know we are the ones that Christ has set upon this wonderful rock: and when at last he has closed doors around us, many shall come from the other path, previously described, and shall say: "Lord, Lord, open unto us," and he shall answer: "I know not whence ye are, depart all ye workers of iniquity." Then shall there be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

"WEEPING MAY ENDURE FOR A NIGHT, BUT JOY COMETH IN THE MORNING" (Ps. 30:5)

Dr. Wallace, the scientist, has asserted that the very existence of the fertile portions of this earth depends upon its deserts; that if we had no desert of Sahara there would not be a vineyard within a thousand miles. The vineyard on the hillside is dependent on the desert. The scientist says that it is the particles which come from the desert, floating in the air, that makes the clouds and rain possible; and if you remove the desert, you remove the fertility. Whether that be scientific truth or not, it is certainly true that what we call the desert places of life, the times when we have to keep quiet, when there is no strength for money making or for active duty, but we must just be still and wait upon God, such times of quiet prepare us for the times of activity; the desert gives the fertility.

The night makes the morning. The morning comes and drives away the night, it is true, but God knows how to make the night produce the morning. Jesus said, "Your sorrow shall be turned into joy." Your sorrow shall be transmuted into joy. And certain it is that the darkness of Bedford Jail made the morning dawn of Pilgrim's Progress. It was out of the darkness of the jail the allegory came that has gone over the world and down the ages. It was the darkness of Wartburg Castle, into which Luther was thrust, that made the light of the German translation of the Bible. It is the darkness of Calvary, with its broken heart and its sin bearing, that makes the light of salvation and of glory. God knows how to make the morning out of the night. He can touch the black charcoal into diamonds. He knows how to speak and the darkness becomes light. The very affliction that would drag you down lifts you up; the things that are weights become wings. That which if you could, you would have prevented lifts you higher.

When Sir William Russell was on the way to the scaffold, he took his watch out of his pocket and handed it to the physician who waited upon him, as he said: "Will you kindly take my timepiece and keep it; I have no more use for it; I am now dealing with eternity." With us time is slipping away; eternity is coming. And it is the presence of Christ which fits the Christian to deal with eternity. "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil." Why? Because I will meet my loved ones by and by? Because the separation is very brief? Yes, but the principal reason is: "Because THOU ART WITH ME. Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." A. C. DIXON.

WHAT ABOUT THE MALE NUNS?

From the Fool-Killer

In all this business of Roman Catholic convents and nunneries, black veils and mystery, there is just one question that sticks out in my mind like a crowbar in a paper of needles.

I would like to know, if you please, just why it is that the pappyeras always demand women—and generally young women at that—to shut up in their prison pens of infamy?

Why is it that men are never wanted for these "sacred" duties?

If a man would put on a robe and a black veil and walk around like he had a churn of milk on his head and a blister on both feet, couldn't he perform all the duties of a "nun" just as well as a woman?

Well, no, on second thought, I don't reckon he could. Man has his limitations, and the "holy" church is awfully hard to please, you know.—Sel.

IT MUST BE A HOME

We quite agree with Prof. Shailer Mathews, says The Zion's Herald, when he says: "We cannot let social work take the place of God. People can not be amused into consciousness. Picnics are not the equivalent of prayer meetings, and Sunday School baseball leagues have not yet developed into revivals. The Church of God cannot be an ethical orphan asylum. It must be a home into which souls are born in newness of life."

Brother O. J. Allard is now in a meeting at Hammond, La.

Brother J. H. Anderson reports that he is holding a special meeting at Brush Creek. The interest is good.

Brother Adams reports that after a good meeting at St. Paul, he is spending a few days in Palmer; after which he will go home for a rest.

We are commanded to worship the Father through the Son; but nowhere in Holy Writ are we commanded to worship the Holy Spirit. In the scenic views of the Apocalypse the saints are represented as singing "Glory to God and the Lamb," but no mention is made of them singing to the Spirit. Again, John, the seer, mentions the throne of God and the throne of Christ, but he makes no allusion to the throne of the Holy Spirit. Stephen saw Christ standing at the right of God (Acts 7), but says nothing of seeing "God the Holy Ghost." The spirit of a person is never itself a person. The spirit of God is no more a person than "the seven spirits" which John mentions in Revelations; add to these Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and you have ten persons instead of the Trinity. Instead of the spirit of being a person, in scripture it is always represented as the spirit of a person—a divine emanation "proceeding from the Father." Hence nowhere in scripture is there an example of worship being paid to the Holy Spirit as a person. Let Trinitarians consider this fact impartially.

Fitness for great responsibility is not gained all in a minute. But uncounted times it comes as a result of doing small duties faithfully.

INTERESTING CORRESPONDENCE

No. 2

Your second objection to our faith is an exception you take to the following statement: "After the one thousand years have expired there will be 'little season,' during which time there will be a resurrection and judgment of 'the rest of the dead,' that is, those who have died during the reign of Christ. Judgment will result in the extinction of all sin and sinners, and the immortalization of those who shall establish a title to eternal life during the thousand years."

Your objection to this, as I apprehend it, turns on the statement that the obedient subjects of the reign of Christ will be "immortalized" at the close of the millennium. You understand that only the saints or bride of Christ are to have immortality, so to say that anyone else is to share in this is to you a mistake. Believers of former dispensations as well as believers of the coming age, are only to have eternal life, which you construe to mean a mortal life perpetuated by "the tree of life." In other words, while we, the saints of this dispensation, are to have immortality, life in ourselves inherently, all others of the saved are to have life only as they derive it from outside sources, at the most a terminable and contingent immortality. Now were these distinctions founded on fact, they would not overthrow the statement that all others saved really have "immortality" at the close of the reign of Christ. If your distinctions are serviceable, if they are practical; if they destroy the idea of an absolute immortality for part the redeemed, then death is not only a possibility but an actuality in "the new heaven and new earth." But the unqualified statements of Holy Writ are that when Christ's reign has come to an end, the last enemy death is destroyed: "There shall be no more death" (1 Cor. 15; Rev. 21). If there are people among the saved that have an immortality that can be forfeited (a contradiction in terms), the divine asservation that sorrow, pain, crying and death shall never come, would make a forfeitable immortality non-forfeitable. If mortality is endless life to all intents and purposes it is equivalent to immortality. The distinctions you make between eternal life and immortality are fanciful, lack distinguishable features of radical difference, and are wholly impractivable in application.

COMMUNICATIONS

Brother Huggins:

I am at Hammond, Louisiana, for a two or three weeks' meeting. Please state in the paper if any one between here and California wishes meetings, I can stop off on my way back and give them a meetings. Began meetings here last night with a full house. Attendance promises to be excellent. Address me here until Christmas at least.

Yours in the work,

O. J. ALLARD.

On Sunday afternoon, December 7, Sister Gertrude Ellis, of Chicago, who has been a faithful Berean, was buried in the waters of baptism, and through this act of obedience and faith, took on the all saving name of Jesus. Sister Gertrude is a grand-daughter of Brother Richard Appleyard, one of the old guards. May God bless her in the new home that she is about to enter, and may he be her guide till she shall hear the "Well done" that means life eternal. LEILA E. WHITEHEAD.

Brother Huggins:

With your premission I will offer a few thoughts on the question, "When does Rev. 22:17 apply?"

From a literal standpoint the position taken by Brother L. S. Bronson seems logical; but in Revelations the literal is the exception; and the symbolic the rule. Therefore I hold that it has its application in this dispensation:

First, because revelations was given to show unto his servants things that "must shortly come to pass." And the teaching was by signs. See Rev. 1:1.

Second, because in the passage under consideration, the Spirit is joined with the bride, both say "come."

Third, because in chapter 21 the bride is represented as a city exalted, grand and glorious. See verse 11: "Having the glory of God; and her light like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal." The bride here under the symbol of a city pure, grand and glorious, calls loudly to us to "come."

Fourth, as the spirit calls now by the spirit word, so does the bride in symbol say "come."

THE INHABITANTS OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD

A Sermon Preached by A. K. Stuart, in Tamil, India

I. (a) Who cannot be the inheritors of the kingdom of God?

1. They that do not repent (Matt. 18:3).
2. They that are not born anew (John 3:5).
3. They that have disbelief on the Son of God (John 3:18).
4. Morality alone can not secure the kingdom (1 Cor. 6:9, 10).

(b) Who can inherit the kingdom of God?

1. Only they that are written in the Lamb's book of life (Rev. 21:27; Luke 10:20; Isa. 4:3).
2. They that are written in the book should be careful that their names may not be blotted out (Ps. 69:28; Rev. 3:6).

II. The laws that should be observed by those who wish to inherit the kingdom.

1. They should be poor in spirit (Matt. 5:3).
2. They should be meek (Matt. 5:5).
3. They should bear persecution for righteousness' sake (Matt. 5:10).
4. They should rejoice and be glad at the time of persecution (Matt. 5:11, 12).
5. They should confess Christ (Luke 12:8, 9).
6. They should wait for the Lord (Ps. 37:9).
7. They should endure all to the end (Matt. 10:22).

III. The privileges enjoyed by them.

1. The power to eat the tree of life (Rev. 2:7).
2. Redemption from the second death (Rev. 2:10, 11).
3. Enjoyment of the hidden manna and the new name (Rev. 2:17).
4. Authority over the nations, etc. (Rev. 2:26).
5. Perfect holiness (Rev. 3:4-6).
6. Kept from the hour of trial (Rev. 3:19-12).
7. God's friendship (Rev. 3:19-22).

The above sermon was preached in Tamil and translated into English and sent me by Brother Stuart.

DIGGING FOR TRUTH

A short time ago I attended a series of lectures given by Sir Wm. Ramsay, D. C. L., of the University of Aberdeen. Prof. Ramsey is noted as a historian and archeologist. He has been able to overcome Turkish opposition to excavations in Asia Minor and has secured privileges no other archeologist has been able to secure. By excavations made during the past year he has found the last evidence needed to prove the truth of Luke's acount of the taxing, Luke 2:1-4.

Four facts stated in this account have been rejected by certain scholars and critics as untrue. The facts unearthed by digging in both Egypt and Asia Minor have again proven the accuracy of Bible statements. It has proven that Luke, as a historian, has no equal.

Last winter I attended a lecture on Babylonian antiquities. The statement of this noted man was that early Hebrew literature was founded on Babylonian mythology. Why should I accept the statement of the one and reject the other? Simply because the one gave facts; the other gave some facts but also his conclusion which was not in accord with the facts of history. If we do not know the facts upon which our faith must rest we will not be able to judge who is right. The foundations of our faith must be laid deep to sustain the shock that is sure to come at some unguarded moment. In matters of this kind we should know when to reject the teaching of men who stand high in institutions of learning.

Sister Elizabeth A. Reed is one who has been digging for truth for many years. She has searched long in old and dusty volumes to give us the gems of truth. I wish to again call attention to her valuable articles contributed and published in "The Visitor." In The Visitor of 1908, "Seven Reasons Why I Accepted the Thirty-nine Books of the Old Testament," also "Seven Reasons Why We Accept the Books of the New Testament." In The Visitor of 1912, "The Resurrection of Christ," testimony of classical writers of the first century, also "Seven Victories."

There is nothing better we can do to keep doubts of the truth of the Bible from the minds of our young people than to give them such convincing proofs as are contained in these articles. It takes a good deal of money to pay for printing and mailing these Visitors, but if each would pay for one or more the good work of circulating them could go on from year to year. Would it not be better to spend five cents for a Christmas Visitor than to spend five cents for a postal card? How much better it would be to celebrate our Lord's birth by sending at least a small sum to help spread the gospel message. Just try sending a copy of The Visitor, a neat book of 212 pages for only twenty-five cents. Address Harriet E. Boice, 1009 South Wright Street, Champaign, Ill.

God's commands are tests. When Joshua was told to rise and lead the people over Jordan, he was put to a supreme test on which his future and that of Israel depended.

OBITUARY

On Tuesday, December 8, another old soldier of the cross laid by his armour to rest from his sickness and pain, and has fallen asleep in the Lord. When the brethren and friends gathered for a last farewell, Brother Reed gave us the glorious promises of the resurrection and of eternal life through the Christ.

Brother Wm. Wilson made arrangements for his funeral and asked for the hymn "It Is Well with My Soul." "It is well," he said, "because my life is hid with Christ in God. Tell the church that my trust and faith are true. Hold to the faith of the Savior's coming, for it is near. Let nothing deceive you nor draw you away. Hold fast."

Brother Wilson was immersed in Fox River when he was about sixteen years old, and united with the Geneva Church. He has been a worker ever since, in the Master's cause.

About fourteen years ago he felt that he could accomplish more if he served by both voice and pen, so he started out in evangelistic work. His preaching took him from the Gulf into Canada, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific; and everywhere he went he proclaimed the glorious gospel, the things pertaining to the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ.

If he had lived until June, he and his beloved wife, Agnes, would have traveled together fifty years of life's journey. The love and sympathy of all the brethren go out to her and the daughter, Jessie, in their great sorrow.

At the age of seventy-two he has succumbed to apoplexy and its attending paralysis, and the grim destroyer has laid him low to await the Master's call.

Two brothers survive him, Brother Thomas Wilson, of Oakland, editor of "The Last Days," and Brother Samuel Wilson, of Jersey City, N. J.

That his life of service may be continued, let those to whom he has ministered and the Bereans, in whom he has taken such an interest, hold fast to the faith, and proclaim fearlessly the glorious tidings of the kingdom of God.

Symposium on Self Denial

"Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross, and follow me. And when he had called the people unto him with his disciples, also, he said unto them, Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." "And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with its affection and lusts." "But God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." "If we suffer we shall also reign with him; if we deny him, he also will deny us. If we believe not yet he abideth faithful; he cannot deny himself." "But whoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven. Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and my words in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed when he cometh in glory of his Father with the holy angels."

"For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth: to the Jew first and also to the Greek." "Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner, but be thou partakers of the affliction of the gospel according to the power of God."

ANNIE BURTON.

Dear Bereans:

We take up a very important subject when we discuss Christian self-denial. When Jesus said: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me," he meant more than we perhaps realize at first. Jesus had just been telling his followers that he was going up to Jerusalem and suffer and die. This he knew to be inevitable, because it had been predicted, in fact foretold, that such would be the case. Here is to come the supreme test of loyalty to God. Never forget that this same dark hour is to come to us all as a test. Our profession is not enough; we must prove what we profess. It takes severe trials to do this. It is the things we deny ourselves that proves one loyally to God. When Peter heard the Master say he was going to suffer and die, he protested at once. But Jesus gave him to understand that he was looking at it from a human standpoint, and that he we an offense to him. So we can offend God by trying to shun responsibility. It would have been an easy matter for Jesus to have sided in with Peter and stayed away from Jerusalem and fixed up matters with his enemies and escaped that awful ordeal. But think what he would have lost. But he was ready to deny himself every worldly honor and pleasure to please God. God took no pleasure in the suffering of Jesus. He knew what was in his heart, and that at heart loyal, but it was the only way to prove it to the world. Peter, as a follower of Jesus, stood there for the moment a satan. Adverse to what was written of his Master. When Peter said: "Be it far from thee; this shall not be unto thee" Jesus never stopped to think it over; he answered him at once. Peter had touched his honor, and he was indignant in a moment. Jesus wanted it understood that he was not the kind of man that would shun responsibilities, no difference how great, and the presumption was a reflection upon his honor and he felt it very quickly. So we, when the adversary comes around, offering us ways and means to escape persecution, we should never stop to ponder, but resent on the spot the attack on our honor. We must deny ourselves the privilege of escape. The moment we begin to compromise with the enemy we do it to escape trial and suffering. It dishonors our leader and makes us nothing less than deserters.

"If we suffer with him we shall also reign with him." It takes much self-denial to do this. Take the prophets for an example of suffering and self-denial. The object of self-denial is to bring out strength of character. When we mitigate our sufferings, it shows weakness. It is not so much the items of self-denial we should discuss; they will come with the duties of each day, and we will recognize them as they present themselves. The main thing is to be ready for them when they come, and be prepared for the denial. Remember that God is refereeing the fight. Never allow the enemy to stand triumphantly over your prostrate form while the great referee counts you out and awards the fight to the enemy. Deny yourselves of every thing that will weaken you and do every thing that will strengthen you for the conflict. And finally say: "I have fought a good fight." Deny yourselves of ungodliness and worldly lust. If you will do this God will never allow your foot to be moved (Psa. 121:3).

In the process of developing our Christian, or Christ-like characters, the next step after acquiring a Christian conscience is self-denial practiced according to this conscience. Christian self-denial—the self-denial practiced by Christ, has for its basis and foundation the Christian conscience, which we can acquire only by study of Christ's teachings. So then, before we can practice the self-denial that will be approved by Christ and count for our salvation, we must study his words until we gain his ability to distinguish between what is right and what is wrong, and then apply this knowledge to our daily lives. This will result every time in self-denial, which is refusing to self certain things wanted by self.

Every self-denial is one step forward in our salvation, for every self-denial is one of the many death blows we must, with Christ's help, deal out to sin under which we are held in bondage, and from which we must be saved before we can be saved from death. Salvation from voluntary sin must precede salvation from death, and this first step can be accomplished only by denying our own natural self, our own natural will, and thus letting Christ's self have full sway in our minds.

Self-denials, to be effective, must be guided by a clear, cool, knowledge of right and wrong, and not by our feelings of what is right and wrong. Christ always overcame his temptations, or self, by a "This saith the Lord" for he always answered those temptations by scripture. We can not do less than he did. If feelings were not his guide in building a Christian character, surely we can not run the risk of being guided by them. Sometimes our feelings cool off, and of course our self-denial weakens as they cool. Again, there are many little wrongs to which we are so accustomed that we don't have any feelings concerning them, and the only way we can be brought to the point of self denial on those points is to learn if Christ approves or disapproves.

Paul teaches us in seventh and eighth chapters of Romans, that each one in Christ has two "selves," dispositions or minds, the one tending toward the evil or natural man, and the other tending toward the good or spiritual man, which is begotten in us at baptism by Christ's words. From the time that the spiritual first puts in appearance, there is a constant warfare between it and the natural; and it is owing to how much of Christ's conscience we possess, and to how thoroughly we apply this knowledge to our actions, whether the natural or the spiritual will be overcome in the conflict and denied an existence. Our actions are the only channels through our thoughts. Whether good or bad can manifest and exercise themselves. If our thoughts are full of hatred, the only way to exercise them and make them manifest to the world is through words and deeds injurious to others. If our thoughts are of love, the only means of exercis and manifestation for them is through words and deeds working good to others; and so on with all our thoughts, whichever class they belong to.

While one set of thoughts is utilizing the actions as channels of exercise and manifestation, the other set must lie in idleness, for the actions can not be used by both good and bad thoughts at the same time. Our actions are the outlets for our lake-bed of thoughts, and they also complete the circle and form the inlet, for every action leads to another thought similar to the one that produced the action. So then, just as a lake with no inlet finally dries away, and as an unused muscle becomes withered and powerless, so the class of thoughts that is denied exercise and manifestation by cutting off its outlet and inlet—the actions—will finally become dead and powerless. It lies with us which class of thoughts or which self, we permit to perish. Every wrong action denied, diminishes the natural self that much and permits the spiritual, or Christ-self, to expand.

If the Christ-self is expanded and allowed to fill our minds our salvation is assured, for we have taken the first step—salvation from voluntary sin. Salvation from death comes as a result. If the natural self is expanded and made to grow by our actions, the Christ-self will be denied, and will finally wither away to nothing, and our fate will be sealed. If we have not taken the first step, God will never permit us to take the second—eternal life. He will not make immortal sinners in the next age any more than he did when he refused the tree of life to Adam while he was yet a sinner.

Let us take Christ at his word, then, and believe what he says in Matt. 16:24: "If any man will come after me let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." "Christ brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." The path that leads to eternal life was lighted up by the gospel and Christ trod every step of the path. By studying his life we find it was one of self-sacrifice, love and purity, and if we would come after him in our search for eternal life, we must walk in the same path.

ONE PATH TO SERVICE

Dream through the hour that should be filled with doing is one of the snares and delusions in life,

When a noble deed or a clever one is announced as accomplished, what a chorus goes up to the tune of "I thought of that years ago!" And the difference between men who do things and men who do not, lies very often in the mere fact that one goes ahead into action, while the other doesn't, rather than in any superiority of vision. Doing the good deed one thinks of, filling the moments with what one's thought is urging—that is the path to service.

CHRISTMAS NOTICE

The Chicago Bereans wish to notify the friends who have worked with us so many years, that we will take up our work among the poor again this year. Last year, with your assistance, we were able to help about thirty families, looking after, particularly, windows and deserted wives, who have to work, aged couples and families where there has been long sickness to make inroads on the income. Will those who wish to help in this work send your offering to Josephine Barnebee, 5439 Ohio St., Chicago, Ill. Your kindness will bring Christmas cheer to some home that needs Christ's message of love.

"BE NOT CONFORMED TO THE WORLD."

By the late Rev. L. T. Nichols July. 21st 1907.

There is but one way that we can be certain that some day we shall walk the streets of gold. And as we walk around on this earth of ours, and come in contact with so much sorrow, pain, and degradation, and sin and iniquity, it causes our heart to yearn to go where all this will be done away, and we shall be permitted to walk those streets of gold, where every one we come in contact with will be healthy and vigorous, strong, joyous and happy. Such a time is coming, and although to the human mind the chariot wheels seem to drag, yet in another aspect we see it hurriedly passing, passing on, and it will not be long before that wondrous time arrives, and you and I will have to face the great Judge of all the earth, before the great white throne, and it will be told then whether we shall walk the streets of gold, or continue on in the path we have trod in which will be meted out to us destruction.

There are only two ways. You remember our Master in speaking of it in that wondrous sermon, the first sermon, the very first sermon he preached on the mount, declares there are but two ways, and now if we are only in the strait and narrow way we know there is life at the end of it, and that life will be given to us if we only follow in the narrow way.

But the human mind does not like to be cut down and have to walk in such a strict way; they like to loiter and swerve to the right hand or the left according to their own notion. But when we come to realize we must become armed with the mind of Christ, as we were talking to you last evening, in order to be prepared and ready to enter the golden paved street city and enjoy the wonders of eternity, it seems we would not be so foolish as to follow our own inclinations, inasmuch as it has been plainly revealed, it has been told us long beforehand, that it leads to destruction. In the broad road, the wide gate, we are allowed all the sway and room we may desire, but Jesus says it leads to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat. We may realize also if we are with the masses in the broad road, taking part in their follies and vanities, we may know, no guess work, we may know we are on the way to destruction.

God is merciful. Oh, how wondrous is his mercy! He has no pleasure in the death of the wicked, he declares to us. But that wondrous Being, possessed with all wisdom, and having all knowledge, He cannot do otherwise in allowing a free moral agency to set before us and hold out to our view the beauty and grandeur of Eternity on the one hand, — and He is so good and merciful that He portrays on the other hand the darkness, the vale of sorrow and pain and destruction at the end of the broad road. He sounds the warning vo the way through, painting it out in words that man dreamed of. And we never would have thought that t man mind with all the glory and grandeur portrayed them of the ceaseless ages yet to roll on, to enjoy tha sweet rest in, that it would be our own choice to follo own ideas, our own notions, and walk in the broad roa leads to destruction. That stamps the Bible as divine, look around and see the wide, vain world following wake of vanity. And how true will be the saying of Jer which will pretty soon be fulfilled before our very eyes! sure to be. The Gentiles shall come from the ends earth and say, "Surely our fathers have inherited lies, and things wherein there is no profit."

Oh, to think that this teaches us a wondrous lesson! scribes on the heart of the instructed ones the same as declared in his first sermon on the mount, all nations the road going to destruction. If they were not in the road, the great masses of mankind, it never could be fu that they shall come from the ends of the earth and c that they have inherited lies, vanity and things in whic was no profit. And when we come to realize this, i as though we would have a longing, oh! such an en get into the narrow way. But therein lies the trouble, vanities of the world must be cut off; we cannot indu the pleasures and comforts of this world; for He is true, w er we drink it in or not. You remember, our Master w interested in it that he not only proclaimed it himself to around him, but told it to you and me to "be not of the w even as I am not of the world." He was interested in matter, not simply leaving us with his own word, bu went everywhere preaching the gospel, bearing it to a d world and telling them not to be of the world for the w passeth away; and not only that, but the things of this w will pass away with it, and we'll meet our end, our de And we realize more as the time passes by the shortne this life.

It impressed me so yesterday, as that man in vigor strength, a young man too, a lawyer, he seemed to be a an honest young man, so much so that we engaged him t our business, and he has been doing it ever since we h been here, and he seemed to be healthy and strong and bust, but all at once as he was sitting in his chair, po over his law books, the lady told us yesterday, he complai of a pain, he said he guessed he would have to quit, bu still kept tugging on until he was through with the docum he had in hand, and he then arose and went home, and next trip he made was to Mt. Hope Cemetery. I saw a no in the paper, and I could hardly believe my eyes, I rea down that such a lawyer, Fred Prosser Salisbury, had died and was buried at such a date in Mt. Hope Cemetery, and and I hardly dare think it was so until I stepped into his office and found it was only too true. And do you know, beloved friends and sisters, it is only a question of a little time, only a question of a few years at the most until such a notice will be heralded in reference to us? There are, I can see before me now, several that ten years would number their days, if Elijah did not come; ten years would number the days of several in this audience. And if we could only realize how quickly ten years will fly by, it does seem we would not be interested in the vain things of the world. It seems our minds would be occupied and all taken up in reference to what must I do to secure a home that will never be taken away, a life that will never end, a vigor of constitution that will always glow with beauty, strength, and glory, and a joy and comfort that will roll on and keep up with the times of eternity. These wondrous blessings, how they outshine the short, fleeting, passing joys of earth! and yet somehow or other the present vanity and pride and frivolous things of this world seem to engage the mind of every nation on earth, and they are all following in the one wake, taken up with the things of this life; and they would rather have the pleasures of sin for one short season, than to have the glories of eternity without end. For my part I have made my choice, my heart is fixed, and the seal is placed for eternity. I have cut loose from the things of this world, and I am only laboring to gain the grand future, and to get you to do the same; and if I only accomplish this feat, if I can only perform this work, do you know I have performed the greatest work of any one, or of all earth's potentates put together? They never performed such a work as this will be. And my longing anxiety is for us to look at ourselves, as the Apostle declares, "Look to yourselves that we lose not the things that we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward." Oh, to get that full reward, that grand eternity, that sweet by and by, that land of rest, where sorrows will will never come! It seems as if we would prefer that to the short things of this life, inasmuch as we know, no guess work about it, we know by experience and by what we see surrounding us, that life is short, its pleasures will soon flee, and all will be gone.

We see them dropping off one by one, one by one, one after another, the wide world over, and by and by we will drop off too, and then what will be our condition? Wouldn't you give ten thousand lives like this to the service of the Lord, if it were only in your power then? But it will be too late then, too late then when the dark hour of death settles in; "As the tree falleth, so shall it lie," says the Almighty.

There can be no change then, when the time has come. Like that lady Sister --- was telling you about last evening. To all appearance it seemed that no one in the house had better health than she, and all at once she was stricken down. They called in the best physicians, and they had the honesty to say, "You will never recover, you will only last a few days at the most; the disease has got such a hold that it will take you right down. You were never sick before, but now you will go." They told this to her friends, and told as much to her. And Sister ---- was called on, and she went there and stopped by her bed-side and talked with her; but her only ambition was to have a nice silk dress on, to be all dressed up and poised off when she was laid in her coffin. It was too late. It was too late then to make amends. "Oh, that I had only seen my folly before!" If we could only realize this, if we could only see and realize it before it is too late; for when the grim monster marches on and lays his cold, repulsive hand upon our shoulder, there is no getting away from him; it is just impossible for us to avoid him or shunt him off. He is there to stay. And, sooner or later, he will take a firm, fast hold of us and we can never shove him off.

And now, now that we have a little time and opportunity left, shall we not discard the things of this world, inasmuch as they do not tend to make us happy? Of course there are degrees of joy or comfort to those who take part in its vanities, but they are so short they are not worth mentioning, they are not worth considering. If they were going to last and we were going to have its pleasure forever there would be some sense, there would be a little cause, for our following in its wake; but, inasmuch as death when it comes and our eyes close in slumber, our joy and comfort ceases; and then to realize that though we have lived our days in pleasure, says the Bible, though we have spent all our days in pleasure, yet we shall be cut down and wither as the green herb; we shall be laid in the grave like sheep. Ah! that will be our condition. Is that what we desire? Is that where we want to be found when that day comes; be laid away and sleep throughout the endless ages of eternity our eyes forever closed to the beauty and grandeur and beatitudes of the wondrous future? Not I; and I hope not you. I hope you will make a better choice than the things of this world; for you remember our blessed Lord declared through the Apostle he chose for the specific purpose of imprinting this wondrous faith on our minds, and Jesus also went everywhere teaching and preaching the glorious gospel system, and he caused it to be reiterated by the Apostle who said, "Know ye not" -- Oh! it is a dreadful thing not to be made acquainted with this -- "Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God."

He will wipe them out of existence like the dust of the earth; they will perish as the green herb and wither and decay in the end, says God. But to him who puts his trust in the Lord and keeps his commandments, he says he will find a hundred-fold more pleasure now, and in the age to come life everlasting.

What a difference! What a contrast! A hundred-fold in this life. It was a hard and difficult matter at first to read this understandingly; but we have passed through the experience and we can testify that we have found an hundred-fold more than what you could possible enjoy in the world. And as soon, just as soon, as you get where you will work with all your heart, and cut loose from the things of this world, and have your affections on eternity, working for that alone, and so soon as you realize and really sense and believe without a lingering doubt that you are in the narrow way and there is a grand life before you, there will be a comfort, there will be a joy, there will be a pleasure a hundred times greater than you could ever experience in the world. But then this does not come of our own volition, it is not something that comes rolling along like a mighty tempest bursting with fury over land and sea, or a rain storm sending down its torrents of water to refresh and replenish the earth, or like a tornado rushing with mighty force over the country; it only comes by our vigilance and faithful work in the service of the Lord, by getting right down and reading the testimony which says to us in plain words, -- "Be not conformed to this world." Does it not say so? "Be not conformed to this world but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." Rom. 12:2.We were all in the broad road or we couldn't be transformed.

You need a work performed upon you; every soul that enters the bright celestial glory must be transformed, and how is it to be accomplished? By sitting down and folding our hands in lazy lock, or dropping on our knees and praying to the God of heaven? No, no: "but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." Go to the wondrous Record and there read and find out what change we have got to make in order to gain the bright home in glory, and it tells you you cannot conform to this world; and shouldn't we be content? How long would the things of this world last anyway? Only a little while, only a little space, and then it will all be over; and then will either stand before us the open pearly gates dazzling in their beauty and grandeur, and within the city its golden paved streets and bright, running streams of crystal clearness, its beautiful shores decked with every manner of flowers to greet our eye, where zephyr breezes will ever blow and sweet perfume will be wafted everywhere, or on the other hand will be the cold, chilly grave, cold death will stare us in the face without a joy or comfort. We will look across, as the testimony declares, we shall only see it with our eyes but not partake of it.

It tells you right out, if you go the way of the world, if you join in with them, and make friends of the world, you will only see it with your eyes but you can never partake of its glories. As you look across to the golden strand and see the glorified ones clothed in majestic splendor, robed in spotless purity, and clad with such joy and happiness which will beam out of every pore of their being, and you notice the gate is closed, and our Master says, "It is too late," methinks you will then wish that you had left the world alone; for it will only recede and go down, down, down, at a rapid rate to destruction, and only the faithful ones will survive, only those that walk in obedience to his commandments will be permitted to pass through the pearly gates. Jesus said, "Ye, ye;" -- who are the ye? He says they are the ones that say, "Lord, Lord and do not the things that I command you; and ye shall see Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God," and will look over with your eyes and see the wondrous prize they have gained, the beauty and glory they have gotten, the long sweet rest they have started, the bright celestial home they have been given, but you will never be permitted to enjoy it; you will see it with your eyes, but ye yourselves thrust out; and then he says, as the result of it, "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." We will see what we have lost.

But we can have this portrayed before us now, and why will we be so foolish as to lend any thought of conforming to the world? why had we not rather be with the few? for Jesus said, -- not man, not I, if I were the author of this, if I were the one that told this story, if I were the founder of this gospel message, then throw it away. But when Jesus, the ed Son of God, declares to us, as he did to the multi by which he was surrounded, that strait and narrow i way that leads to life, and few there be that find it, how tent we should be, how happy it should make us to be wi few, and how unhappy if we are found with the masse would seem as though we couldn't rest with them or tak y comfort with the multitudes, because Jesus said the b way leadeth to destruction. And why take joy and co with the few? Because he said, strait and narrow is the that leads to life, and few there be that find it. I'd rath with the few and find life and glory, peace, joy, happi riches and honor, than to go with the multitudes the length of time, only a few moments, only a few days, a at the very most. I'd rather go with the few, for these short years, and find those endless riches and that life, supreme joy and comfort and that eternal happiness, th travel with the multitudes for a few days and find destruc sadness, sorrow and pain until we are destroyed from of earth.

He is going to destroy them from off the face of the because they would not obey him, and he will raise up that will obey. He has plenty of time, and thus in our le as he declared, "The spirit of the Lord is upon me," and you unless you preach this same gospel, the spirit of the will never be upon you. You may think so, but it will b from being the spirit of the Lord, for he tells you the spi the truth, and it has never been upon you because we "The Lord hath anointed me to preach glad tidings," whom? Not to everybody, but "the Lord hath anointe to preach glad tidings to the meek." And do you know Jesus said in his first sermon? "Blessed are the meek they shall inherit the earth." The meek are the ones are going to possess the land throughout the endless ag eternity; but the other class will be destroyed. "And Lord hath anointed me to preach glad tidings to the m he hath sent me to bind up the broken hearted, to proc liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to t that are bound. To proclaim the acceptable year of the L and the day of vengeance of our God." You are not on proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, but the day of geance of our God. They both go hand in hand toge and just as certain as there will be a day of glory, and a ceptable time, so certain there will be a day of venge too, and destruction will sweep over all the earth and away all those who have not yielded obedience, and in place will be born and brought up a nation that will him, until his covenant will be fulfilled, -- "As surely as I saith the Lord, all the earth shall be filled with my glo And he tells you, "Israel is my glory." All the earth is g to be filled with Israel. Although few in number now, will increase by and by; for you remember he declares, certain as the earth bringeth forth her bud and as the ga causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth, so Lord God will cause righteousness and praise to sp forth before all nations." It will be certain; by and b praise will spring forth, and how will it be done? He tell just how it will be done. He says, "My people sh be righteous. I will fill the earth with my glory. My p Israel are the ones who have God for their strength, whose God is their all."

Oh, do you know, do you remember on what conditions God will be our strength? Said Paul on that wondrous occasion, "Come out from the world and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you; and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters saith the Lord Almighty." Upon what conditions? He says you cannot have me for your God unless you come out from the world and separate yourself from it, and become a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

And if you do that you can be his sons and daughters, "and I will be your God," who said it? - "Saith the Lord Almighty." That is not man. And here it says, "Thy people also shall be all righteous, they shall inherit the land." -- I wonder how long? -- "forever." "They shall inherit the land forever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands that I may be glorified."

That is to be his glory. The glory of the Lord is Israel, the ones who separate themselves from the world, and who disclaim and disown the multitudes of the world, and who are not conformed to their ways and doings, their vanity or their sayings. But be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds, and become the Israel of God; there is no other way to be accepted. And then he says, I will fill the earth with my glory. How? "A little one shall become a thousand, and and a small one a strong nation." When will it be? "I the Lord will hasten it in his time." Don't, don't be afraid, don't get discouraged. I the Lord will hasten it in his time.

We are living in an age now which is the most trying of all ages, we are living in the tarrying time, and we find some saying, "Oh, I don't know about the coming of the Lord, he told us he was coming before, and I don't know about it." If we didn't find them saying this, the Bible wouldn't be true. They say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" Oh where? They don't stop to realize that God declared there would be a tarrying time in which they would say, "The Lord delayeth his coming." But no, no, he does not delay his coming; but there is a tarrying time, a waiting time, and we have entered that time and it won't be very long until it will be fulfilled before our very eyes, and we will see a turning of the tables, the mighty prophet Elijah will come, and I tell you, -- oh! there will be a change then, and it will cause this one and that one to say, and they will come from the ends of the earth and say, "Surely our fathers have inherited lies vanity and things wherein there is no profit;" and it will cause them to cut loose from the world as they never did before and deny themselves and become one of the little ones that will become a thousand. A strong nation will be formed from this little one, we few small ones, the little flock. And, said Jesus, "Fear not little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." A little one shall become a thousand until the earth is full of his glory, full of immortal and incorruptible beings.

Shall we be one of the little band that are going to multiply their offspring without number, until they will fill the earth with the glory of the Lord, until they will be the seed of the blessed of the Lord, covering this mighty earth of ours and filling it with his beauty and glory as the waters cover the great deep, as the result of His workings and His power? This is sure to come, by and by, by and by it will be here, but the question arises, Where? there is no question about it coming, but the question is, Where, where will we be? Will we be found among the little flock or shall we be found among the vain multitudes of the world whose only aim is to get rich, and to enter into its frivolities and its fashions, which only cause the money to go out to no use. Instead of putting it in to spread abroad the mighty work of the Lord, they simply use it to deck and adorn themselves as though they were the only ones of any account. But no, the Lord calls upon us to consider him, and tremble at his word, or he says, "I will never confess you when I come in that wondrous day to call you to account and reward you for your doings. If you deny my words, if you are ashamed of me or the wondrous Truth," he says, "of him will the Son of man be ashamed when he comes in the glory of his Father and all the loly angels with him." Wouldn't you like to witness and wouldn't you like to have our blessed Lord own and bless you when he comes with all his holy angels with him? I would; I would rather be owned then by that Personage than to stand as one of earth's monuments, as one of the greatest men on earth; for their glory will not last, they go to the tomb and are forgotten. Oh, how true! The Bible told us this hundreds of years ago, they are gone and forgotten, and another rises and takes their place, and still another arises and they are forgotten, and the scripture is fulfilled, "One generation cometh and another goeth, but he that doeth the will of the Father abideth forever." We, then, will not be cut down in that great day but will be the little flock to whom He will give the kingdom, and it will be in his own time.

Oh, he has plenty of time; you may scoff now, but he says, "I the Lord will hasten it in His time." Oh, that time is soon coming, and it will be ours to enjoy if we only pay attention to the gospel message: To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn; to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, those that lament their transgressions, those who are weary of the toilsome, sinful world, those that will not be comformed to this world. Those whose heart the gospel message strikes will lay down the vanities of the world, and begin to work for something eternal, and something that will give us more joy now. "To appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give them beauty for ashes." Oh, it is only ashes you get in the world, it is compared to the dust of the earth; and he says he will give unto them "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness, that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord that he might be glorified." That is how He will fill the earth with His glory that He might be glorified. By and by they will listen to the wondrous message, altho' few in number now, yet out of the few He will swell the numbers until there will be a great nation which will fill the earth with His glory, until they will be so numerous that the world will be inhabited.

And then to think of it, the ages will roll on and on, and when you have lived, -- why! Sis -- and Sis --, when you have lived ten thousand million years, your life will have just begun, and then the joy and happiness will begin to swell out, and untold comforts will be ours, beyond all that we can even ask or think, exceeding abundantly above all that we can ask or think; and then just to think of the life we will have to enjoy those things in! I don't think the things of this world, just a mess of pottage, can be compared to it. Do you think I would be so foolish as to make choice of the things of this world?

Oh! do you know you can have more health and joy, and real lasting pleasure and comfort in the narrow way than you ever could in the broad road? In no other way can you get so much. And when you cut loose from the things of this world you will feel your health will gain, and you haven't got to pay attention to the fashions of this world; you can absent yourself from everything of the world and put on a plain, nice, sweet, decent garb in which we can take comfort and peace; and, more than all, for inasmuch as we know the Lord told us so to do, we can get more joy out of it than we could in anything else. And then, by and by, when Elijah comes, when he arrives on the stage of action and says you have walked as the Master told you, to come forth now with me, come out and begin the mighty work until will be fulfilled the lesson we heard this morning where it declared unto us that all nations are going to be covered with the robe of salvation, with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels; and her seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people, all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed that the Lord hath blessed.

Just take a walk after meeting down to our gardens, and there you have a living monument to its truthfulness. He says, "As the seed that is sown in the earth, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth," so certain this will be. And as you take a walk down there you will see there are no weeds there. Bro. - - are you here? He has got a few weeds in his garden, I noticed this morning, but if you all keep your garden as clean as the preacher, --- I keep my garden clean, you won't find any weeds there; and that is the kind we want to be in the spiritual, no weeds there to choke out the spiritual, the word. But if we keep the weeds out, the garden will grow and God will water the earth and we can see it bud and bloom and bring forth fruit. See the hundreds and hundreds of quarts of strawberries we got, and the bushels upon bushels of peas and string beans, and the corn that is coming on, and the potatoes that are on the road. And all this as we see the works of nature, the mighty God says, as certain as we see the garden spring forth, so absolutely certain he will perform what he has been talking about; and we see a living monument, a living witness, to these things. Every time we see the grass spring forth, or the tree yield her fruit, or the garden yield her increase, that is something as a living witness that these things are sure; one is just as certain the other.

Beloved Brethren and Sisters, when we have this assurance, when we know the wondrous future can be ours, how foolish to make choice of the things of this world! why not make choice of the better? Like a man said to me the other day who owed me a little money; he says, "I can't pay you yet, I am only getting $3.00 day, or thereabouts, and when Saturday night comes it is all gone." "And where has it all gone to?" He says, "I don't know; I know where lots of it goes t goes for the vanities of this world. I have to dress my wife child, and my wife has got to put more on to the dress the dress is worth, and then she has got to pay more for ing it than the whole thing is worth. And do you know, to pay out $ 25.00 for her dress!" That is where it go should think they would take lots more pleasure in a dress, and not have to lead a dog's life, and they are al behind. A man said the other day he had beer laboring tugging to get a little ahead, and he wanted me to sell h place; finally I did consent to it. He said he had been ge $90.00 a month, and he had a son getting $60.00 a mo and a daughter getting $30.00 or thereabouts, and he "We have been working and tugging and yet we have n owned a place; the money just came and went, and it h been spent in the vanities of this world, that is the most has gone there, spent for things that are no good, somet that will benefit no one. But the money has gone, and n am going to buy a place. I have saved up $500.00 and pay you twenty-five or fifty dollars a month." Finally I le poor fellow have the place, and he jumped at the chance the man seemed to be so happy to think he had started o way to own a place.

Do you suppose - - well I never could have contented self or have taken any comfort, I never did, and here getting old, and I never could have felt easy if I had o nothing over my head. I always wanted to own a place so when old age came on, if I didn't want to do a day's w needn't, or if a rainy day came I could have somethi cover me. I always labored to that end; and every on have the same if they will do the same. Like that man, said, "I am going to stop paying out money for the vani the world, and I am going to save up until I have a h "Yes," I said, "don't spend a dollar for a thing that is n essary until your house is paid for." And so he has sta and is going in that direction, but I don't know how h turn out. But how much happier we are, nothing to w bout at all; the only thing is: Are we living strictly in ence to the heavenly commandment?

Beloved Brethren, may this wondrous story, the won future mapped out in the divine Record have such an ence on your hearts that it will cause you to no longer b formed to this world, but cause you to be transformed child of the living God, ready and prepared to pass the y gates, and with me in the soon coming day not only s reward of the righteous, but enter in and enjoy it, an possessor of it because we have been willing to be h now, happier in fearing the Lord. The Almighty made n take; we are happier when we are found living in obe to the truth, and cut loose from the pride and frivolous of the world. And thus we find recorded, happy is th happy is the woman that feareth alway; and the only we are not happy is because we are not cutting loos the things of the world, our mind is not staid on high more wondrous things.

May God help us to have these things fixed on our h never before, and then conversion will be the result.

"The law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul." can't be converted unless you listen to the gospel messa if you listen and take heed to it, it will convert you, and when you are converted you will be a happy man from that time on; yes, and from that time on you will live in more happiness than you could possibly get in the world.

May God help us to this end. I will now give way to Sister Hembree.

"CHRIST DIED FOR OUR SINS ACCORDING TO THE SCRIPTURES."

Extract of sermon by Rev. Maud Hembree.

Our lesson today is a wonderful chapter, and if you and I live out all this 6th chapter of Romans teaches, it will bring to us salvation. The apostle says, "Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we that are dead to sin live any longer therein?" The first death here spoken of is death to sin, yet all the religious world, when they read this, think it has reference to natural death. They do not understand the different deaths referred to in the Bible. There is first a natural death which comes as the result of mortality, because the human system wears out, or is destroyed by disease. People do not live to be as old now as in olden times when they understood better the laws of nature, but we had with us once an old gentleman who lived to be 93 years of age, when he died a natural death. Then in Eph. 2:1 Paul tells us we were dead in trespasses and sins. When you and I walked according to the course of this world, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind, we were dead in trespasses and sins.

In Col. 3 we will read of still another death: "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." The apostle is talking to those who are alive, so far as the natural life is concerned, but he says, "Ye are dead." Not in trespasses and sins, but they are dead to the world, dead to sin. Continuing, the apostle will tell how to die this death: "Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry: for which things' sake the wrath of God cometh upon the children of disobedience: in the which ye also walked some time, when ye lived in them. But now ye put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth. Lie not one to another, seeing ye have put off the old man with his deeds."

Any man who walks in any of these evils after coming under covenant to God, still belongs to the old man. In the Bible we find two men, representing classes, spoken of: the new man, composed of all the faithful; and the old man, composed of all the unfaithful. By turning to the Greek Lexicon we find the definition of the word "man" is generic, meaning either man or woman. It does not mean an individual man in either the English or the Greek, from which I was reading. In Dan.7:27 we read, "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him" — many in one, a multitudinous man; the new man. This is how the Bible speaks of this man; those who put away all wrath, anger, malice, etc.

In the 12th verse of Jude we read of a class who, after knowing the law and making a covenant to serve God, turn back to the weak and beggarly elements of the world and become dead in trespasses and sins the second time, therefore are said to be "twice dead." We have now given you four deaths: natural death; dead in trespasses and sins; dead to sin; twice dead; and now in Rev.21:8 we find still another death spoken of, the penal death, or as it is termed, "the second death," death because of transgressing God's law. Suppose a man is condemned to die in the electric chair, he does not die a natural death, but a penal death. So when we read Rom. 6 we must remember these qualifying terms.

All denominations, even the Christadelphians and Russellites, believe when they read the 3d verse of this chapter that it is Christ's literal death on the cross referred to, but go to the 10th verse and it will tell what death it is: "For in that he died, he died unto sin once." That is the death we must be baptized into, his death unto sin. We all have to die this death unto sin, for it says: "Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God." It was the Jewish rabble that put Christ to death on the literal cross, but this death to sin he had to die is just as we have to die, following in his steps.

You all know the old theory of the plan of salvation is that Adam brought upon humanity natural death because he transgressed God's law; but no, Adam's sin never brought natural death upon any one. Adam was mortal and would have died a natural death anyway; and so would we die a natural death whether Adam ever transgressed God's law or not. Go to John 8:51 and read what Jesus said, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death." Not that he would never see natural death, no, no; but when Jesus made this statement the Jews thought he meant natural death, and they said: "Now we know that thou hast a devil. Abraham is dead, and the prophets; and thou sayest, If a man keep my saying he shall never see death." He had no reference to natural death, but meant if they would keep his saying they should never taste penal death. Couple this with Rom. 6:23, "For the wages of sin is death." The penal death is the wages of sin, the wages the unfaithful shall receive at the Judgment; "this is the second death." Oh, the whole world is drunk on the fable the Old Mother put into the golden cup, that, because of Adam's sin, natural death was the penalty visited upon all mankind! But the wages of sin is death, and God never changed the wages.

In Matt. 20 Jesus tell us the kingdom of heaven is like unto a householder which went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard. Away back in the beginning of this day of salvation he was hiring laborers and putting them into this vineyard of the Lord, which, the prophet tells us in Isa.5:7, "is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plants;" and now, down in the eleventh hour of this day of salvation, near the end of the 6,000 years of man's probation, God is still calling men and women into this vineyard. When will they receive their wages? Not before they are judged. The Lord is more merciful than man, and he will never execute penalty upon a man before he is judged. And when will this Judgment take place? Says Paul, in II. Tim.4:1, "I charge thee before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, wh shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." It will take place at his appearing and kingdom. When he comes we shall receive one or the other of the rewards offered in his Word: eternal life on the one hand to the faithful; and eternal destruction, or death, on the other hand, to the unfaithful.

Says Rom.6:6,7, "Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin." It will not free you from sin to be carried up to Mt. Hope Cemetery and put in six feet of Mother Earth; but to die to sin will free you. Christ had to die to sin, and so does every member of this body of Christ, this new man, have to die with him: "For in that he died, he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." Now he is going to tell us how to die: "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof. Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin: but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God." For he says in the 16th v., "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?" Not sin unto natural death, but if you follow the ways of sin you will get penal death, "second death." "But God be thanked that, though ye were the servants of sin, ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness." These verses destroy the whole fabric of the faith of the churches. The only way to become free from sin is to obey from the heart that form of doctrine delivered unto us.

What a belief the churches have! They think we are condemned because Adam sinned, and then are redeemed from that condition becaused Christ lived a sinless life and died on a literal cross to appease the wrath of God because of Adam's sin. They claim we do not have to do one righteous act for salvation; Christ did it all for us. What a terrible doctrine they are following! But we are condemned because we sin, and are justified because we do righteousness.

In II.Pet. 3:15,16 we read that "our beloved Paul . . . hath written . . some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction." Why, if this were natural death Paul was talking about, even a little child could understand. The first thing almost, we learned there was natural death. Our grandfather, or our grandmother, or perhaps a brother or a sister died and we learned about natural death; and for my part I never knew of any other death until I learned this blessed truth. Well, it will not do to just skim over the surface, but we must get right down and believe what this Word says, -- instead of going to catechisms and commentaries of men. Paul gives us a rule by which we can know of which death he is speaking, which we find in I.Cor.2:13, "comparing spiritual things with spiritual." If Mr.Russell and the churches would heed this rule, when they read the Scriptures, they would see these spiritual things. They would not just see a natural man, but would see a wonderful, multitudinous man posed of all the faithful, and another multitudinous man posed of all the unfaithful. They haven't this spiritual di ment or they would not say it is literal death spoken Rom. 6 and many other places; and when they read bl Christ they would not think of the literal blood, but woul derstand that blood is used in metonymy for word.

I have no doubt this was the greatest task Brother N ever encountered in digging out truth, to get the strai these different deaths. We read in I.Pet.2:21, "For even unto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, ing us an example. that ye should follow in his steps" H not die as a substitute, but as an example of perfect obedi We can die to sin as did he, but we cannot change thi body; that he will do when he comes, will save us becaus have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine.

There are three classes in the Bible, two under cove one never enters into covenant. In Hos.6:7 it tells us, "T like Adam (margin) have transgressed the covenant." are under covenant, are not like the outside world, bu Adam have agreed to serve the Lord and have transgr the covenant. In speaking of this class in Rom.1:18 it "The wrath of God is revealed . . against all ungodlines unrighteousness of men who hold the truth in unrighteousn I want you to get this into your mind, for it is a quali term the Lord gives. In the 31st v. he says they are "cove breakers," and they know the judgments of God; there because they know them, they are inexcusable. Indign and wrath, tribulation and anguish will be visited upon who hold the truth in unrighteousness; "but glory, hono peace to every man that worketh good." But in the 12t he tells of a class that perish without law, outside the la those who come under covenant will be judged "in tha when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Chris "For as many as have sinned without law shall perish out law; and as many as have sinned in the law shall be ed by the law." All who sin without coming under God' the law of faith, shall perish without coming to the Judgm while those, both just and unjust, who come under God's will have to appear before the Judgment seat to render a count. How often people misquote the Bible in trying to p a false theory. When we bring out the Bible teaching those who are uninstructed "shall remain in the congreg of the dead" and never see light, they will say, "Why, said, 'All that are in their graves shall hear his voice and forth.'" There is no such passage to be found in the B but it does read, "For the hour is coming, in the whic that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come fo It is plainly qualified by the definite article "the." "All are in the graves," a certain class, shall come forth, whil rest who are found wandering out of the way of understan shall remain in the congregation of the dead. The fai sleeping dead shall have a glorious resurrection to life immortality. Having followed in the footsteps of Jesus, died to sin as did our Savior, they will gain the victory death and the grave, to live forever in His presence; whil unfaithful shall come forth to shame and contempt, to f go down to the second death and perish forever, becaus would not forsake their evil ways.

LOCAL NEWS.

Sunday morning, Sept 3d, our missionaries returned home from Asbury Park,N.J. , where their efforts met with singular success, inasmuch as during the four weeks' visit they left in that city 5,643 books. Being desirous of making another trip before Oct 1st, the natal day of our late beloved leader, Rev. L.T.Nichols, on which date all endeavor to gather home to pay loving tribute to his memory and life work, preparations were immedately in hand which would enable them to again leave home Sunday night, Sept. 10th, for a return visit to Cleveland, O., the Misses Eunice D.Ingham and L.May Flowerday journeying to Vermontville, Mich. , where resides Miss J.M.Wright, formerly from Hot Springs, Ark. , who for two years has kept up a regular correspondence with the friends to whom now the hospitable doors of her home in Vermontville are thrown open. We trust the visit may be mutually of an upbuilding nature and that as a result of visiting the surrounding towns and villages, which our Sisters propose doing, many may be enlightened and aroused to the importance of studying the God-given Chart, which alone will take any vessel into the haven of everlasting life and peace. From the keyboard of the "Harris Visible," on board the launch Megiddo, is ticked off from time to time news of considerable interest relating to the efforts and achievements of the launch's enthusiastic crew. Running to Cayuga Lake, the first stopping place was Cayuga, thence they moved to Union Spring, Aurora, and Kings Ferry, to which place Brother Thatcher and three other young men journeyed by automobile Saturday, Sept 9th, loaded with fruit and home made viands particularly palatable to the appetites of healthy, hardworking young men. About dusk, some six miles away from the launch, they recognized a familiar figure whose cap bore the name "Megiddo" and soon all were on their way to the boat. Supper being over the printer of the party prepared a poster to the effect that the "Megiddo Progressives" of Rochester would hold public meetings on Sunday at 3 and 7: 30 p.m. , in the Odd Fellows' Hall, to which all were cordially invited. Loading the instruments into the automobile, and as many passengers as space would permit, the rest of the party riding bicycles, they started out to Kings Ferry six miles distant from the landing place. On arriving they rendered songs and musical selections announcing the meetings for the following day. On Sunday afternoon, to a large and appreciative audience, the subject matter under consideration was, Hell and the Devil, the Death State and Resurrection, and in the evening, when about 200 came out, the chosen topic was, The Last Days.

The Presbyterian minister, who was present at the afternoon's service and who stayed to converse and ask questions during the time intervening between the services, seemed greatly impressed with the attitude of these brave defenders of the faith, expressing his surprise and enquiring of them the reason of their oneness of mind, when there exists, as he confessed, so many and varied opinions in the churches. The explanation given was to the effect that the beliefs of the day are not founded on the Bible, but are an outcome of the thoughts and imaginations of the heart of men which have, as Paul declared they would, turned them away from the truth to fables (2.Tim. 3:4); when, as the Bible declares, we must "all speak the same thing, and be perfectly joined together in the same mind and the same judgment." I. Cor.1:10.

At the conclusion of his own sevice he returned to hear from them again. Later news tells of splendid results of these meetings, of good sales and many experiences of real worth and interest. They are gradually working down to Ithaca, the last stopping places being Heddens and Meyers, where it was found necessary to send home for an express shipment of book.

Saturday, Sept. 2d, Brother Johnson and family arrived home from the Adirondacks, and on Sunday morning, after an absence of several months, were able with thanksgiving and gratitude to assemble again in the little church they so dearly love, and to whose music, until stricken with sickness, Brother Johnson was wont to contribute. Much as we would like to keep them with us, it is feared that our Brother's health may necessitate a long trip West for the winter months. But we are assured that Paul's words to his Roman brethren are just as applicable now as when penned, "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." Rom.8:28.

During the month of August, Brother Flowerday's automobile can be credited with having taken to the far-away rural districts the splendid total of 1,599 books. On one such trip they met and talked with a gentleman from whom they are in receipt of the following communication:

"Dear Brother in Christ: --- I have received the papers, for which I desire to thank you. As I look over my fields to see what the prospects are, I think you too are anxious to know what your labors are bringing forth. As no dead person enjoys flowers, I will hand you your bouquet while you are living by saying the literature has done us a world of good. There is no adulteration in those works for they are whole truths and some of them cause one to take a square look at oneself. Our neighbor, the sick lady, has been over to see us. She was very much impressed by your daughter's words. Now I hope to be able to send you a few dollars to help the work along for it is God's own work you people are doing . . . Pray for us that we may see clearly as you do.

G.F.B."

Other gleanings from the field may be of interest to our readers. "Long Beach, Calif. Dear Sir and Brother.

Sometime ago I sent for an assortment of your publications and after reading them I found them interesting and I have come to the conclusion they are truthful. I have been lending them around and sending them to friends, so that most of them have been lost or not returned, consequently I have decided to send for another supply, I am enclosing a list of what I desire and possibly I may send for a large supply later as I think they should be read by every preacher in America.

Yours for God's Kingdom on earth.

WHY ARE THE PEOPLE IN IGNORANCE OF TRUE BIBLE TEACHING?

By the late Rev. L.T.Nichols. January 13. 1907.

To realize we are indeed living in the dark, dark night, and the world are all unenlightened in regard to the great and wonderful plan and purpose of God, the alwise powerful Being! All the nations of the wide earth are wrapped in midnight slumber. And how full of gratitude our hearts should be to think and realize, yea, know that we have been awakened out of the deep, dreadful slumber, that sleep that carries all its sleepers into the great vortex of destruction; awakened out of this condition for the specific purpose of walking in obedience to the things that the day brings to light. In this day we are commanded to work. We are commanded not to slumber, but we are commanded to run in this race that is set before us. But in order to do this, we cannot expect to run if we are in the night; for he that would run in the night will stumble. The darkness will surround him, so that obstacles cannot be viewed: he cannot see them, consequently he will stumble headlong into ruin and destruction. But we are commanded to awake out of sleep.

You remember Paul was so anxious in reference to this matter that in the long, dark night of slumber, in which he predicted the world would be fast asleep, we find him declaring that we are to "awake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." "Awake!" is the commandment in the thirteenth chapter of Romans. Awake! arise! "Arise from the dead and Christ shall give thee light." For it cannot be expected in this slumbering condition - we needn't expect, as long as we are in this midnight darkness, that Christ will give us light. We must have the clarion note sounded in our ears and then it begins to awaken an interest in us, and it will begin to bring us out of slumber into the light of the morning, into the light of the wondrous day before us, into the day of salvation which will ultimately end in the saving of every one who will truly awaken; awaken for the real purpose and the only object of keeping in the day. No longer walk as others walk in the vanity of their minds; no longer walk as other Gentiles walk, as all nations walk in the vanity of their minds. There is a well guarded way marked out; there are those that are pointing out the way, and commanding for us to walk in it; and if we pay attention, and open our ears, and awake out of slumber in this midnight darkness by which we are surrounded, we can hear. Although, you remember, there is a commandment in Isaiah written for our instruction, which comes home to us.

He declared, "I heard the voice of the Lord saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me." And the answer came from the high and lofty God, "Go and tell this people, Hear ye;" but they are so wrapped in slumber that it is quite impossible to awaken most of them, and some will never awaken from their midnight slumber.

"And he said, Go and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not." He has given you a prediction foretelling what the results will be. If it was properly rendered it would read, "Go tell this people (preach to the people, make a declaration) Ye shall hear but will not understand." They will not take it to their heart; they will not depart from evil; and they say, We will not understand. It is not the idea that individuals cannot comprehend these wonderful truths, but they "see and understand not." What is the idea we are to get from it? If we let the Almighty place his own qualifying terms here, we wouldn't get ourselves into any difficulty. But if this text we have just called your attention to should be presented to all the ministers in the wide earth, they couldn't explain it to you; they could not give you any intelligent rendering of it. It would seem from the reading of it, if we had nothing else to guide us, that the Lord had closed their eyes.

It says, "Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes, lest they see with their eyes and hear with ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed." As though the Lord was going to cover the mighty gloom of darkness, and close the eyes of all nations so they couldn't see or understand! But, says the prophet, Ye will not understand, ye will not hear. I made a proclamation, I sent my prophets, rising up early and sending them, but ye would not hear. This is equal to the statement of our Master, "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life." (John 5:40.) They are the ones that understand not. Where is the understanding? It is not so obscure and intricate that they can't understand it, but it is that they will not depart from evil. They are shown the narrow way, but they will not walk in it. And thus, as we turn back to the prophet and let him explain it, it becomes easy to comprehend. Job 28:28, "And unto man he said, Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding." Yes, "to depart from evil is understanding."

Go and say, They will hear and will not understand; they will not depart from evil. That is what understanding is, which will cause us to reform and come in and conform to the law of God.

We are thankful that God, in presenting the narrow way of Truth, puts before them and says, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve," Our choice is to serve the Lord; but they choose the broad way. Their ears have become closed and their eyes are shut tight; and the result is the world is in midnight darkness. But there is something that causes this: we step back of the condition of the people, and the cause is presented in the testimony of the prophet when he calls our attention to this very fact; when he calls our attention and says there are those who love to slumber. We turn to the prophet and let the Almighty bloom it out and use the right term; he will tell us these sentiments clothed in the proper words; and it will be so easy to comprehend them.

"Declare this in the house of Jacob, and publish it in Judah, saying, Hear ye." Go and make a declaration; go and proclaim to the people the wondrous power of Me, the mighty and Everlasting One. Go and say something: "Hear now this, O foolish people," -- he introduces another phrase, -- a people that will not hear -- "and without understanding; which have eyes, and see not; which have ears, and hear not." Ah! they are foolish because they will not depart from evil; they have ears, but they hear not; and eyes, but they see not: -- all redundant; it comes back on them. They have eyes, but they see not; ears, but they hear not. It is not that the Almighty has given them ears, and then closed them so they cannot hear; but they are a foolish people. You will find one of these texts in the sixth chapter of Isaiah and the other in the fifth of Jeremiah. They have eyes, and they see not. Jer. 5:22, "Fear ye not me? saith the Lord: will ye not tremble at my presence, which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it; and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass it? But this people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart; they are revolted and gone." They would not listen. I made a proclamation, I performed on my side; I sent my prophets declaring to them, but they would not hearken. Why? because they are a revolting people, they have gone astray. They are in that condition, under the ban of the priests, under the ban of the clergy, under the ban of their rulers. Like begets like. The congregation will be like their teachers; and if the heads love to slumber, I tell you the congregation will be slumbering too. As the divine testimony declares -- and it gives us the qualifying terms -- they have a revolting heart; "they are revolted and gone." 24th verse, "Neither say they in their heart, Let us now fear the Lord our God." That is equivalent to saying, Don't let us fear the Lord our God. What does it say back there in the 28th of Job? He couples two things together. Yes, the fear of the Lord and understanding are put before us so conspicuously that we cannot mistake the idea; we cannot fail to understand; we cannot fail to see. If we open our eyes and our ears, you and I can see and view the wondrous Truth as it is in Jesus.

Job 28: 27,28, "Then did he see it and declare it; he prepared it, yea, and searched it out." Yes, the Great One has searched and found it out. "And unto man he said, Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding." Yes, to depart from evil; but they are a foolish nation, this wide world of ours are a foolish people. "Neither say they in their heart, Let us fear the Lord our God." They will not awake out of their lethargy; they love to slumber; and thus it declares in the 56th chapter of Isaiah. We find it recorded of this very class of individuals in these words: "All ye beasts of the field, come to devour, yea, all ye beasts of the forest. His watchmen are blind: they are all ignorant, they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber."

That is why, they have closed their eyes, they will not see; and the watchmen, they have done this, they are blind, all ignorant. Oh, to think! is this true that all the watchmen, the professed watchmen, are ignorant? It says so, and we find it fulfilled before our very eyes. As we look out into the unenlightened world, we find they are all ignorant of the grand plan and purpose of God. Their watchmen are blind, all ignorant, all dumb dogs, sleeping, fast asleep, lying down, loving to slumber. No wonder the cry came to us down from the apostolic times to awake out of sleep! "Awake thou that sleepest, . . and Christ shall give thee light." I do not wonder that such a proclamation came sounding out, when he declared and saw it in the prophetic language. He saw all nations would be asleep; they would apostatize and follow their watchmen, and they are all loving to slumber; -- and then they are D.D's. How appropriately they have applied D.D. to their name! for they are dumb dogs, loving to slumber. They don't want the wondrous light of Truth, they would rather lie down and slumber. And it says they love to slumber; they are lying down, asleep, blind; they are all ignorant, sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber; yea, that is not all, they are greedy. This shows you it has no reference to literal sleep; a man fast asleep is not greedy, he is lost and unconscious for the time being; but here is spiritual darkness, "spiritual wickedness in high places," spiritual slumber of children that have been led astray into the dark bypaths of the world, the unenlightened ways of the world, loving to slumber; hence he says, "They are greedy dogs which can never have enough, aed they are shepherds that cannot understand."

Oh, it says they are watchmen! they are shepherds! This is as the testimony says, they are professed watchmen; and it will tell us still further in reference to those that slumber. We go back farther and we find it recorded without any mistake: Isa. 29:5, "Moreover the multitudes of thy strangers shall be like the small dust." Paul declares they are "strangers to the covenants of promise," strangers to the wondrous light of heaven; they haven't been made acquainted with the wondrous truths of the Bible; and so he sounds out: "Moreover the multitude of thy strangers shall be like the small dust, and the multitude of the terrible ones shall be as the chaff that passeth away: yea, it shall be at an instant suddenly." 6th verse, "Thou shalt be visited of the Lord of hosts with thunder, and with earthquake, and great noise, with storm and tempest and the flame of devouring fire." "And the multitude of all the nations" -- here are the great masses of mankind, it is not only the ministers, not only the shepherds, not only the watchmen, but they have succeeded in wrapping all nations in the midnight darkness; they have caused all nations to be enveloped in the thick, murky night, until darkness prevails from one end of the earth even unto the other. As the prophet declares, darkness covers the earth. "Arise, shine; . . for darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the people." Isa. 60:1,2. Oh, a good reason why we should let this wondrous Truth shine out, inasmuch as the earth is covered with darkness. And he said to the mighty multitude, Isa. 29.8, "It shall be as when an hungry man dreameth, and, behold, he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and, behold, he drinketh; but he awaketh, and, behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetite: so shall the multitude of all nations be, that fight against mount Zion." 9th v.

"Stay yourselves a id wonder;" -- how appropriate! Oh, to think we can wonder! Is it not a wonder that they are all ignorant? When we look over the plain teachings of the Bible it seems as though someone would have stumbled on to them; but the Almighty says it is because they have a rebellious heart; they have ears, but they will not hear; they have eyes, but they will not see; they are a revolting people. The nations are a revolting people, they will not hear. But it declares, "Stay yourselves and wonder; cry ye out, and cry;" - go and proclaim, go and say to the nations, to the people that have ears and hear not, go and declare something in reference to them; they are all ignorant. I tell you, a man that will not come up honestly, and come to the Bible teachings and pore over its pages, and accept of the light of truth, you can make up your mind who he is: he is ignorant; he has closed his eyes and will not hear. "Stay yourselves and wonder; cry ye out, and cry; they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink."

This woman that sits on the scarlet colored beast, riding forth in the sea of nations, -- she is on a scarlet colored beast, red and gory in her pride, dressed in fine linen and purple, riding forth in her gorgeous array; and he says, Cry, she hath made all nations drunk on her wine. "Cry ye out, and cry; they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink." 10th ver. "For the Lord hath poured out on you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered." Yes, "For the Lord hath poured out on you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes; the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered." The prophets, the rulers, the seers, the watchmen and your shepherds, they are all ignorant. 11th ver. "And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, (they all tell you Revelation is a mystery, and it is become as the words of a book that is sealed) which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed."

They say, "I can't explain Revelation to you, it never was given for you to comprehend." The prophet declares there is a vail over their eyes, and the prophetic statements tell you the very condition the world would be in.

Now, I want to know what epoch of time he had reference to? This special epoch had reference to the 1260 years of darkness, when truth lay dead; or, as the historian says, when it was in "its seeming tomb." We'll turn over and see what condition we were in when the clarion note wa sounded forth in our ears. Daniel says, "When I heard the voice of his words, then was I in a deep sleep," (not one ray of light) and my face in the dust; when thy words came unto me "my face was toward the ground." (Dan. 10:9)

When the clarion note of Truth came, I was in a deep sleep, in midnight darkness of the world. How true! Can we not see when we first heard the truth we were in the midnight darkness, surrounded in the murky night, without a single syllable or glimmer of the wondrous light of heaven? Now said the prophet, When thy words came to me I was in a deep sleep, slumbering; but I want to know what special epoch of time this refers to? It refers to God's people in the latter days.9th v.

"Yet heard I the voice of his words: and when I heard voice of his words, then (when ? -- when I heard the voice his word) was I in a deep sleep, with my face toward ground." At the end of the long night of darkness some heard the voice of the living God and awoke, -- had the of their understanding enlightened. I am not going to stay tell you all about the eighth and ninth of Daniel today, I not time for that.

Daniel saw something; he had a vision of the time to co He says, "Yet heard I the voice of his words: and when I he his words then was I in a deep sleep on my face, and my toward the ground." 10th v. "And, behold, and a hand to ed me, which set me upon my knees and upon the palm my hands." At the time of the end, there is a time in wh God's people are represented as being on their knees and palms of hands, in a trembling condition. After hearing words of God, it took time to have our senses exercise know how to walk, to be able to discern between good evil. And now, said the angel to the beloved one, (Daniel nifies the beloved of the Lord, and it declares he was "a greatly beloved.") "understand the words that I speak thee, and stand upright; -- when he had spoken this word to me, I stood trembling -- for unto thee am I now sent." I come to cause thee to depart from evil. "I am come to m thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter da -- befall whom? Thy people. When? In the latter days. -- yet the vision is for many days;" or, it covers a long perio time.

From Daniel's day down to the present period, he said t would be a time they were wrapped in slumber and midn darkness; and said to you, away down in the latter days, when the words of Truth came to the beloved of the Lor found them fast asleep, with their faces earthward. The b ed one awoke, and looking heavenward for the knowl from above, (which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle easy to be intreated) stood trembling.

But the seers, the shepherds, the watchmen, they dec No, no; you needn't have any of those characteristics in just depend on the blood of Christ to be made clean, and will be whiter than snow, without this wisdom. "The fe the Lord is the beginning of wisdom: and to depart from is understanding;" (Prov. 9:10, and Job 28:28) but they you haven't got to have one those fruits to be saved. wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, tle, and easy to be intreated, full of mercy and good fru and if we have this wisdom dwelling within us, we'll be with good works.

And thus it declares, When this wondrous Truth came t it found me asleep; and he says this shall be for a peopl the latter days," in the great time of the end when the w is wrapped in midnight darkness; when, as Paul declar us, "They that sleep sleep in the night; and they that be dr en are drunken in the night. But ye, brethren, are not o night but of the day;" showing you it had no reference eral night, literal sleepers, nor literal darkness. Ye, bret are not of the night, but of the day. Every child of God onstrates, more or less, he has to go into Nature's repair and take a little sleep or slumber; but it is not that ki night, or sleep. Beloved brethren, it is not that at all, but ual slumber. And these dumb dogs love to slumber; they have said the Bible is sealed; all the seers and pastors and shepherds say it is sealed. They have closed their eyes so they cannot see; they have ears to hear, but they will not listen to the wondrous words of truth, and cry out to the wide world, they are all drunken, not with wine, but they are drunk upon the doctrines of the old Mother. And as we find the wondrous Truth being unfolded before us, it tells they are drunk on her wine. She calls on us to drink the old dregs, and Paul says they are drunk; and not only Paul, but Jesus, in his last letter, said this old woman had made all nations drunk on the wine of her fornication. God doesn't make them drunk, but he says, Go and proclaim to this people that they are drunk. God made them drunk, too, in another sense: He sends the wondrous Truth and blinds their eyes, "lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them." (Matt. 13:15.)

But, says Paul, The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not; that is the god that has blinded their eyes to the wondrous truth as brought forth in the Divine Record. And he says, "Moreover, brethren," -- what does our lesson start out with? "Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant," and he says they are all ignorant -- they are dumb dogs and shepherds and pastors of the world, drunk on the wine of the old Mother of harlots; they are all ignorant; and he says, "Moreover" -- besides what I have told you before, (in the previous chapter) "I keep under my body," --Oh, I want you to understand that "I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." And "Moreover" -- not only that, -- he says, I don't want you to be ignorant; about what? "how that all our fathers" -- away back, every child of God, all our fathers, every one, every true one-- I've been telling you about those that are drunk, and false watchmen and teachers, dumb dogs, loving to slumber, those of whom it is said when the book is handed to them that are learned, they say, I cannot read it because it is sealed; it is too deep for us to comprehend, and God never intended it to be understood; (and we find the apostle crying in our ears today, that such a state of things would exist, they all say this is the state and condition that should exist in the latter days, and we find it fulfilled to the very letter.) It makes the mighty truth gleam out with resplendent beauty and glory; it causes the real truths of the Bible to shine out to the unenlightened mind, and causes us to put our trust in the mighty God instead of the arm of man. "Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; and did all partake of the same spiritual meat;" - yes, "they did all eat of the same spiritual meat;" and I tell you, beloved ones, unless you eat this same spiritual meat, you will never have strength enough to awake out of slumber. It all depends on eating this meat; we must partake of this spiritual meat which all our fathers ate. I ate it, says Paul, and it is something for you to partake of; and all our fathers did partake of that meat that declares we must bring our bodies into subjection, lest when we have preached to others we ourselves should be a castaway. And he says, Moreover, brethren, I do not want you ignorant how that "all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." Yes, they were all enveloped in the night of darkness; they were found in the same condition as Daniel, in a deep sleep; but they were all made to eat the same spiritual meat, "and all drink the same spiritual drink: for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them, and that Rock was Christ."

Oh, it wasn't a literal rock that followed along, neither was it a literal Christ; but a spiritual Christ, and a spiritual Rock, Christ Jesus. That was the meat they all ate, the "same spiritual Rock that followed them, and that Rock was Christ." What Christ is that? The "I," the Truth, "the bread that came down from heaven, which if a man eat thereof he shall live forever;" that is the spiritual meat and drink you and I must drink of in order to be saved. But the world are what? They are all ignorant of the wondrous Truth; and as we look out, and go from place to place all over this benighted world, we find there is not a man enlightened. How veritably true is the Bible! and how we should press it to our heart! It is the only light to guide us in the narrow way, where so few travelers are found, -- so few in number, in the narrow way are found. And it declares unto us, "All our fathers did eat the same spiritual meat." But -- Oh consider! think of the next sentence! it almost makes my heart flutter! We have been found in midnight darkness, we have been made to eat of this spiritual meat, "But -- with many of them God was not well pleased!" Oh, to think! shall we fill that bill? With many of the enlightened ones God was not well pleased. Oh, how few! All the pastors and shepherds and teachers are ignorant; they all love to slumber, and are all out of the way. And then, under adverse circumstances, the clarion note is sounded to awake people to the wondrous light, and with many of the awakened ones God is not well pleased. How few! how few indeed! awake to righteousness and sin not. This is the commandment, to awake to righteousness and sin not. That is the reason, the great difficulty; but is not the wondrous prize sufficient? the grand, celestial glory of the good time coming? the very idea of the grand old prophet coming again? But we are the only people that know anything about his coming. You may travel the world over, and you will never hear such a sermon as this; you may travel from Dan to Beer-sheba and you will never hear a minister telling you about that testimony in Malachi 4:5, "Behold, I will send you Elijah the proppet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." You may travel from Dan to Beer-sheba and you won't find it taught, but the very thought! the very idea -- "I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. 6th verse. "And he shall turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to the fathers, (all our fathers ate the same spiritual food; and when the children are turned to the understanding of the fathers, they will eat that spiritual food) lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." I would like to know, if you and I were privileged to start out tomorrow, -- I would it was so, -- Elijah would knock at the door and say to this little band, I am he that sat under the juniper tree. I am he that was spoken of, that said, "I only am left, and they seek my life to take it away." I am he that passed over the river Jordan, and took off my mantle and smote the stream thereof and it piled up right and left, and my comrade and myself walked over on dry land. And we discoursed on the way, in the mighty wilderness of sin, -- the only two walking in the narrow way, while the vast, wide world lay engulfed in darkness; the only two conversing on the wondrous Truth. I am he, who said to Elisha, If thou seest me when I am taken away, then my mantle shall fall on thee, and thou shalt act in my place; and thou shalt preach the wondrous Truth I have left to thee in charge. This Elisha, the one who saw Elijah, and his mantle fell upon him, so that when he went back, and with the mantle parted the river and passed over dry shod, and began to tell the mighty world of these things. The grand old prophet Elijah is coming again; and if he comes, who would not be glad to hear him say, I am he that passed over the river Jordan with Elisha, and as we walked along, a mighty whirlwind enveloped me and I was taken up into heaven, lost to view; was borne away from Elisha, and he saw him no more. Oh, Elisha must have looked in wondering astonishment as he saw his comrade ascend higher and higher! The whirlwind carried him away until he was lost from view, no more to behold his lovely face until we, we Brethren, -- Oh what an honor! -- until we are permitted to awaken Elisha from death's slumber. And we will say, Here is the old prophet! The first time he will ever be permitted to view his face, will be through our instrumentality.

Oh, is it not sufficient! is it not worth while? It should be worth everything to us to have the divine prophetic statement fulfilled in us; for it declares to us, I don't want you ignorant "concerning them which are asleep, . . For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise."

Ah! the Lord himself shall descend with a shout, and when he comes the trump will have sounded, the dead be raised. And then he says we "shall be caught up together, . . to meet the Lord in the air." I.Thess.4:13 to 18.

Dont you see the dead are all raised when Christ comes? Oh, what an honor! And this is what will befall the people in the latter days: we'll have the honor and glory of not only awakening the nations, but the sleeping dead. Old Elisha will come forth, and we'll say, "Elisha, this is Elijah; do you recognize the old prophet?" Oh, how gladly he will grasp his hand! how fleetly he will step up to him and press him to his side! and he will say, "Elijah, I believed you would come again, and raise me from the dead." I think one such meeting will pay us for all we have ever done! to see them meet and greet one another, and see their joy. Oh, the joy it will bring to us, to think we had been the means of bringing the two old prophets together! Oh, the blessed privilege of viewing their face and beholding their joy and comfort! (The clock strikes 12.) My! how time gets away. Well, I am going to take this up tonight, right where I left off. I had enough mapped out for twelve sermons. I was just lost in these wondrous testimonies this morning; I didn't know when you came in to meeting. They were piling one on top of the other, and I haven't had an opportunity of bringing them up to you today. Well, Sister Hembree, you can talk for five minutes.

"I HAVE GIVEN YOU AN EXAMPLE, THAT YE SHOULD DO AS I HAVE DONE."

Extract of sermon by Rev. Maud Hembree.

If we were building a literal house and some one w come and tell us we were building on the literal sand an if we continued building the structure would go to destru how thankful we would be and what care we would exe if wise, to seek a solid foundation; but how carelessly about the building of this spiritual house, this house w silently building each day! How much more diligent we s be in building this house, for we have only one oppor to build it, only one life in which to perform the work! house is builded by wisdom, and Paul tells us in I. Co "Ye are God's building;" and in Heb.3:6 he says, "Ch a son over his own house, whose house are we." His bre are the house, God's building.

In this 13th chapter of John, our lesson, Jesus said, " left you an example, that ye should do as I have done you;" and then he adds, in the 17th v., "If ye know things, happy are ye if ye do the n." Jesus took wat washed the disciples' feet and wiped them with the towel with he was girded. Now, we ask, is this the literal feet meant we were to wash? I have told you before abo Dunkard meeting we once attended, where the women, i little bonnets and kerchiefs, were on one side of the c and the men on the other; a woman going round with and towel washed the feet of the women, while a man pe ed the same office among the men. Of course it was a form they went through, for they had previously w their feet at home, so they were perfectly clean. If Jesus the literal when he said, "I have left you an example, should do as I done to you," then we would wash one an literal feet; but we have learned from the Scriptures that literal feet-washing was not the example Jesus left one ought to know how to wash literal feet, and all w eternal glory will keep their feet clean and will not be washing another's feet if it becomes necessary; but we f feet that must be washed are the feet that the world nothing about. There are other than literal feet spoke the Bible, as we will find by turning over to I.Cor.12:1 as the body is one (not a literal body), and hath man bers, and all the members of that one body, being ma one body; so also is Christ." Ah! there are different m in this body, as the 14th v. says: "For the body is not on ber, but many." There are different members of th taken out in different epochs of time: Christ the Hea body and the others the different members of the bod there are feet, for he continues, "If the foot shall say, I I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefor the body? If the whole body were an eye, where were t ing? If the whole body were hearing, where were the s But now hath God set the members every one of the body, as it hath pleased him. And if they all were on ber, where were the body? But now are they many m yet but one body. And the eye cannot say unto the have no need of thee: nor again the head, I have no you. Nay, much more those members of the body, whi to be more feeble, are necessary." Yes, Christ the this body would never say to the feet, I have no need of you. The feet, those taken out in the last days, are very necessary to hold aloft the word of truth. "And," he says, "those members of the body, which we think to be less honorable, upon these we bestow more abundant honor; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness. For our comely parts have no need: but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honor to that part which lacked." Ah! there is a part of the body that lacks. But what do we lack? Last Sunday we had in our midst four blind people, three persons who had to be brought to church in wheel chairs, one a cripple, another enfeebled by age and disease, and another by sickness, and we have those who are deaf as well as those who are dumb. I think we lack something; we lack the power of healing, which the apostles had in olden times, the power to restore the sight of the blind, to cause the deaf to hear and the lame to walk. We lack the power to speak in tongues; we lack the power to raise the dead, as Lazarus was raised. Jesus delegated that power to his apostles, but it all passed away; the gifts of the Spirit ceased, "and now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three." Yes, only three remain; the gifts were to be taken away from the body, they would lack those, and only faith, hope and charity remain.

We walk by faith in this age, and you know Jesus said to Thomas, "Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed." There will be a greater blessing to those who walk by faith, for he is going to give more abundant honor to that part of the body which lacks. What a wonderful consolation! What virtue would there be anyway in believing, if you had to wait to see the dead raised? If we could go to Mt. Hope with the power to say to our sleeping leader, "Come forth," and he would stand before us as in former days, it would be an easy matter to believe.

In the 27th v. the apostle says, "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." But the old Mother and all her daughters think it was the literal body of Christ that hung suspended on the cross, when they read of the body of Christ. Paul, in speaking on this subject in Eph.1:23,24, says that Christ was given "to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body." There are many members in that body, and that body will have feet. In Heb. 10:10 we read that "we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." Every member of this body of Christ must die to sin. They must be as the previous verse expresses, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God." And by which will we are sanctified. Doing the will of God is what saved Christ, the head of the body, and we find that doing this same will is what is going to be the salvation of every member of the body. What is the body? "Now are ye the body of Christ, and members in particular." Oh, this is a wonderful thing, this body of Christ Jesus has qualified it and made it as plain as it could be made just what his body is, so there can be no doubt to those who are instructed. Every one of this body has to be sanctified by the word of truth.

When Jesus said to his disciples, in Matt. 5:29, "If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee," he had no reference to a literal eye. There might be a member of this body who could see, one with a good intellect, but if he will not walk in obedience, cast him from thee; for it were better to cast him off than that the whole body should be destroyed. You do not have to cut off your literal hand nor pluck out your literal eye, if they offend you, but even though it be one who can see the beauties of truth, we must cast him off, for all such will contaminate. Paul said in I.Cor.5:6, "Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump?" That is why Jesus said we are to cut off every member that offends. If they will not come into submission, cut them off, they will contaminate; there will be poison there. Oh, it is this lovely unleavened bread of sincerity and truth we must partake of; and all who will not eat must be cut off.

Paul said to his brethren, "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, ... shall inherit the kingdom of God." Don't you be deceived and think the unrighteous are going to inherit the kingdom of God; all such will never gain it. "And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." Ah! he says ye are washed. This is the washing that will avail, being washed in this word of truth, this Spirit of God ("My words they are spirit and they are life." -- Jno.6:63.).

The apostle was writing to his Corinthian brethren, and he said, "Such were some of you: but ye are washed, ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus." What does Romans 2:13 say? "For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified." What a consolation! Though you have done these things, you can wash and be clean, we find in Isa.1:13, "Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil." That is the kind of washing Jesus gave them an example to follow, and, if you follow this example and wash from all evil, though your sins have been as scarlet, they shall be white as snow. All we have to do is to cease to do evil and learn to do well, then we shall live through a glad song eternity. There will be no cutting off, because we have kept these wonderful commandments.

In Matt.5:19 we read, "Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven." We cannot break one of the least commandments. But from this rendering you might think such a one could squeeze in and be least in the kingdom. We have the Greek Testament here -- King James' give it, "He shall be called least in the kingdom," but the Greek reads, "He shall be farthest from the kingdom of heaven; he shall not attain unto it at all." Yes, he will be shut out and not attain unto the kingdom of heaven at all, unless he ceases to do evil. This is really wonderful, to find this reading that such a one shall not attain unto it at all, because the author of this Testament did not believe we had to keep every commandment for salvation. The next verse conveys the same mighty truth, "For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." There are plenty of scribes and Pharisees around, I mean those who make a profession of religion as they did in the days of Jesus, but if you do not wash up and keep this body clean, and have your righteousness exceed theirs the kingdom of heaven will never be your portion.

Now with these testimonies in our mind we should be ready to read John 13 intelligently. I believe Jesus really took water and literally washed the feet of the apostles, but there was a lesson to be taught; for when Peter said to him, "Lord, dost thou wash my feet?", Jesus answered and said unto him, "What I do thou knowest not; but thou shalt know hereafter." If it had been literal feet washing, would Jesus have said, "What I do thou knowest not; but thou shalt know hereafter"? You do not now understand, he said, but you shall know hereafter what the dirt on the feet is. He knew that Judas was going to betray him and be taken away, therefore he said, "Ye are not all clean;" and, also, that down in the feet of the body there would be some dirt to be washed away. So after he had washed their feet, and had taken his garments, and was set down again, he said unto them, "Know ye what I have done to you? Ye call me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am. If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." He had washed their feet, had labored and reproved and warned them in order to get them to become cleansed. He says, I have given you an example of how to cleanse the body; had told them if the right eye offend they were to pluck it out, and, knowing Judas was going to offend, he showed how they were to cleanse the evil out of the body.

"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." Not happy because you wash the literal feet, but because you get rid of the dirt and filth of the body. And how do we become cleansed? In John 15:3, Jesus tells us, "Now ye are clean thru the word which I have spoken unto you." This word is the water we must cleanse in, and it is the water Jesus told the woman of Samaria would be in all who partake "a well of water springing up into everlasting life." (Jno.4:14).

Now that I have instructed you and you know these things, said Jesus, "happy are ye if ye do them." Not happy to get down and wash literal feet, but what that represents. A child could learn to wash literal feet, yet that would not make it happy, but Jesus carried the lesson right down to the feet of the body that would have to be cleansed, and told them they were not to become weary in well doing. Down in this time of the end, in the feet of the body, we have not the gifts of the Holy Spirit, that is the part we lack; but we have this Word, this water of life, in which we may wash and be clean.

In Rev. 3 Jesus is teaching the same wondrous truth. He says, beginning with the 2d v., "Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou not shalt know what hour I will come upon thee. Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white, for they are worthy." Those who know the times and seasons will be watching, and upon them Jesus will not come as a thief; they shall walk with him in white because they are worthy, because they have not defiled their garments. It is not our literal garments, we know, for our literal garments become soiled at our work, but it is the robe of righteousness, "the fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints" (Rev. 19:8). "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father and before his angels." Oh, what would you give to have Jesus confess your name in that wondrous day? But it will be only those who wash and become clean. This was written down in the time of the end, for the "generation to come," and he says, "Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown."

Jesus does not want lukewarm beings, moving along like snails in this work, but he wants those who are all warm in this wondrous way of truth; he wants them to have their zeal directed by knowledge. He says, "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent." For all those who wash and become clean, he will have a wonderful supper, a glorious feast, for he said he would eat no more with them until he ate anew in the kingdom of God. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." I have showed you how to walk, he says, I have given you an example to do as I have done, to overcome as I have overcome; so if you will do this you will be permitted to sit with me on my throne, to rule and have dominion with me through the endless ages of eternity.

LOCAL NEWS.

With the shortening of the days we realize the rapid flight of Time, for but as yesterday we were welcoming spring, who came with her power of resurrection to life and her wonderful beauteous adornment, which now, touched with the finger of autumn, are being seared and turned to sombre shades of amber, red and gold, reminding us that sooner or later all things must be brought under the law of displacement. Even material riches may be amassed, worldly fame and renown much courted and sought after, attained, but these cannot grant perpetuity of existence. Nothing abides but character, a holy life, a new creature; these are more enduring than all other distinctions, for worldly knowledge and attainments benefit humanity for but a short space of time. They are of such short duration and all efforts and strenuous endeavors of the wise and good to establish reforms and bring about a better state of affairs politically, socially and morally are frustrated by those who accrue wealth or some other selfish advantage or profit from the existence of these same evil systems, knowing that the earth will be cleansed and purified when Christ reigns to establish his Kingdom of which there will be no end. Isaiah, the prophet, divinely inspired, referring to this wondrous time declares, "The lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day. In that day a man shall cast his idols of silver, and his idols of gold, which they made each one for himself to worship, to the moles and to the bats: to go into the clefts of the rocks, and into the tops of the ragged rocks, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth." -- Isa.2:11,20, 21. Dear reader, whoever it may be, stop! look! listen! Jesus says, "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." Luke 21:34,35. The world passeth away with its knowledge, its fame and its glory, but, says the Divine writer, "He that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."

Saturday evening, Sept. 23d, the joy of home coming was again experienced at the Mission, when, after an absence of four weeks, we welcomed home the "Progressives," who have been operating our Mission yacht, "Megiddo," on the east shore of Cayuga Lake. Their stopping places were Cayuga, Union Springs, Aurora, Kings Ferry, Lake Ridge, Heddens, Meyers, Ludlowville and Ithaca. From these places, by the aid of bicycles, the young men every day covered many miles of country roads and have been instrumental in creating an interest in the much neglected, but greatest of all books — the Bible. At several of the above mentioned places the "Progressives" held public meetings, which were well attended by interested and appreciative audiences. Through the courtesy of Mr. W.T.Jordan, of Lock Berlin, they were enabled on their homeward journey to hold a public meeting in the hall which was the property of this gentleman, which he not only placed at their disposal, but had previously announced the meeting with the result that the hall was well filled; the young men attending and proving conclusively from the Bible that "Good Works are Necessary to Salvation." A year ago Mr. Jordan purchased a set of the publications when the yacht was on one of its missionary journeys, of which in the meantime he has made quite a study. On their outward journey to Cayuga this gentleman again hailed the unique craft when passing through one of the locks, requesting of its occupants some musical selections, but, as the shades of evening were drawing on apace and they were disirous of covering a certain number of miles, they sang to guitar accompainment those inspiring, well known words, "Have Faith in God." Mr.Jordan requesting them to notify him in good time of their intended return, which they did, with the above gratifying results that will long be remembered. Reviewing the trip we cannot but conclude it was a very satisfactory one, for, whether the meetings were indoors or on the shores of the lake, as they were in some instances, there were always those who expressed their thanks and gratitude that their attention had been called to what before they had not realized the importance of. The total number of books left in the district of Cayuga Lake was 4,676.

As encouraging evidence that their efforts are not in vain, Brother Simmons has received the following communication from a gentleman in Fulton, N.Y.:

"Dear Friend, — Was glad to receive your most welcome letter and hope you and your friends are in good health. I have been taking every opportunity to study the books and I tell you I never got anything better in my life, I have had many talks with people of different denominations since you were here. One man said it cleared up a lot of mysteries for him. I like to hear them say that. I have talked with the minister you visited but I am of the opinion he does not know half what he believes; I never did. It is shocking how they cling to certain verses and never think of looking for an explanation. One man I talked to believes every sinner will burn forever and ever and never die or be consumed. I feel very sorry for all such. I shall be sending shortly for another supply of books. Wish you could have been here longer, I never had so good a time in all my life. Should be glad to hear from you often. Write about anything pertaining to your work.

Yours truly, P. O."

While rejoicing over the returned and the narration of their varied experiences and adventures we would not forget the efforts of those who are still absent in the field, but who we expect by the date of present issue will have returned to our midst, when we hope for a short season to enjoy the pleasure of unbroken association so seldom afforded. They write from Cleveland, O., in a very hopeful, encouraging strain of the progress of the work being carried on in that city and adjacent towns and villages, two of our workers mentioned having visited homes for 11 miles on the state road to Akron, O., and felt greatly repaid by the number of intelligent, interested people they met and conversed with on the soon coming Kingdom of God and the condition of the world which is fast ripening for destruction. Not literal destruction, but destruction of all sin and sinners. They met here and there those who are convinced that it will take a mightier power than that of man's to bring this world into subjection, and to subdue its warring nations. To such they unfold with gladness God's wonderful plan of salvation, which will, though men deride and ignore, be fulfilled to the very letter. Total of books for week ending Sept. 23d, 2,700.

A lady in Santa Paula, Calif., thus expresses herself:

"Dear Sir, — In 1908 there came to my door a lady canvassing your religious works. I purchased three and after reading them was interested in the way you explained the Scriptures and thought I would get more later. That same fall I left the city, met other conditions in life and did not get them sent for. The other day in looking through a trunk I found the books and now will you kindly send me a list of all your publications?"

This was done and a few days ago this lady sent in an order for over nine dollars' worth of books to be sent to Canadian addresses. As we sent them on their way, silent messengers to convey the good news of God's saving truth, it was with the fervent desire they would accomplish that whereunto they were sent.

We are now able to credit a gentleman living in Boise, Id., with having sent for seven dollars' worth of books on the "Sabbath." We trust the efforts of this friend may be richly rewarded.

Mr. and Mrs. H.A.Bates, recently of Pomona, Calif., are staying in Stephens City, Va., endeavoring to interest their friends, and all who will listen, in the way of truth and salvation. They write reassuringly that their time has not been spent in vain. Mr. and Mrs. Bates are intending to make Florida their home, climatic conditions being more favorable to Mr. Bates' delicate health.

Our "out door" preacher, Mr. Wade Helmar of Dayton, O., sends for another supply of books and recounts experiences of interest and opposition which will, in every God-fearing heart, cause the light of truth to shine more clearly; for the Bible rule is to compare spiritual things with spiritual, but as Paul declares, "The natural man receiveth not the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

A MONTHLY PUBLICATION DEVOTED EXCLUSIVELY TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF THE DIVINE PURPOSE AND PLAN

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:16, 17) and the ransom (1 Tim. 2:5, 6) are the things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (1 Pet. 1:10-12; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; Heb. 12:28) is the theme of the Bible (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16) and Lord of lords, with whom a small number will be associated as joint-heirs in the government of the world (Rev. 5:10); the restoration of [illegible] (Acts 3:19-21); the resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust (Acts 24:15), and eternal life only to the righteous (1 Cor. 15:53); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 38) and eternal life only to the righteous (Rom. 6:23); and eternal life only through Jesus Christ, who is the ransom-price given (John 3:16; Rom. 5:21). Also an understanding of the present work of God in the gospel age (Rom. 12:2; 1 Pet. 1:14-16), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as a consecration to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to make our calling and election sure (2 Pet. 1:5-8, 10; 3:18); and all other truths of the things pertaining the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

THE EASTERN QUESTION; ITS RELATION TO ARMAGEDDON

Concluded

In 1798 Napoleon obtained the consent of the French assembly to take his army into Egypt. He met with but slight resistance on the part of the Mamelukes (the ruling class), who, after pushing at him as the prophecy had stated, retired up the Nile, leaving him in possession of all of lower Egypt. The flood season prevented further operations in that direction at once, so he entered upon the conquest of Palestine and Syria. His success aroused the English, who became suspicious that their interests in India and the far East might be seriously interfered with. The territory in which Napoleon was operating at this time belonged to Turkey, which nation held almost identically the same territory formerly known as the kingdom of the north. England immediately set to work to arouse Turkey from her lethargy to the defense and possible recovery of her provinces. This England succeeded in doing; and, aided by England and Russia, Turkey (now king of the north) sent an army like a whirlwind against Napoleon. Before this onslaught the French arms could not stand, and Napoleon was compelled to raise the siege of St. Jean de Acre and beat his first retreat. French prestige was broken, and the decline of that nation's power was only eclipsed by the humiliation of their brilliant leader, who passed his last days in exile on the island of St. Helena.

The close of this conflict left Turkey (king of the north) standing in all these lands, for even Egypt did not escape, but he had power over her treasury, as Turkey continued to receive tribute from that nation. And in the greater part of the territory of the kingdom of the north, with his capital still at Constantinople, holding the glorious holy land, and Jerusalem, the city of the great King, stands Turkey today to complete the prophetic record written for her, which is as follows:

"But tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him; therefore he shall go forth with great fury to destroy, and utterly to make away many. And he shall plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him" (Dan. 11:44, 45).

It is evident that the tidings out of the east and out of the north which shall trouble Turkey must come from other nations. As stated before, Turkey holds in her possession advantages which no nation of Europe is willing another should possessed. The city of Constantinople, with its surroundings, is viewed with envy by them all as a prize greatly to be desired. Russia above all other nations, especially during the last two centuries, has been seeking to gain possession of that city and adjacent territory in order to control the narrow waterway leading from the Black Sea into the Mediterranean. Possessed of a vast territory to the north, with almost inexhaustible resources and a population exceeding that of any other nation of Europe, Russia has been handicapped in one respect. In all her vast area she possessed no open winter port. This prevented her becoming a naval power. But could she get possession of all the country surrounding the Black Sea and its outlet she would have a safe retreat in which she could build unassailed (because the approach to it would be guarded by her own forts) a fleet which would at once place her in the forefront of nations, and put in her hands the balance of power. Russia has made repeated efforts to carry out her purpose, but only to be checked by the powers of Europe.

Thus Russia (the great bear) has for hundreds of years crouched in these north parts and manipulated with her right paw about the Black Sea for an outlet. Repeatedly defeated in that direction, she began to stretch her left paw out across Siberia to the Pacific, desiring to obtain there what she had been seeking to the south. In this effort she accomplished the marvelous engineering feat of building a railroad across about 5000 miles of almost unknown wilds, and established the port of Vladivostock on the Pacific. Valuable an acquisition as this is, yet still it is icebound for several months of the year. She then began by intrigue or otherwise to encroach upon China and creep down the coast of the Pacific into warmer waters. At this point came another remarkable fulfillment of prophecy. Joel had said with reference to this closing conflict that the heathen should be wakened up; and John states that the kings of the east are to take part in the final battle of Armageddon.

For centuries the eastern nations of China, Japan, Korea and to some extent India had slumbered peacefully behind locked doors, satisfied with their own attainments. The western nations knocked in vain for admittance. At length the sleepers began slowly to arose; and, opening their eyes, they discovered that the west had marched on in the path of progress and left them far behind. Cautiously they opened their doors and the foreigners one by one slipped in, and thus intercourse was established between the east and the west. The prophecy had said the heathen shall be awakened up, and the process had begun.

Japan was the leader in recognizing the benefits and advantages of western civilization, and she sent scores of her young men into these countries, there to be educated and to return, bringing with them a knowledge of the arts, sciences, inventions and methods of warfare of each; thus seeking to gather to herself the wisdom and advancement of them all.

But Joel also said: "The weak shall say I am strong." The world looked on with wonder as they saw the little, weak, obscure nation of Japan cast aside her slumber robes, clothe herself with the garments of a modern warrior, and shake her mailed fist in the face of her colossal neighbor. War in the east followed, and Japan carried her conquest almost to the heart of China, planting her banners throughout the province of Manchuria and finally on the walls of Port Arthur.

Russia now stepped in and by diplomacy wrested from Japan a considerable portion of her spoils, including Port Arthur. In the possession of that place she obtained what she had been seeking ,to wit: an open port, which was also a stronghold and strategic point in the far East, but little inferior to that of Constantinople in the near east.

But the world was still more astonished by what followed. Japan again arose in her assumption of strength and attacked Russia. In the war which followed she recovered by force of arms from that nation all Russia had so recently gained by diplomacy. In the battles and marches which ensued she drove the Russian soldiers over the same ground over which she had just before driven the soldiers of China, retaking the same strongholds and finally recapturing Port Arthur. Surely Japan has awakened and has said: "I am strong."

China is following in the wake of Japan, and her movements are apparently more rapid than were those of that nation. One writer recently said: "The change which China has wrought in a decade equals that of a century in any other nation."

India is arising and shaking from herself the stupor of centuries.

But the prophetical statement, "Let the weak say I am strong," has again been illustrated in the Balkan war. Think of the attitude of independence assumed by the federation of the little Balkan states toward the great powers of Europe. Think of the threat of Bulgaria when she stated that she would defy the powers should they attempt to dispossess her of any of the territory she had already acquired or attempt to prevent the accomplishment of her purpose. Indeed, the week are saying "I am strong," and all are arming for the conflict.

But the wounding of the left paw of the great northern bear in the far East and the awakening of those nations, causing them to stand for their rights and the integrity of their territory, has made much more difficult the accomplishment of Russian designs in the far East, and has caused that nation once more to throw her force and power into the right paw and look again toward the Bosphorus through the Slavonic elements of that region. In the meantime changes have taken place in Europe which seem favorable to Russia. The rising power of Germany, her ambition to be second to none even on the sea, has made friends of three old-time enemies—England, France and Russia—thus forming the triple entente, and these three now stand like a great tripod over Germany in an alliance to check her rising aspirations. Over against these we have the triple alliance, composed of Germany, Prussia and Italy. As a result England no longer feels it so much her bounden duty to oppose Russia in her designs on the Turk.

But the prophecy says: "He (the Turk) shall go forth with great fury to destroy and utterly to make away many." This language indicates that something will cause great wrath on the part of the Turk, and he will enter upon a war of extermination, in the midst of which he will transfer his seat of government to Jerusalem; and, receiving no help, he will there come to his end. Rev. 16:12 tells us that the waters of the great river Euphrates will be dried up. Waters, as a symbol, stands for kindreds, nations, tongues and people (Rev. 17:15). This is symbolic language, and means that the nation occupying the countries drained by that river will gradually cease to be a power, by the loss of its people and territory. Rivers do not dry up suddenly, neither do great nations lose their power in a day. That this drying-up process is going on with Turkey is clearly shown by the following facts. She lost Algeria and Greece in 1830; Servia, Rumania, Montenegro and Cyprus in 1878; Tunis in 1881; Egypt in 1882; Crete in 1898; Eastern Rumelia with Bulgaria and Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1908; Tripoli in 1911.

April 1, 1913, as a result of the Balkan war, still in progress, all her territory in Europe has been taken except a narrow strip including Constantinople, and even this is hard pressed by the allies.

Surely the drying up is rapidly going on. But this is not all. The nation itself is divided into factions who are antagonistic to each other. At the very heart of the government we see the Young Turk party, which is opposed to the faction loyal to the old sultan. In various localities are persons who claim to be the legitimate successors of Mohammed and demand the obedience of the faithful. Some of these have quite a large following. Again the mass of Mohammedanse have no love for the Turk. All these things, together with the attitude of the nations of Europe toward him, are driving him to desperation. Nothing can unite all these factions among the Mohammedans excepting the declaration of a holy war, a war of extermination of their enemies. Under the fanatical influence of such a movement we would see all these unite and go forth with great fury, throwing themselves with perfect abandon into the very jaws of death, for they art taught that all who fall in a holy war have a sure passport to paradise. That this measure will be resorted to by the Turk is quite clearly indicated in the present trend of events. In fact, this step has been urged more than once by the religious leaders among the Mohammedans.

Driven from Europe, with the loss of Constantinople as his capital, to what point would he naturally go? The war having assumed a religious character, the city of Jerusalem becomes a more important point that any other city in the world. For in the eyes of both Christians and Mohemme-

dans it is esteemed emphatically the "holy city," "the city of the great King," and destined finally to be the capital of the whole world. While it is evident and generally understood that the Turk will go to Jerusalem, it is equally certain that the nations will follow him thither. They will not be content to leave him in possession of the holy city, a prize which the Christian nations have coveted for years and for the recovery of which the Crusades, costing thousands of lives and millions of dollars, were organized and carried on.

The pope of Rome has recently suggested that the time has come when the holy grail should be rescued from the Turk's impious hands.

According to prophecy, in the final effort against the Turks in the taking of the holy city all the nations of the earth are to be involved. There are three verses of scripture which speak of the final overthrow of the Turk. These are Rev. 16:12; Zech. 14:1-3; and Dan. 11:45. These texts state positively that the Turk will move his seat of government to Jerusalem, that all nations will be gathered against that city, and that the city will be taken, that the Turk will come to his end, for none shall help him.

Always some power has been ready to step in and assist him, but in the way now in progress the Turk has appealed again and again to the powers for help, and no one has responded thus far. On the contrary, there seems to be but little objection to the idea of his being driven from Europe. And so far as his possessions in Asia are concerned the massing of troops by Russia in the Trans-Caucasus has revealed to Europe the fact that Russia has her eyes set on Armenia. And while Germany has been loud in shouting for the integrity of Asia Minor, yet it transpires that she has almost acquired the control of Anatolia, and the Russian press is now charging Germany with duplicity in this matter.

If the nations are not willing to help the Turk to retain his footing in Constantinople, but are willing to invade his Asiatic possessions, they certainly are not willing to assist him in retaining Jerusalem, and if not in Jerusalem then no place on earth at all; and the Turk must go, not from Europe only, but from the whole world; "and he shall come to his end, and none shall help him. And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great Prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, everyone who shall be found written in the book. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth, shall awake, some to everlasting life and some to shame and everlasting contempt" (Dan 11:45; 12:1, 2).—R. S. Owen. Selected by Sister McIlrath.

JOY

"The Joy of the Lord is Your Strength" (Nehe. 8:10)

There is a vast difference between levity and joy. Joy is gladness, exultation; levity is a want of seriousness.

Notice the order in which the apostle Paul enumerates the fruit of the spirit: "But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance" (Gal. 5:6). Observe, he does not say "fruits," but "fruit," so then all the above are necessarily of the same species of family, so to speak. They do not differ in quantity, but rather in their manifestation. All these spring from and have their root in love. Hence we see another reason why love is the principal thing.

James says: "But the wisdom (or love) that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocricy." Very much in the same order as Brother Paul arranges them.

Few people really understand what joy means or rather is; we confuse it with laughter. If you take a good concordance and look under the words "laugh," "laughed," "laugheth," "laughing" and "laughter" we think you will be surprised, smile more and laugh less. If you will notice the context to each of these references I think you will think twice before you indulge in laughter or levity. Notice the first place the word "laughter" is used in scripture is in Gen. 18:13. God asks this question after making a promise to Abraham: "Wherefore did Sarah laugh?" We all know what the laugh of derision is. So does God. Our Lord said: "Woe unto you that are full, for ye shall hunger; woe unto you that laugh now, for ye shall mourn and weep." David, speaking of this same class, says: "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; the Lord shall have them in derision." When God laughs it is always when his enemies are discomfited. James exhorts all to "Draw nigh to God, and to let our laughter be turned to mourning." We see there is a great difference between joy and laughter. Laughter usually results and is caused by the ludicrous actions of another; joy comes as the result of knowledge acquired respecting what God intends to do for us in the kingdom.

The clearer our knowledge is of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ, the greater becomes our joy, the stronger our love is to God and his dear Son, the more ardently we will serve him. Joy always follows service.

Paul and Silas, after having many stripes laid upon them, their feet made fast in stocks within the inner prison at midnight, prayed and sang praises unto God; "and the prisoners heard them." This is what joy did for Paul and Silas. Now notice what joy did for the one whom Paul so faithfully followed: "Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of faith; who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

It is said that Christ was never known to laugh. I believe this; it would be characteristic of his whole life and deportment. The record is that he was holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners. He never walked in the counsel of the ungodly; none ever found him standing in the seat of the scornful. He was despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; we hid, as it were, our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet we did him esteem him stricken, fits and advantages of western civilization, and she sent scores of her young men into these countries, there to be educated and to return, bringing with them a knowledge of the arts, sciences, inventions and methods of warfare of each; thus seeking to gather to herself the wisdom and advancement of them all.

But Joel also said: "The weak shall say I am strong." The world looked on with wonder as they saw the little, weak, obscure nation of Japan cast aside her slumber robes, clothe herself with the garments of a modern warrior, and shake her mailed fist in the face of her colossal neighbor. War in the east followed, and Japan carried her conquest almost to the heart of China, planting her banners throughout the province of Manchuria and finally on the walls of Port Arthur.

Russia now stepped in and by diplomacy wrested from Japan a considerable portion of her spoils, including Port Arthur. In the possession of that place she obtained what she had been seeking ,to wit: an open port, which was also a stronghold and strategic point in the far East, but little inferior to that of Constantinople in the near east.

But the world was still more astonished by what followed. Japan again arose in her assumption of strength and attacked Russia. In the war which followed she recovered by force of arms from that nation all Russia had so recently gained by diplomacy. In the battles and marches which ensued she drove the Russian soldiers over the same ground over which she had just before driven the soldiers of China, retaking the same strongholds and finally recapturing Port Arthur. Surely Japan has awakened and has said: "I am strong."

China is following in the wake of Japan, and her movements are apparently more rapid than were those of that nation. One writer recently said: "The change which China has wrought in a decade equals that of a century in any other nation."

India is arising and shaking from herself the stupor of centuries.

But the prophetical statement, "Let the weak say I am strong," has again been illustrated in the Balkan war. Think of the attitude of independence assumed by the federation of the little Balkan states toward the great powers of Europe. Think of the threat of Bulgaria when she stated that she would defy the powers should they attempt to dispossess her of any of the territory she had already acquired or attempt to prevent the accomplishment of her purpose. Indeed, the week are saying "I am strong," and all are arming for the conflict.

But the wounding of the left paw of the great northern bear in the far East and the awakening of those nations, causing them to stand for their rights and the integrity of their territory, has made much more difficult the accomplishment of Russian designs in the far East, and has caused that nation once more to throw her force and power into the right paw and look again toward the Bosphorus through the Slavonic elements of that region. In the meantime changes have taken place in Europe which seem favorable to Russia. The rising power of Germany, her ambition to be second to none even on the sea, has made friends of three old-time enemies—England, France and Russia—thus forming the triple entente, and these three now stand like a great tripod over Germany in an alliance to check her rising aspirations. Over against these we have the triple alliance, composed of Germany, Prussia and Italy. As a result England no longer feels it so much her bounden duty to oppose Russia in her designs on the Turk.

But the prophecy says: "He (the Turk) shall go forth with great fury to destroy and utterly to make away many." This language indicates that something will cause great wrath on the part of the Turk, and he will enter upon a war of extermination, in the midst of which he will transfer his seat of government to Jerusalem; and, receiving no help, he will there come to his end. Rev. 16:12 tells us that the waters of the great river Euphrates will be dried up. Waters, as a symbol, stands for kindreds, nations, tongues and people (Rev. 17:15). This is symbolic language, and means that the nation occupying the countries drained by that river will gradually cease to be a power, by the loss of its people and territory. Rivers do not dry up suddenly, neither do great nations lose their power in a day. That this drying-up process is going on with Turkey is clearly shown by the following facts. She lost Algeria and Greece in 1830; Servia, Rumania, Montenegro and Cyprus in 1878; Tunis in 1881; Egypt in 1882; Crete in 1898; Eastern Rumelia with Bulgaria and Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1908; Tripoli in 1911.

April 1, 1913, as a result of the Balkan war, still in progress, all her territory in Europe has been taken except a narrow strip including Constantinople, and even this is hard pressed by the allies.

Surely the drying up is rapidly going on. But this is not all. The nation itself is divided into factions who are antagonistic to each other. At the very heart of the government we see the Young Turk party, which is opposed to the faction loyal to the old sultan. In various localities are persons who claim to be the legitimate successors of Mohammed and demand the obedience of the faithful. Some of these have quite a large following. Again the mass of Mohammedanse have no love for the Turk. All these things, together with the attitude of the nations of Europe toward him, are driving him to desperation. Nothing can unite all these factions among the Mohammedans excepting the declaration of a holy war, a war of extermination of their enemies. Under the fanatical influence of such a movement we would see all these unite and go forth with great fury, throwing themselves with perfect abandon into the very jaws of death, for they art taught that all who fall in a holy war have a sure passport to paradise. That this measure will be resorted to by the Turk is quite clear, indicated in the present trend of events. In fact, this step has been urged more than once by the religious leaders among the Mohammedans.

Driven from Europe, with the loss of Constantinople as his capital, to what point would he naturally go? The war having assumed a religious character the city of Jerusalem becomes a more important point that any other city in the world. For in the eyes of both Christian and Mohemme-

dans it is esteemed emphatically the "holy city," "the city of the great King," and destined finally to be the capital of the whole world. While it is evident and generally understood that the Turk will go to Jerusalem, it is equally certain that the nations will follow him thither. They will not be content to leave him in possession of the holy city, a prize which the Christian nations have coveted for years and for the recovery of which the Crusades, costing thousands of lives and millions of dollars, were organized and carried on.

The pope of Rome has recently suggested that the time has come when the holy grail should be rescued from the Turk's impious hands.

According to prophecy, in the final effort against the Turks in the taking of the holy city all the nations of the earth are to be involved. There are three verses of scripture which speak of the final overthrow of the Turk. These are Rev. 16:12; Zech. 14:1-3; and Dan. 11:45. These texts state positively that the Turk will move his seat of government to Jerusalem, that all nations will be gathered against that city, and that the city will be taken, that the Turk will come to his end, for none shall help him.

Always some power has been ready to step in and assist him, but in the way now in progress the Turk has appealed again and again to the powers for help, and no one has responded thus far. On the contrary, there seems to be but little objection to the idea of his being driven from Europe. And so far as his possessions in Asia are concerned the massing of troops by Russia in the Transcaucasus has revealed to Europe the fact that Russia has her eyes set on Armenia. And while Germany has been loud in shouting for the integrity of Asia Minor, yet it transpires that she has almost acquired the control of Anatolia, and the Russian press is now charging Germany with duplicity in this matter.

If the nations are not willing to help the Turk to retain his footing in Constantinople, but are willing to invade his Asiatic possessions, they certainly are not willing to assist him in retaining Jerusalem, and if not in Jerusalem then no place on earth at all; and the Turk must go, not from Europe only, but from the whole world; "and he shall come to his end, and none shall help him. And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great Prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, everyone who shall be found written in the book. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth, shall awake, some to everlasting life and some to shame and everlasting contempt" (Dan. 11:45; 12:1, 2).—R. S. Owen. JOY

"The Joy of the Lord is Your Strength" (Nehe. 8:10)

There is a vast difference between levity and joy. Joy is gladness, exultation; levity is a want of seriousness.

Notice the order in which the apostle Paul enumerates the fruit of the spirit: "But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance" (Gal. 5:6). Observe, he does not say "fruits," but "fruit," so then all the above are necessarily of the same species of family, so to speak. They do not differ in quantity, but rather in their manifestation. All these spring from and have their root in love. Hence we see another reason why love is the principal thing.

James says: "But the wisdom (or love) that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocricy." Very much in the same order as Brother Paul arranges them.

Few people really understand what joy means or rather is; we confuse it with laughter. If you take a good concordance and look under the words "laugh," "laughed," "laugheth," "laughing" and "laughter" we think you will be surprised, smile more and laugh less. If you will notice the context to each of these references I think you will think twice before you indulge in laughter or levity. Notice the first place the word "laughter" is used in scripture is in Gen. 18:13. God asks this question after making a promise to Abraham: "Wherefore did Sarah laugh?" We all know what the laugh of derision is. So does God. Our Lord said: "Woe unto you that are full, for ye shall hunger; woe unto you that laugh now, for ye shall mourn and weep." David, speaking of this same class, says: "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; the Lord shall have them in derision." When God laughs it is always when his enemies are discomfited. James exhorts all to "Draw nigh to God, and to let our laughter be turned to mourning." We see there is a great difference between joy and laughter. Laughter usually results and is caused by the ludicrous actions of another; joy comes as the result of knowledge acquired respecting what God intends to do for us in the kingdom.

The clearer our knowledge is of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ, the greater becomes our joy, the stronger our love is to God and his dear Son, the more ardently we will serve him. Joy always follows service.

Paul and Silas, after having many stripes laid upon them, their feet made fast in stocks within the inner prison at midnight, prayed and sang praises unto God; "and the prisoners heard them." This is what joy did for Paul and Silas. Now notice what joy did for the one whom Paul so faithfully followed: "Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of faith; who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

It is said that Christ was never known to laugh. I believe this; it would be characteristic of his whole life and deportment. The record is that he was holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners. He never walked in the counsel of the ungodly; none ever found him standing in the seat of the scornful. He was despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; we hid, as it were, our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet we did him esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. He was wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace upon him; and with his stripes we are healed.

Beloved, what enabled him to pass through and endure all this? I verily believe with all my heart it was because of the great joy he possessed resulting from his great love for God the Father, and the strong faith that God would fulfill all his promises made in respect of him. Listen, beloved: "He shall see of the travail of his soul, shall be satisfied; by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many: for he shall bear their inquities." Now, mark well this promise: "Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death, and he was numbered with the transgressors; and he bore the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors." If this brought joy to Christ ought not "the strong" (his saints), with whom he will divide the spoil, also rejoice?

Upon one occasion the record is: "A voice came from heaven, which said, Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased." What a wonderful recognition was this. Surely it must have filled them with joy. Do you think that Jesus was surprised when the Holy Spirit descended upon him and God proclaimed him to be his Son? Surely hot; Christ expected it. He knew God's word thoroughly; he could quote it correctly, and in its proper connections. He was familiar with the Psalms and the prophet Isaiah especially. He knew Isaiah 42:1, 2: "Bheold my servant whom I uphold, mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my spirit upon him; he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard on the street."

Now read Matt. 12:18, 19: "Behold my servant, whom I have chosen; my beloved, in whom my soul is well pleased; I will put my spirit upon him, and he shall show judgment to the Gentiles. He shall not strive nor cry; neither shall any man hear his voice in the streets."

No wonder we read that "when he was come into his own country he taught them in their synagogue, insomuch that they were astonished and said. Whence hath this man this wisdom and these mighty works?" (Matt. 13:54). All the knowledge Jesus possessed came to him from the word of God; his mind, being the mind of God, was illuminated by God's holy spirit, so that he understood it. Read his sayings; follow him in his wonderful discourses; how much is gathered outside of the scriptures? Surely he preached the word; surely he loved the word of God—even the story of Jonah stands approved as authentic by him.

Notice the joy he experienced by always being obedient to his Father's will. It was written of him, and he knew it: "Lo, I come, as in the volume of the book it is written of me, to do thy will, O God." He said also himself: "I come not to do my own will, but the will of him who sent me."

In Job 38 God asks him a series of questions, none of which could Job answer. Read them over and see if you can do better than Job. I can not, in fact I can not do even as well as Job did. In verse 6 God asks him, speaking of the earth, "Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? Or who laid the cornerstone thereof, when the morning stars sang together all the sons of God shouted for joy?" Surel ythey shouted for joy as they beheld the diversified wisdom of God as displayed by his marvelous power in bringing into existence this glorious planet we call and love the earth, our home. Beloved, who can not help but be filled with joy as we feel our hearts going out to him in love, and meditating upon his goodness to the children of men?

Again, as we anticipate the glories of the coming kingdom and the part we will have, does this bring to us sorrow? Nay, brethren, but joy unspeakable and full of glory. Our souls are set on fire with love and joy; we long to be with God, for we know then that in his presence there is fullness of joy, and at his right hand pleasure for evermore.

No wonder James says: "Count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations," for temptations develop character, and character, if fashioned after the likeness of his dear Son, will surely give us an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God. This is not far off. David says: "For his anger endureth but a moment; in his favor is life, weeping may endure for a night, but joy in the morning." The dark night of sin is almost over; the mists of superstition are fleeing before the heralds of the truth; the sun of righteousness is about to rise; the voice of him that hushed the turbulent Sea of Galilee will again be heard speaking: "Peace, be still." "Be glad in the Lord, and rejoice, ye righteous; and shout for joy, all upright in heart."

May the joy of believing, obeying and practicing the truth in our daily lives fit us for that glad day when when we shall hear the Master say: "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

GEORGE B. ALLDRIDGE.

DID THE HOLY SPIRIT COME TO STAY?

No. 1

Some of the papers that are vigorous exponents of Adventism, and the doctrine of the second coming of Christ, and the establishment of his kingdom here on earth, are exercising themselves considerably over the above question.

Imagine, if you can, the apostle Peter or James or John entering into an elaborate and labored argument on the Day of Pentecost, or immediately thereafter, in order to prove to and convince the the people, or to convince themselves—those upon whom this baptism of the Holy Ghost was administered—that it was a reality, that they actually had received it. What would the enemies of Christ have said to such an exhibition of weakness on their part? I tell you it needed no argument on the part of the disciples, because it was a self-evident fact. It was a fact that they could very easily demonstrate, not only to the eye, as the pepole beheld the tongue of fire, but to the ear as they heard them speak with other tongues as the spirit gave them utterance, and to all the senses as they discerned the powers which they possessed of performing wonders, signs and miracles, according to the will of God. Can you doubt that the same cause today would produce the same effect? Can you doubt that if the Holy Spirit was poured out upon a company of believers today as it was upon the Day of Pentecost, under the same circumstances, that it would be followed by the same demonstrations, and that the same gifts and powers would be bestowed upon them? I surely can not. God is the same being in all ages (Mal. 3:6): "For I am the Lord, I change not." His spirit has the same power today when given in the same degree and in the same measure. Look at the wonderful powers Jesus possessed. Whence came they? The record says (John 3:34): "For God giveth not the spirit by measure unto him."

The disciples were baptized with holy spirit. Do you claim the same? They could demonstrate the fact by speaking with tongues, by signs and wonders and divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost. Can you who claim to have received this baptism of holy spirit do the same? You may waste column after column of valuable space in your church papers trying to convince the world; yea, and trying to convince your own members, the body of which Christ is the head, that you have tasted of the powers of the world to come; but if you can not demonstrate it they will not believe it. That God's spirit is in his true church today, that his spirit is in every true believer, and has been ever since the day of Pentecost, we verily believe. That the spirit of God, or holy spirit, was in God's prophets of old, that it was in the disciples and Christ before the Day of Pentecost, we also believe, but no such outpouring of God's holy spirit was manifested before or since with tongues of fire and demonstrations of power.

There were two baptisms of holy spirit with an interval of perhaps seven or eight years between them—upon the Jew first, and also upon the Gentile. These occurred during the changing from the law to the gospel dispensation, and they were given for a purpose, and that purpose was to bear witness that the things which they spake and taught were true, and to establish their word as the word of God. How was Nicodemus convinced? John 3:5: "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God, for no man can do these miracles that thou doest except God be with him." John sent two of his disciples to ask Jesus whether he was the one that should come, or do we look for another. Mark 11:4: "Jesus answered and said unto him, Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see. The blind receive their sight and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them." Proof that was Jesus was the Christ, proof that it was from God, and that the word which Christ and his disciples taught was the word of God, that the gospel which they preached was the gospel of God. Believing that the Bible teaches that, that was one object in the giving of the spirit to confirm the word. While it may be very commendable in Christians to pray for a Pentecostal outpouring of the holy spirit, yet we can not do it with any degree of faith because we fail to find any promise which God has made that will reach us and be applicable to the present time. I know they will quote Peter's words to me which he spake to the Jews on the Day of Pentecost (Acts 3:39): "For the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord shall call." Peter was addressing the house of Israel (verse 36); "to you and to your children" would mean the Israelites and their children. And Peter says (chapter 3:, verse 25): "Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers," so that applied to them and at that time. But the latter clause—how will we get around that? Well, we don't want to go around anything. If there is a promise of a baptism of the holy spirit that will reach the Gentiles of this generation we certainly desire it; but to have the name without the power to manifest it to the world, or to demonstrate it as did the apostles and Christ, or even to know it as a certainty, seems an empty honor. Peter undoubtedly was referring to the calling of the Gentiles as a people, and the baptism of holy spirit which was afterward poured out upon them as a people in the case of Cornelius, and those believing Gentiles that were with him. Peter, referring to this, uses this language (Acts 15:8): "And God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us, and put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith." Paul uses the same language as Peter in writing to the Ephesians (2:13): "But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were afar off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. And came and preached peace to you which were afar off and to them that were nigh." How many were called? The Jews, which were said to be "nigh," and the Gentiles, which were "afar off," and they both received a baptism of holy spirit as a witness.—Walker Perrine.

WHAT IS THE POPE DOING FOR BELGIUM?

Belgium is one of the most Catholic countries in Europe. For many centuries it has sent to Rome as "Peter's pence" thousands of dollars, which must now amount to a huge sum. To this should be added private donations, endowments, legacies, etc., of which the same church has been the beneficiary without competition. In short, Belgium has done its duty to the Vatican. But now that poor Belgium has been stripped of everything, and stands shivering, hungry and bleeding in the cold, how much of this "Peter's pence," not to speak of other moneys received from Belgium, is the Holy Father sending back to the afflicted country?

The Catholic church commands vast wealth. It has many treasures, each worth a fortune; it has saints' tombs as rich as banks; it has monasteries with big incomes; it has holy relics that are millionaires, and vessels and vestments that glitter with precious stones of rare beauty and great price. Do we hear that the church is about to part with some of these treasures for her starving Catholic children in Belgium? She who is so sensitive when a bursting shell injures a cathedral—is she showing the same solicitude for the lives of the people who built these cathedrals?—The Peril.

Every failure teaches a man something if he will learn.—Dickens.

It is a great thing in life to learn how to forget wisely.—Weir Mitchell.

Many thanks to Sister Susan A. Howard for a letter of special interest and information.

Because the goal is distant, is that any reason why we should not march toward it—Victor Hugo.

Bro. J. A. Railton writes that he has been very sick for a month or two, but is now better. The Lord grant our brother a complete recovery.

Dating January 11th, Bro. J. J. Heckman writes: "I baptized two yesterday, after having preached here each Sunday for about four months. Rejoice with us and the angels of heaven." We certainly do.

If the assumption that the church is the kingdom be granted the whole (papal) system appears logical and scriptural. Consequently, if this interpretation is to be allowed, all the decrees of intolerance and all the crusades of extirpation waged against infidels and heretics must be conceded to be but the exercise of the legitimate authority of the church over the state. Protestantism has no defense.

Bro. Almus Adams writes: "When we made our last report we had just closed a very successful meeting at Moorefield. We then moved south to the North Star schoolhouse, where we have succeeded in getting the majority of the people to believe the truth, and hope that in time all will obey and prepare for themselves a home in the kingdom. Four took a stand for the truth, and on the 9th were baptized into the all-saving name. We were nevt to go to Freedom, but the cold and snow prevented, so we came home after a month of hard work, but feeling highly paid, for eleven were rejoicing in hop At this writing we are holding a series in Kennard. Our prayer is that someone may be led to the light of the gospel. Brethren, pray for the work everywhere."

Calling the church the kingdom of God reminds me of a conundrum that was popular in our rustic boyhood farm days: "How many legs has a calf if you call the tail a leg?" If the farmer said five the laugh was on him; but not infrequently the rustic was shrewd enough to answer: "Four; for calling a calf's tail a leg doesn't make it a leg." Calling the church a kingdom doesn't make it a kingdom. Nowhere in the scriptures is the church ever called a kingdom, nor is Christ ever called the king of the church. To be sure, "king" is one of his divine titles (Ps. 10:16), and he is "king of the Jews" (Matt. 2:2); but "king of the church"—never. "Christ is the head of the church" (Eph. 5:32), and the church is his body, for "he is the head of the body, the church" (Col. 1:18). Again, "Christ is the bridegroom" (John 3:29), and the church is his bride, who at "the marriage of the Lamb" becomes "his wife" (Rev. 19:7). In that wonderful passage (Eph. 5:23-32) the apostle Paul uses marriage to set forth the relation between Christ and his church—husband and wife. He may be "king" to others, but not to the church. Of that he is "head" and "husband," and the church is his "body," his "wife."

Jas. 5:14, 15 reads: "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up, and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him. This passage has reference first to physical sickness, which was healed by the apostles, elders (1 Pet. 5:1) daring the apostolic age in order to confirm the word. Jesus says: "They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover" (Mark 16:18). The father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a bloody flux; to whom Paul entered and prayed, and laid his hands on him and healed him (Acts 28:8; Acts 19:11; 1 Cor. 12:9, 28; Acts 28:9). But this which was in part is done away (1 Cor. 12:10; 13:10). "But when that which is perfect is come then that which is in part shall be done away." Gifts of healings were given to only a part of the church (1 Cor. 12:9). That which is perfect has come (Jas. 1:25). But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer but a doer of the work, this man shall be blesed in his deeds. See also Heb. 2:4.

1. When that which is perfect has come, that which is in part shall be done away (1 Cor. 12:10).
2. But that which is perfect has come (Jas. 1:25).
3. But gifts of healing were in part (1 Cor. 12:9).
4. Therefore gifts of healing are done away.

THE PROMISES

The first testimony to which I will call your attention is the words of the angel of God, addressed to Mary, the mother of our Lord: "Fear not, Mary, for thou hast found favor with God. And, behold, thou shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest. And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." I think it is reasonable to believe that the words of this promise were intended to be understood just as they are recorded, as there is no explanation otherwise by the angel. The hope of the Israelitish people was fixed on the promised Messiah. They looked forward with long expectancy to the advent of a son of David, to sit on David's throne and rule over the house of David. But we know that this hope of theirs was not realized in the life that they were then living, nor will it be made a realization until Jesus comes again. We read in Ezekiel about the overturning of David's kingdom: "Thou profane and wicked prince of Israel (meaning Zedekiah, for he was the last king that reigned over the house of Jacob), whose day is when iniquity shall have an end. Thus saith the Lord God: Remove the diadem and take off the crown; it shall not be the same; exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more until he come whose right it is and I will give it him." Who is he of whom Jehovah speaks here when he says: "I will give it him?" Why, it is the same one as is referred to in the promise to Mary, even Christ our Lord. The place of David's throne was Mt. Zion in Jerusalem, and there the throne of Messiah, the king of the Jews, is to be established with judgment and justice forever. Jesus himself promised that he would come again (John 14:3). The manner of his coming is placed beyond all question, for the angels who appeared to the disciples on the Mount of Olives, as they witnessed the ascension of their Lord into heaven, said: "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Christ is therefore coming personally and visibly to the earth as really as before. But when he comes again he comes not as a sufferer, not as a "man of sorrows," but as a King and Conqueror to occupy a throne of glory.

I have thus far talked of the coming of Jesus, but what is he coming for? There would be no need of his coming to earth again if we are to reign with him in heaven. In the promise made to Abraham God said: "I will give unto thee, and to they seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession, and I will be their God." In Gal. 3:16 we read: "Not to seeds as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." This is Abraham's primal seed, but we are very closely associated with him, for we are of the faith of Abraham who are counted as the seed and joint heirs. Gal. 3:29: "And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

We see from Gen. 26:4 and 35:12 that Isaac and Jacob are heirs to this same land, and faith in the gospel and obedience by baptism makes us Christ's and heirs to this same land. When we are redeemed by the blood of Christ we are no more servants, but sons and heirs with Jesus of that kingdom which David was king over, of the kingdom which was overturned, but which will soon be restored. How much greater are the riches of the promises than the riches and wealth of this world. Yes, an inheritance in that glorious kingdom can not be compared to anything that wealth can buy. May the hope of eternal life keep us from all temptation; and may he grant us according to the riches of his glory, that Christ may dwell in our hearts, and that we may all be rich in faith and heirs to the kingdom. There is only one way by which we may gain the promised inheritance. Not by works alone, but by faith and trust in the word of truth as taught by the Savior. "He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God and he shall be my son." "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God."

That we with Jesus may inherit the glories of the promised inheritance and gain eternal life is our hope, the one hope of our calling. Let our prayer be, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

THE EARTH AND ITS FUTURE

D. C. Robison

The theological schools of today have lost sight largely of the apostolic teaching in regard to the future of the earth and Jehovah's purpose in creating it. It is an unusual thing to hear from the pulpit that God created the earth to be inhabited. The prophetic word declares that the righteous shall never be removed, but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth (Prov. 10:30). It also states in positive terms that the Lord will fill the earth with his glory (Numbers 14:21; Isa. 11:9; Hab. 2:14).

These testimonies with others state what Jehovah purposed in the beginning. Jesus taught: "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5:5). Again we read: "Nevertheless, we look for a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Pet. 2:13). It is further stated in this scripture that it is "according to promise." If we are promised new heavens and a new earth it is right we should believe the message. The question arises here as to what is meant by the expression of "new heavens." In this chapter and 7th verse the apostle uses the same epression "heavens," and applies it to the present system, which he says "is kept in store reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." The present heavens and earth evidently applies to our political, industrial and social arrangement. I am asked, Do you believe that the earth will in the future be placed under a new system that is of a heavenly or divine nature? I answer that I certainly do, because of the many prophetic utterances which we shall give. The prayer that Jesus gave to his apostles is one of those that deals with this question. He taught them to pray, "Thy kingdom come, they will be done in earth as it is in heaven." The coming of the kingdom will bring about God's will in the earth. This certainly means that sin must be destroyed from the earth. It will again be restored to its Edenic beauty. In the language of the prophet, nothing shall harm in all my holy mountain or kingdom. The kingdom will become a pure theocracy over which Jesus will rule. It will be a strong government in which men will learn righteousness. Those who have been in touch with God's purpose as to the future of the earth from righteous Abel until the coming of Jesus the Christ will be made rulers with Christ in the restoration of the earth to its former beauty (Isa. 32:1; Rev. 11:15; 20:4).

When we speak of the kingdom of God we mean a real, tangible kingdom. There are five elements in any kingdom, as follows: A king, associate rulers, territory, subjects and laws. In Daniel (chapter 2) we have a brief history of the existence of five universal empires or kingdoms which were to rule over the earth. The first, as given by the prophet, was the Babylonian, represented by the head of gold. It was literal and universal. After it was to arise a second and third and a fourth. Each was literal and universal. As Gentile kingdoms the three last named are known as Medo-Persian, Grecian and Roman. The citizenship of each of these passed into the other. So it will be in the kingdom of God.

After naming the kingdoms and following the division of the fourth or Roman kingdom in two, then ten kingdoms represented by the lower legs and ten toes and the iron and clay condition, the prophet states: "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever" (Daniel 2:44). From a statement made in verse 45 we learn that it will be the stone, or the fifth universal, literal kingdom. According to the prophet we are in the iron and clay condition of the fourth or Roman kingdom. These two elements will not mix. Capital and labor constitute the iron and clay. They exist, but will not mix. They are both destructive elements and must be destroyed. These systems are a natural outgrowth of the present form of Gentile governments. They belong to the system inaugurated by Nimrod of old. Under this system misrule and poverty has and will exits until the stone kingdom shall have been set up on the earth. In Psalm 72 we learn that in his (the king's) days shall the righteous flourish; and an abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth. He shall have dominion also from sea to sea and from the river to the end of the earth.

In concluding this article we wish to quote again from Daniel 7:27: "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions (rulers) shall serve and obey him."

If we are to interpret language as we find it in the scripture we are compelled to accept a literal and not a spiritual interpretation. The proofs that we have given are plain. "My words," said Jesus, "are spirit and are life."—Printed from the Salem News.

LAW AND SIN FOR ISRAEL

No. 2

The following five reasons are given why the Israelites should observe the Sabbath:

1. Because of God's rest on the seventh day (Ex. 20:11).
2. As a sign that God had sanctified Israel from other nations (Ex. 31:12-18).
3. In order that their work animals might have rest (Ex. 23:12).
4. In order that their servants might rest as well as they (Deut. 5:14).
5. In commemoration of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage (Deut. 5:15). This latter reason could not apply, only in a typical sense, to any other people than the nations of Israel.

In Ex. 20; Deut. 5 and Ex. 34 and 35:2, 3, there are very different readings of the commands of the decalogue, and in Rom. 13:9 Paul quotes the last five precepts in a different order from that found anywhere in the old book.

Commentators generally agree that revisions had been made in the law by Ezra and other recompilers. Dr. Hastings thinks that "thy cattle and the stranger that is within thy gate" refers to city gates, therefore is not the original reading as on the tablets of stone. He also thinks that the reference to the Creator's rest is also a later addition, and that the tenth precept against coveting a neighbor's wife, cattle, etc., by classing women with land, house, cattle and other chattels, has reference to the system of slavery established by Moses for Israel (Ex. 21; Lev. 25).

As regards the law "visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me," it should be self-evident that this is not the law in heaven for angels, nor the law in the future kingdom of God, where "the son shall not bear iniquity of the father, nor the father the iniquity of the son," but "every man shall die for his own iniquity," the sinner dying at one hundred years old accursed (Ezek. 18:20; Jer. 31:10-35; Isa. 65:17-24).

The fact that it is impossible, from the different readings of the law, to know the exact letter of the law should show that it is the spiritual intent of the law, rather than the letter, that is most important. "That we should serve (God) in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter." "For the letter killeth, but the spirit (Christ and love within) giveth life." "For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death—which is in my members" (Rom. 7 and 8; 2 Cor. 3; Gal. 5).

The laws of the prophets were mainly moral and those of the priests mainly ritualistic. As morals are above rituals and prophets generally nearer to God than priests, so we often see the prophets, like Jesus, rebuking the priests (1 Kings 18; Matt. 23).

In the first chapters of Paul's epistle to the Romans he shows that all mankind, from the fall of Adam, had the knowledge of right and wrong and of good and vil implanted within them by the law of nature, and that from Adam to Moses, without any written law, mankind were responsible to God from this law and from the book of nature. As parents prefer to have children obey from the principles of right and from the motive of love, rather than from threatenings and fear, so God left all nations to walk in their own ways, with only the loving warnings of prophets, until the time of Moses. Then, because of transgression of this law of nature, the written law of Moses was added to force righteousness upon them, until the righteous seed should come, when the new covenant children were freed from all the letter of the law, thus leaving them again under the "perfect law of liberty," the law of love as from Adam to Moses (Gal. 3:19; Acts 14:16, 17: 17: 30-33; Rom. 2:14, 15).

Written law and force are not necessary only for the naturally depraved (1 Tim. 1:9, 10). Therefore such a law as the decalogue is neither necessary in heaven nor in the future kingdom of heaven, in the letter as given to Israel, but only in the spirit as summed up in the great love commands (Rom. 13:8-11; Matt. 22:36-40). New covenant children have existed from the beginning, and have always been those who were actuated by the righteous principles of love for God and humanity, engraven in their minds and hearts by the spirit of the living God (Jer. 31; Ezek. 36; Heb. 8:2; 2 Cor. 3).

W. L. CROWE.

A FEW SOBER WORDS ABOUT SATAN

Nearly sixty centuries have passed away since Satan set his foot in Eden to tempt and destroy earth's first and rightful ruler, its first emperor, but he did not dare approach him. He went to the empress, and, alas! he succeeded. The world knows to its bitterest sorrow the result. But for nearly twenty centuries a certain prayer has been poured into the ears of the Almighty from millions of agonized hearts, viz: "Thy kingdom come (in place of Satan's). Thy will be done (instead of his), and let him (our enemy) be destroyed forever." And this prayer will be answered in due time, as surely as its author lives. But let us see what this monster of wickedness once was, and what his end will be, for his end is as sure as was his creation or beginning.

To me this is a solar plexus blow to the world-wide acceptance and belief in Satan's first great lie, that man should not die, but live forever, in spite of his Creator, whether good or bad. It is the most stupendous lie ever uttered by devilish lips, and is utterly denied by all human experience and by the Almighty himself. It has not a leg to staud upon. But Satan has made it go because it was his most effective and powerful weapon to drive men from God. He has pictured God as being as much superior to him (Satan) in malignity, cruelty and vindictiveness as he is so much greater in power. Not only this, but he has the brazen effrontery to lay claim to and teach his followers that he will live as long as God himself, i. e., that he is immortal. If this is true, where, when and by whom was this precious boon given to him? Someone must have given it, for it is a "gift," and he could not confer it upon himself. Believing as I do that there is for us no immortality out of Christ, I can not possibly conceive how he ever got it, because if he has it he could not be "destroyed," for immortality can not die! It is perfectly inconceivable and abhorrent to all ideas of simple justice that the only Being authorized to confer this inestimable gift upon our race, and then oly upon such members of the race as who by patient continuance in well doing are worthy of it, should confer the same reward upon the most malignant and bitter enemy of God and man, to-wit, eternal life. Mind you, Jesus Christ as the word was with God ages before Satan was ever created, and he came into being solely through this word, which shall judge him in the last day. The edict of the Almighty will then be carried out and Satan will be destroyed by fire and brought to ashes upon the earth. Hear Malachi 4:1-3: "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea all the wicked, shall be stubble; the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Looks like a pretty clean sweep, don't it? "And ye shall tread down the wicked, for they shall be ashes under the soles of the saints' feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of Hosts" (authority good and execution complete). Instead of "eternal life" this looks like an exact description of eternal death, which in fact it is.

But the grand finale is told by John (Rev. 20: 7-9). Paraphrase partly: "After Satan was loosed from prison he went right back to his old job of deceiving the nations, and this time and for the last time to gather them together to battle, the number of whom was as the sand of the sea. They surrounded the camp of the saints and the beloved city (both on earth, and not a saint nor mansion in heaven, else they could not have been surrounded by Satan's army), when God Almighty let go his thunderbolts in the shape of fire which came down out of heaven and devoured them—eat them up. The great controversy was ended forever, and the earth was rid of his detestable presence for the first time since the fall and the planet was free from sin. Praise God. 'Tis a consummation most devoutly wished.

The harvest multiplies upon the sowing. One grain may produce a hundred. One thistledown which blew from the deck of a vessel is said to covered with full-grown thistles the entire surface of a South Sea island.—Wylie.

"THEY SHALL BE MINE"

"And a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and thought upon his name."

In eastern courts it is customary to keep a book of records, or chronicle of events, in which the affairs of government and important events are registered. So speaking after the meanner of men, the King of kings has also a book of records, in which the names of his people are enrolled, and also what they do for his glory. And of such importance is their conversation that it is recorded in his imperishable record. What an honor and what a blessing to have our names recorded there! It is an honor to have our names enrolled in church fellowship with the saints on earth; but how much more to have it written in the Lamb's book of life! Other books will perish, and records of great empires crumble into dust and be forgotten, but the books of Jehovah shall endure to the end and be opened at the last day. May our names be registered there. And may our doings and sayings be such as to obtain a record also.

If our names are recorded there then what wonderful promise that follows will apply to us: "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of Hosts, in the day when I shall make up my jewels. They acknowledge him in midst of a crooked and perverse generation, keeping his laws, observing his ordinances, when all others had forsaken him, and he will acknowledge them when he comes. Those who honor him he will honor. They are often despised and persecuted among men, and all manner of evil is said of them falsely. They are sometimes regarded as deceivers, enthusiasts and fanatics, but it is their day of trial. When the Lord, whom they now faithfully serve, shall come he will wipe away their reproach, make known their excellency of character and will honor as his friends and crown them with unfading glory.

"They shall be mine when I make up my jewels." The word here rendered "jewels" as in the margin means "special treasure." All the treasures of the universe are the Lord's; all the gold and silver, and the cattle upon a thousand hills; but those who feared the name, who spoke often, one to another, and whose names are recorded, are his 'special treasure' upon which he places unequal value. With what a price did he redeem them? With what tender care does he watch over them, and how faithfully defend them in time of danger! How graciously does he supply their numerous wants and support and comfort them in hours of sorrow and affliction, but a brighter day awaits them. Though now scattered over the earth, a few here and a few there, they will ultimately unite in one glorious assembly in the palace of the king and sit down at the table in blessed fellowship with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. How great will be the joy and how delightful the communion! If it is good to be where two or three are gathered, what a good time when the saints of all ages shall meet to see their Redeemer. "And I will spare him as a man spareth his son that serveth him."

In these days of abounding iniquity those that do evil and work wickedness often prosper. But when the judge of all the earth shall come to take vengeance on those that know not God, then he will spare his people as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. Then will the whole human race discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not. The latter will be overwhelmed with shame and contempt; the former will be elevated to the throne and crowned with immortal life. Let us, who know God's word, fear him and speak often one to another, that our names may be recorded in that book.—Mrs. Edna C. Huggins.

OCCUPY TILL I COME

And he called his ten servants and delivered them ten pounds, and said unto them, 'Occupy till I come" (Luke 19:31).

Are we his servants? If so, then this command is to us, and we should heed our Master's voice.

Christ spake these words in a parable, but they are true to life. For in this life if we give certain duties to a person to do, and then go away, when we return we would expect that work to be done, and done well. If not, what is our attitude? Christ has given us a work to do, and left us and went to his Father. Will we then occupy, be diligent, serving him until he comes? Many commands he has given us, to watch, to let our light shine, to care for the sick, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and to forsake not the assembling of ourselves together, to be diligent, and to be always found abounding in the work of the Lord. If we, his servants, are so found, then we shall receive a reward that shall not fade away, for we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ to receive a reward, according as our works shall be. If we are faithful we shall be made unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth.

Oh, brethren and sisters, let us arise and be diligent, for the question with us today is not as it was with the Jews, for "He (Christ) came to his own, and his own received him not." They rejected Christ, and now we are anxiously and earnestly waiting for the appearing of our Lord when he shall return and receive his own. Now, the question that should concern us today is not, Will we have him, but Will he receive us? As we now see, the "signs of the times" indicating our Lord's soon return, let us seek him early and late, and press forward to the mark of the prize of the high calling, that we may receive an abundant entrance into his glorious kingdom.

As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 24); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58), the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). LAW AND SIN FOR CHRISTIANS

When Christ, the substance in which all past shadows end, finished his work on earth, how fitting that all the shadows pointing to him should end, for those who enter him. How fitting that when the gospel and the spiritual laws carried over in the new book are to go into all the world; that a new rest, that all the saved on earth can keep, should take the place of the local, twenty-four hour day Sabbath, that really enslaved Israel.

These weak and poor rudiments, designed to lead "children" and "slaves" up to graduation, were only imposed on one nation for fifteen hundred years, "until the seed should come." See the Diaglott in third and fourth chapters of Galatians.

God anciently spake to the fathers by the prophets, but he now speaks by his Son, the wisdom of God made flesh (Heb. 1:1; John 1:6). The fullness of divinity dwelelth in him, and therefore all the law and gospel we need (Col. 1:19; 2:9). God says: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." "All authority in heaven and earth is given to him." We are commissioned to teach all that he commanded to be taught (Matt. 28:18-20). Surely his teachings will give us all the law and gospel necessary to our salvation. And yet we can teach all that Jesus commanded without binding on the Christian congregation the twenty-four hour day Sabbath of the decalogue. But he does invite all to take his yoke and learn of him, and by living in him, and his spirit in us, that we shall find the true Sabbath rest for our souls (Matt. 11:28, 29) If we keep the two great commandments, love for God and love for mankind, we will keep all the righteous laws now binding on Christians. And if we "walk in the spirit" and "drink in of his spirit" we will understand why "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life," and therefore why "we should serve in newness of spirit and not in the oldness of the letter." To obey any law or ordinance in the letter and not in the spirit is death; whether it be baptism in water, the Sabbath law, the Lord's Supper, circumcision, "thou shalt not kill," or any other command. The spiritual Sabbath is a continuous rest by faith in Christ. "A seventh day" should be kept by worldly men; but the seventh day of God's eternal rest is for the children of God.

While the Jews under their law shall be judged by their law (Rom. 2:12, 13), we should "so speak and so do as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty" (Jas. 2:12). "The words that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day" (John 12:48).

Jesus having fulfilled all the righteous requirements of the law of God, as given by Moses, speaks as a sovereign over that law. He magnified its moral and spiritual requirements, and diminished its outward forms and ceremonies, knowing that they were only imposed until the time of reformation under Christ (Heb. 9:9, 10). Having been exalted because of his righteousness by God as the greater than Moses, the greater than Abraham, the greater than Solomon, and as greater than the Jewish temple, he spoke as God's greatest prophet and lawgiver, with all authority (Matt. 12:6, 42; John 8:53; Deut. 18:18, 19). He magnified some of the laws, revised others, and abolished some. Moral commands were magnified to reach the thoughts of the heart (Isa. 42:21; Matt. 5:27, 28; 1 John 3:15). The divorce law was revised (Mark 10). Dead sacrifices and outward washings and sacred robes and laws as to defilements by touching Gentiles, dead bodies, etc., were set aside as having served their purpose, and no longer of importance; and all distinctions as to clean and unclean meats, and holy and profane things, he set aside as ended in the older law of liberty restored (Gen. 9:2, 3; Mark 7:15-24; 1 Cor. 8:8; 1 Tim. 4; Col. 2:16, 17).

Being Lord of the Sabbath day, which as a shadow had ended in himself, he set it aside for those who lived holy every day, leaving all men free, as Paul shews, to "esteem one day above another or every day alike." not from any law, but as each settled it in his own mind, because all mankind were now lords over this shadowy Sabbath day (Mark 2:27, 28; Rom. 14; Gal. 4). Hence Jesus had to combat the Jews on all their laws of outward purification, sacrifices, Sabbaths, meat laws, etc.

The law was an inexorable despotism, inspiring fear and involving bondage, with only a shadowy pardon of sins that pointed to the new covenant atonement and peace. It was as heartless and cold as the stone on which it was engraven, and was designed to show man how sin abounded and to demonstrate to the world the impossibility of salvation only by God's abounding grace (Rom. 5:20). The true living Rock and law and rest had come, and now the law of God was to be read in the life and spiritual teachings of God's well beloved Son.

The new covenant law was not a dead letter on dead stone, nor a stern, just judge, or austere pedagoguge with iron rod, ready to destroy the trembling culprit; nor was God now seen in the earthquake, thunder, fire and terrors of Sinai, terrorizing slaves by outward fear and threatenings, but through "Christ in the Syrian lilies" a lesson of love and trust was being taught and lived, and God was heard in the still, small voice, saying: "Peace, be still;" "My peace I give unto you;" "Follow me and find rest, peace and joy in your souls."

From the inward "law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus," as the members of the body obey the head, and as sheep follow the good shepherd from love, his sheep hear his voice and follow him. "Thou shalt not steal" is for a child (Gal. 4:19-31). "Thou shalt not kill" is for a human brute (1 Tim. 1:9, 10; Ps. 49:20). "Thou shalt not commit adultery" is not to be mentioned to a chaste virgin" (Rev. 19:7, 8; Eph. 5:12). "Six days shalt thou labor," and "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread," and "on the seventh day thou shalt not do any work," is a law only for slaves like Israel, or for worldlings under the curse and not for sons and daughters of the Almighty, whom Christ hath redeemed from the course of the law" (Gal. 3:15). Those called to the "high calling in Christ Jesus are not to take soil-tillers like Cain, city builders like Nimrod, nor barn-builders who lay up treasure on earth, like the rich fool, for their pattern, but men of faith like the old prophets, Christ and the Pentecostal church. "Being not without law to God, but under law to Christ" (1 Cor. 9:21). "By love serving one another," and so "fulfilling the law of Christ" (Gal. 5:13; 6:2).

If we now hear Jesus' sayings and do them our house is founded on the rock. If we teach all he has commanded he has promised to dwell in us by his holy spirit and we can do all this and make no distinction in meats or in days (Luke 6; Matt. 2[illegible]).

The yoke of almost endless laws given by Moses was a load that no man ever fully carried. There were laws that were good, and laws that were not good (Rom. 7; Ezek. 20:25). Jesus offered no dead sacrifices and ignored the laws about meats and defilements, but entreated all to seek heart purity and to take upon them his easy, light yoke of loving service every day alike for humanity and thus find rest to their souls. Thus the law, shorn of its traditions, shadows and outward ceremonies, regenerated and spiritualized by Jesus, is "not made void by faith, but is established and is so magnified as to sanctify all days alike to new covenant children who worship God in spirit and in truth, everywhere and at all times, the same. Their law is a life actuating them from within, and no longer a stern schoolmaster restraining them by threats and fear from without. It is Christ within who is our life, that doeth the works, and longer the old fleshly ego (Rom. 8).

It is now a new law under God, a new mediator, a new priesthood, a new sacrifice, a new covenant, a new man, a new heart, a new spirit, and a new and living way to God the fountain of life and love, as it shines in the face of Jesus Christ; and yet is still the Father's law, all carried over from the old book in its regenerated state.

Therefore the law as on the tablets of stone is abolished (2 Cor. 3): "Not by might nor by power, but by my spirit, sayeth the Lord," is the "new and living way." "Perfect love casteth out all fear." "The goodness of God leadeth men to repentance." "The love of God constraineth us."

THE HOLY SPIRIT

-No. 20

L. T. Nichols

When Are We Born of the Spirit?

Dear reader, we hope that the evidence that we have gone over will help you to receive a truth, upon which almost the entire world is in darkness. It is almost universally believed by the religious world that men and women are now born of the spirit. In the third of John Jesus taught just what Paul elaborated in the 15th of 1st Corinthians, that we have now gone over. Nicodemus came to Jesus by night, and acknowledged that he was a teacher sent from God, and "Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again he can not see the kingdom of God."

This point is made clear—no one can see the kingdom of God unless he is born again. Nicodemus thought that Jesus referred to a natural birth, but "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water, and of the spirit, he can not enter the kingdom of God."

Twice Jesus declared that it was something that must take place before anyone could enter the kingdom of God. The 6th verse is a key that will help us to see what is meant by being born of the spirit: "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit." Can you not see from this that as long as we are flesh—mortal, corruptible beings—we are not born of the spirit? As Paul showed so clearly, there are only two natures, and we can not possess both at the same time. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh," declared Jesus in words too plain to be mistaken; and he wanted us to know that flesh beings can not enter his kingdom. As I stated, Paul elaborated the very truth that he had received from Jesus—that flesh and blood can not enter the kingdom of God; that before any man or woman can enter the kingdom this mortal must put on immortality; we must be changed from fleshly, mortal creatures to immortal beings. Now, dear reader, listen to the 8th verse of John 3, where Jesus shows so clearly what he means: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth; so is everyone that is born of the spirit."

Here is the key to the whole subject: "So is everyone that is born of the spirit." They understand laws by means of which they can come and go with the freedom of the wind; they can come and go like the angels. People have been taught that it is the spirit that comes and goes like the wind; but words are signs of ideas; and no such ideas are contained in the words, "So is everyone that is born of the spirit." Man has never succeeded in making a flying machine; but as I read from the pen of a great scientist the other day, if they understood how an eagle flies they could invent a flying machine that would be a perfect success. He told how on a high mountain he had watched them for hours. With motionless wings they could hang suspended in mid-air; could mount aloft as easily as they took their downward flight—a wonder to this day. Truly the Almighty could ask: "Doth the hawk fly for thy wisdom? Doth the eagle mount up at thy command?" No, it does not. A greater than the hand of man caused him to understand a law unknown to all the wise of the world. The prophet Isaiah knew this, and he declared: "They that wait upon the Lord shall change their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint." Yes, in that glad day when born of the spirit we can mount up as the eagle. This text is no myth, no fiction or fancy; it will be a blessed reality some day, some happy day, to all who will wait now upon the Lord.

If anyone ever again tells you that he is born of the spirit tell him to prove it; to mount aloft and move with the freedom of the wind, "for so is everyone that is born of the spirit." Dear reader, do you realize how little people reason on this subject? Jesus meant to teach a great truth by the terms he employed. In the natural there is first conception, then growth, then a birth. So in the spiritual—we are begotten by the word of truth, grow up in the womb of our mother, the truth, and then in the morning of the resurrection we are born of the spirit. They put the cart before the horse, and have the birth the thing; but all men and women who use their reason will not accept such a theory; and the God of the Bible never taught anything so in opposition to law. Jesus is the only one of the Adamic race who has received the birth of the spirit, but all the faithful will receive it at his coming.

THE DEVIL: IS HE A PERSONAL BEING?

Article 3

Those who believe and teach that the devil is a personal being have some grounds for this doctrine in the New Testament, especially so if they are superficial readers, refraining from, as we are exhorted to do, "to compare scripture with scripture."

The truth, which is the word of God, lies hidden within its pages, like precious ores that contain gold, silver, etc., are hidden in rocks and in the strata, waiting for men to mine, dig and bring them forth to light. Our Lord said, "Let him that hath ears to hear, let him hear." To understand the word of God requires constant study and meditation. David delighted to meditate upon it, both by day and night; hence we are not surprised that he knew so much about God and had such blessed communion with him, as revealed to us in his precious Psalms.

One reason why people believe that the devil is a personal being is because in our common version the word "devil" is rendered by the masculine pronouns, "he," "his," "him." We forget that every day we speak of things as belonging to the masculine or feminine genders that are in the neuter gender. For instance, we always speak of the sun as "he" and the moon as "she." Again, God's spirit, the Holy Spirit, is spoken of in like manner, which has caused many to stumble and accept the erroneous doctrine of Trinitarianism. John 14:26 is a case in point: "But the comforter, which is the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you." In John 14:17 we still have a more striking instance: "Even the spirit of truth, whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." When we consider the original text all this is changed, and the scales fall off our eyes, and behold we see the scriptures in their purity and beauty.

The Diaglott renders John 14:26: "But the helper, the Holy Spirit, which the Father will send in my name, shall teach you all things and remind you of those things which I said unto you." John 14:17 is rendered, "The spirit of truth, which the world can not receive, because it beholds it not, nor knows it; but ye know it, because it operates with you and will be in you. The careful and thoughtful Bible student will readily see the value of this criticism.

The Old Testament scriptures are a miracle. God, through all the strange experiences and vicissitudes of his chosen people of Israel, preserved and kept them intact; this is one of the wonders of the world, only a mighty and glorious king like our Jenovah could do this. Hence their priceless value. Whatever knowledge Christ and his disciples acquired of the devil was gleaned entirely from this source. The writer proposed to consider the New Testament scriptures relating to this question, but feels if he can prove from the Old Testament that the devil is not a personal being the argument adduced form the New Testament will and should be all the more convincing and conclusive.

We have pointed out in our two previous articels that the word "devil" occurs only four times in the Old Testament, and in each instance refers to animals worshiped by Israel, as nations had done before them. We now wish to inquire respecting the word "Satan." Believers in the personality of evil use the word "devil" and "Satan" synonymously, but those who love the truth and are seeking to know and practice it realize and value the great difference between them.

The word "Satan" occurs in the common version fifty-three times; seventeen times in the Old, and thirty-six in the New Testament. The word itself is a Hebrew word, and consequently from the Hebrew scriptures (the Old Testament), it may be inferred its real force may be more easily discovered. We wish to quote from an old copy of "The Investigator," which in our judgment is the best treatise we have ever read upon this subject. Confining ourselves to the Old Testament at present, we proceed.

On examining the word "Satan" in the Hebrew scriptures, its occurrence is found to be much more frequent in the original than in the common version. It occurs in fourteen distinct passages, in which it is in the common version translated "adversary" or adversaries; so that, taking the number of times, seventeen, in which it is not translated (for Sathan or Satan is the Hebrew word translated), and comparing these with the number, namely fourteen, in which the word is translated, and consequently the meaning of the word is given, the latter, presenting a true meaning, almost equal in number those in which the Hebrew word is given. And when to this is added that of the seventeen, in which the word untranslated. namely Satan, occurs, twelve occur in the Book of Job, it can be seen that these passages in which the word is translated and exhibited in its true meaning are nine more than those in which it is put in its untranslated form, namely Satan.

What, then, is the word by which Sathan is rendered in these passages? A quotation of a few will afford this best illustrations.

In the interesting history of David it appears that he served Achish, one of the princes of the Philistines. In such service he was called upon to engage in war against the enemies of his master. The princes who with Achish were about to fight against their mutual enemies observed David and his men. "Then said the princes of the Philistines, What do these Hebrews here? And Achish said unto the princes of the Philistines, Is not this David the servant of Saul, the king of Israel, which hath been with me these days, or these years, and I have found no fault with him since he fell unto me unto this day? And the princes of the Philistines were wroth with him, and the princes of the Philistines said unto him, Make this fellow return, that he may go again to his place which thou hast appointed him, and let him not go down with us to battle, lest in the battle he be an adversary (Satan) to us; for wherewith should he reconcile himself unto his matser? for wherewith should he reconcile himself unto his master? Should it not be with the heads of these men? Is not this David of whom they sang one to another in dances, saying, Saul slew his thousand and David his ten thousand? (1 Sam. 29:3, 4).

"Lest he be an adversary to us." The word here rendered adversary is "Satan," and if "Satan" were the proper meaning it should be "Lest he be a satan to us." Here the word "satan" is applied to a man.

Other passages, in which satan occurs in the original and is rendered "adversary" in the common version, are presented in the life of Solomon. "And Hiram, king of Tyre, sent his servants unto Solomon; for he had heard that they had anointed him king in the room of his father; for Hiram was ever a lover of David, and Solomon sent to Hiram, saying, Thou knowest how that David my father could not build an house unto the name of the Lord and his God, for the wars which were about him on every side, until the Lord put them under the soles of his feet. But now the Lord my God hath given me rest on every side, so that there is neither adversary nor evil occurrent" (1 Kings 5:1-1). Here the word adversary is in the original "satan;" and that this adversary refers to human a dversaries is evidentt because Solomon makes reference to wars which David carried on, which wars were carried on by human beings.

That the adversary is a human adversary, the continuation of Solomon's history affords additional evidence. Solomon deviated from the course which Jehovah had marked out. As a punishment, "the Lord stirred up an adversary unto Solomon, Hadad the Edomite; he was of the king's seed in Edom" (1 Kings 11:14).

There can be no doubt that this adversary was a human being, and the Hebrew word for such adversary is "satan."

Additional corroborative evidences that Sathan is applicable to a human being, and that such application conveys the idea of an adversary, is afforded in circumstances connected with the life of this once wise but afterward unwise man. Solomon still persisted in his deviation from the law of his God, and his punishment was therefore continued: "And God stirred up another adversary, Rezon, the son of Eliadah, which had fled from his lord, Hadadezer, king of Zobah" (1 Kings 11:23). Of him it is stated: "And he was an adverasry to Israel all the days of Solomon" (1 Kings 11:28). The word sathan is the word here translated "adversary;" and these adversaries again were human beings.

But further evidences can be brought to strengthen this argument, that satan means an adversary, and that, as such, is applied to human beings. In David's history, when the tide of misfortune rolled over him and he was obliged to flee from Jerusalem, he was cursed as he passed by the way, by Shimei. On his return in glory the same Shimei came and importuned his pardon: "But Abishai, the son of Zeruiah, answered and said, Shall not Shimei be put to death for this, because he cursed the Lord's anointed? And David said, What have I to do with you, ye son of Zermiah, that ye should this day be adversaries unto me? Shall there any man be put to death this day in Israel? For do not I know that I am this day king over Israel? Therefore, the king said unto Shimei, Thou shalt not die, and the king swore unto him" (1 Sam. 19:21, 23).

The adversaries here are evidently human beings, namely, the sons of Zermiah, and yet these in the Heberw are named "satans."

In the Psalms the following interesting passage occurs: "Cast me not off in the time of old age; forsake me not when my strength faileth. For mine enemies speak against me; and they that lay wait for my soul take counsel together, saying, God hath forsaken him; persecute and take him, for there is none to deliver him. O God, be not far from me; O my God, make haste for my help. Let them be comforted and consumed that are adversaries to my soul; let them be covered with reproach and dishonor that seek my hurt" (Psa. 71:9-13). The "adversaries" here referred to are evidently human adversaries; and in the Hebrew the term applied to them is "satans." In another Psalm the Psalmist says: "As he clothed himself with cursing like as with a garment, so let it come into his bowels like water, and like oil into his bones. Let it be unto him as the garment which covereth him, and for a girdle wherewith he is girded continually. Let this be the reward of mine adversaries from the Lord, and of them that speak evil against my soul" (Isa. 109: 18-20, 29). In both these passages human adversaries are without doubt referred to, and the word "satans" represents these adversaries. From these passages (others might be quoted) it is evident that the Hebrew word sathan means merely an adversary. GEORGE B. ALLDRIDGE.

THE ENEMY

"So shall they fear the name of the Lord from the west and his glory fro mthe rising of the sun; when the enemy shall come in like a flood the spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him. And the Redeemer shall come to Zion" (Isa. 59).

I am glad to see that the subject of "the devil" is being discussed in The Restitution. Time was when this subject was carefully avoided, but we are going forward, and as we advance all things that are necessary for us to know and understand will open out and display themselves as they develop.

If I understand anything at all of the gospel the subject of the devil is one of the most important to get the proper understanding of. It may not be a vital subject, but it has such a bearing in the subjects that are vital that it is not possible to comprehend them. The popular doctrine of the devil, like the doctrine of eternal torture, so confuses the mind in regard to the dealings of God to his creatures. For instance: Why should the Creator permit a supernatural demon to misguide and afflict us? Or is it that he is independent of the Almighty? There is only one answer to that question: "There is no power but of God. The powers that be are ordained of God." And so the devil is "ordained of God," all things being subject to his will.

We can easily understand such a proposition as this when we look at the question from the proper point of view and know the arversary called "satan, the old serpent," to be human; humanity turned loose, as it were, the animal man on the rampage; and, individually and collectively, he sometimes is all the devil you want.

Now I would like to submit a few ideas in regard to this "collective" antagonism that occupies such a large portion of our Bibles, for although the popular devil is not once mentioned in the Old Testament the antagonism to God's teachings and God's people are conspicuous all over it; and just as much or even more so in the New Testament, until at the very close of the book we are told that the Lamb of God will overcome this thing, for he is Lord of lords and King of kings (Rev. 17). Now this peculiar thing or animal or beast is here spoken of as "the eighth." My solution of the problem is as follows:

The antagonism that has continually manifested itself against God's ordinances and people has headed, or will have headed up in the end, just as many times, eight, and in the last manifestation it will be the combination and embodiment of all that preceded it (seven) put together. To specify, we begin with the first oppressor of Israel: Egypt, 1; Assyria, 2; Babylonia, 3; Medo-Persia, 4; Greece, 5; Rome, 6; Papal "Christendom," 7. What we are about to see now, if I make a true guess, is thet combination, which is the eighth, and is of the seventh. Moreover, its dominion will be set up where the other five were established preceding Rome, namely, in the Egyptian valley. It is not generally known, but it is true that even Egyptian conquests included this territory, though Rome never did. In other words, the empire of the "fake millennium" will take the Assyrian form and capital, for it is written: "I will break the Assyrian in my land and on my mountains of Israel, then shall his yoke depart from off them, and his burden from off their shoulders."

These are a few of my deductions from the reading of the prophets. I am waiting now to see some of them fulfilled at this writing. The king o fthe north is pouring his armies even now over the headwaters of the Euphrates, and Britain has secured Basra and controls the muoth of the river. In my opinion the Euphrates valley is going to play the leading part in earth's great tragedy No, not the leading part, but the second part. There is one land that the Lord has chosen and set over against it in the original grant: "From the rivers of Egypt to the great river the River Euphraates." Even this famous valley is included, said to be even now the most fertile soil on earth.

THE STORY OF JONAH, AS IT READS TO ME

The word of the Lord came unto Jonah, the son of Amitai, saying, Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and cry against it; for their wickedness is come up before me. But Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord, and went down to Joppa; and he found a ship going to Tarshish, so he paid the fare thereof and went down into it, to go with them unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord. But the Lord sent out a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship was like to be broken. So they took up Jonah and cast him forth into the sea, and the sea ceased from her raging."

Now the Lord had made a great fish capable of swallowing Jonah, and Jonah was imprisoned in the fish three days and three nights, at the end of which time God delivered him. Then certain of the Scribes and of the Pharisees answered, saying, Master, we would see a sign from thee. But he answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign given to it but the sign of the prophet Jonas; for as Jonas was imprisoned in the fish three days and three nights, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the tomb.

REJOICE ALWAYS

One way to rejoice always is to pray always; to give thanks for little things. No one beginning the day by thanking God for the light that beraks into t he bed chamber, and for the fresh morning air, and for eight hours of rest, and for all his comforts, and keeping that up, will go down to breakfast doleful and discouraged. Spirit-filled people are always sunny people. Every groan and sigh and complaint and doubt and unfaithfulness is an ice blanket to the spirit of rejoicing.—Our Messenger.

Envy can not be hidden. It accues and judges without proofs; it magnifies defects; its conversasation is filled with gall, exaggeration and injury; it stands out with obstinacy and with fury against striking merit; it is hasty, insensible and merciless.

EDITORIAL

The prayer and sympathy of the church have been called out toward Sister Bessie Boyle, who had an operation for appendicitis this week. She is in good condition at this writing.

"Buy the truth and sell it not" (Prov. 23:23). The truth is too precious to barter away. Compromising salesman can sell part or all of it, but the motto of The Restitution is, "No truth for sale."

"Now is the acceptable time; behold, today is the day of salvation" (2 Cor. 6:2). "Now" is the only time we have. "Tomorrow," like the end of the rainbow, is not within our grasp; it is always one day off. The present being the only time we have, it is vitally important that we use it wisely.

Sunday, January 17th, two more names were written in the Lamb's Book of Life. The obedient ones were Dorothy and Abigail Gazeley, daughters of Bro. and Sister George Gazeley. Young, and having the privileges and blessings of an excellent home and Sunday School, these sisters will probably become "daughters polished after the similitude of a palace" (Psa. 144:12). Many others are interested in the gospel in this city, and if the Lord tarries we hope to see them render the "obedience of faith" soon (Rom. 16:26).

A missionary writes that an African native has asked him why white, civilized and Christianized men go to war. The question was too knotty for the missionary to answer. Editors of big dailies in America are offering a big prize for an answer that answers. The question is a little perplexing, no doubt, but we believe we can answer the inquiry, notwithstanding its difficulties. But we confess that the following query is nonplusing: Why do white men, who are civilized, and even gospelized with the good message of God's kingdom, quarrel, dislike and hate each other? A catching question, this!

Germany has invaded England with her aircraft, and declares it is her intention to raid London with a larger fleet. Germany has great numbers of these air monsters, and when she strikes at the metropolis of the world she will doubtless employ an impressive array. While the English are good fighters, against the Zeppelins it seems they have no adequate way of defending themselves. If the raid is made at night the high angle guns will be of small value. London today finds herself practically defenseless against a power of destruction which may attack her at any moment. The sea and army surrounding England, her protection for centuries, is no longer a protection. The safe isolation of Britain no longer exists.

Sister Fry sends an article entitled "Be Still, and Know That I Am God," and says: "I had my inspiration last Sunday evening. Today I put my thoughts on paper. The Restitution is so good, yet it seems to get better all the time. The little story I am sending seems so insignificant, but it comes from the heart." Just remember, dear sister, that the accumulation of pennies makes dollars, and that "insignificant" contributions make The Restitution what is. Without criticism of our older and abler writers, we venture to say that although Sister Fry is a neophyte in the art of writing, yet her "insignificant" article in this number will be differently rated by readers. To our mind, it is the best article in this issue, for many reasons. It is brief (a rare excellence); it is timely (because practical); it comes "from her heart," and is consequently earnest. And it is so timely and opportune! Please turn and read our sister's article, and have a drink of nectar.

THE KING AND HIS CHAMBERS

Cant. 1:4

Notes of a Sermon Given by the Editor of The Restitution, in Cleveland, Ohio, January 17, 1915

1. An Answered Prayer.

1. "Draw me," a prayer; "brought me into his chambers," its answer (Isa. 63:7; Hab. 2:3).

2. The Chambers (Est. 4:11; 5:1, 2; Ex. 12; Ps. 27:5).

1. His private apartments, where he gives more than ordinary manifestations of himself

(Jer. 9:23, 24; John 14:21-27; Ps. 25:14; Heb. 10:19; Eph. 2:6; 1 Thess. 2:4).

2. The church of God (Gen. 28:11, 16, 17; 1 Tim. 3:15; Eph. 5:23-29).

3. The three great blessings enjoyed in his chambers: 1, comfort; 2, enlightenment; 3, security (Ps. 25:9-15; 27:4; Isa. 26:20, 21; Ex. 12:22, 23; Jos. 2:18, 19).

3. Admission into the Chambers: "The King has brought me in" (Heb., "made me come in").

1. He is the procuring cause (Rom. 5:1, 2; Eph. 2:13, 18; Heb. 10:19).

2. He gives the desire to enter (Eph. 4:18, 19; 20:21).

2. He imparts light (Ps. 43:3, 4).

3. Personality of the experience: "Me."

4. The Kingdom is the Antitipical Chambers; the imperfect joy of the present swallowed up in the superlative joy of the future (Nehe. 2:1, 2; 1 Pet. 1:8; Isa. 35:10; 66:5).

PRAYER

One of our exchanges has the custom of printing in each issue a brief prayer. In a recent issue was such a prayer, which began with this paragraph: "Give us, we pray thee, as we come to thee now with humble desires for thyself, some blessed consciousness that our prayers are heard and are not cast into a waste and empty heaven." What so strangely and forcibly impresses us in this prayer is the absence of the address. There is no intimation till we come to the closing words, "Through Jesus Christ our Lord," whether the prayer is addressed to Jehovah, "the God of Israel," to Allah of the Mohammedans, to Buddha, or to Confucius. In striking contrast with this are the prayers of the men of old as recorded in the scriptures of truth. Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the temple began with the significant words, "Lord God of Israel, there is no God like thee" (1 Kings 8:23). The prophet Daniel began one of his petitions in this manner: "O Lord, the great and dreadful God" (Dan. 9:4). Jesus taught his followers to address their prayers to "Our Father which art in heaven" (Matt. 6:9). He himself, in addressing God, said: "Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son," etc. (John 17:1). When the disciples at Jerusalem prayed for divine guidance in the selection of one to take the place of Judas, who had fallen from his position, 'they prayed and said, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men" (Acts 1:24). Instances of prayers by devout men of old might be multiplied, in which the petitioners, recognizing the greatness and majesty of the mighty One, addressed their devotions to God in terms that betokened their high veneration for God and their own deep humility. This brings to mind the admonition of the apostle Paul to the brethren at Colosse, "Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving" (chapter 4:2). To "watch" in the sense of the Greek word here employed is to be "awake, vigilant." This vigilance, then, is to be exercised in prayer. To approach the "high and lofty One" (Isa. 57:15) without as much as an address has, to put it as mildly as possible, the appearance of a want of reverence. When we "speak unto the Lord" we should, like Abraham, remember that we are "dust and ashes" (Gen. 18:27).—Editorial in The Christadelphian Advocate.

Editor's Comments

Above remarks are made in a good spirit, and as they are concerning prayer, a subject of profound interest to the people of God, we feel that we have rendered a service to the Brotherhood and the truth by printing the foregoing strictures. Because one prayer was printed in which there was no formal address, our fellow-editor thinks we have ignored the Bible examples of prayer, and have "approached God without so much as an address." The omission of a formal address to the Father indicates, to him, a "want of reverence." He then quotes a number of prayers in which there is a formal introduction. Of course we concede that ordinarily this form of approaching God is scriptural; but that it is always so, and specifically required in acceptable prayer, we do not believe.

"Draw me, we will run after thee," is a prayer which omits exordium and even the formal address of God (Cant. 1:4). We look at the context in vain for any previous mention of God. Without caveat, without any mention of whom he addresses, the writer abruptly says: "Let him kiss me with kisses of his mouth" (verse 2). No name is mentioned or implied. The language is abrupt, but natural; for it is spoken under strong emotion. Instead of this showing "a want of reverence," as the above writer seems to think, it is highly expressive of reverence. The disciples of Pythagoras thus spoke of their master, "He said." Impassioned affection refuses to go by formalities and ironclad rules in its expression; it refuses to pray by law. The bride's thoughts are full of her beloved; she has no one in heaven but him, "and there is none upon earth that she desires but him" (Ps. 73:25). The one pearl of great price fills her mind; there is no room there for anything else (Matt. 13:46). Because the bride desires, and only desires, the Bridegroom, by "him" she means, and can only mean, the Bridegroom. Like Mary to the supposed gardener: "If thou have borne him hence" (John 20:15). By the prayer, "Let him kiss me. * * * Draw me," a heathen might understand that Allah, or Buddha, or Confucius, is addresed; but the "bride of Christ"—never!

When the bride prayed in Cant. 1:2, 4: "Let him kiss me. * * * Draw me," she was using language of love and emotion. Cold, calculating critics may raise objection to her vagueness of expression; they may even raise the question of whom she means by "him." Yes, they may raise this question, but she can not. Christ was continually promised to the fathers by the prophets (Acts 26:6; 1 Pet. 1:11). He was the hope and expectation of the Old Testament saints (Gen. 49:18; Isa. 26:8; Matt. 13:17; John 8:56; Acts 26:7). Exemplified in Simeon, Anna and others (Luke 2:25, 26, 36-38; 3:15). Christ was promised and expected as the bridegroom of the church (Hos. 2:19; 3:3; Isa. 54:5; 62:5; John 3:29). Whether God is addressed or not, the bride knows of but one person to worship, only to him can she pray. "Vain repetitions" of his name are expressly forbidden (Matt. 6:7). And that prayers to him, whether he is formally addressed or not, are acceptable to him and granted by him, is shown in the instance we have cited from Canticles. After the bride had prayed to "him" he answered the prayer in the following manner: "The King made me come into his chambers; we will be glad and rejoice in thee" (verse 4).

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Bro. Huggins:

I am sending you $5.00, for which please send me five copies of "The Bible: Its Principles and Texts." I bought two copies last summer, and I find they are excellent. I let a brother have one of them, and he thinks it is fine. I am now sending for more, so I can have some on hand. Then when I see a chance to let one out I can do so. I think I can do some good in this way.

There are a few of the faith scattered through this country, but they have no preaching. Wife and I are working for The Restitution, but it looks like we are making little progress. The Restitution is all the preaching we have. It comes to our home once a week, and we enjoy it, especially the good letters from the brethren. It is helpful to know there are others striving for the truth, and are looking for the soon-coming kingdom.

Bro. Huggins, I think I will be able to send in some subscribers for The Restitution soon. Some are reading it, and are much pleased with it.

Your brother and sister striving for eternal life. JAS. AND ETHEL DELOZIER.

Dear Restitution:

I enclose renewal for The Restitution. Many articles in The Restitution are edifying. The lady writers show a splendid Christian spirit, also Bible research. Last autumn I read an article on the new birth in which the writer contended there are three births. I can find no authority in the scriptures for this idea. Job answers this most effectually when he says: "Naked came I," etc. He means his literal mother, but includes mother earth; for he also says: "Naked I return thither." He did not return to his mother literally, but to "mother earth." And as he believed in the resurrection he had the hope of being born again, "not of corruptible seed. 1 John 5:6, 7, shows what the water birth is. If The Restitution does not believe in three births it should not publish such articles without comment. I take the liberty to refer to this as an old subscriber.

Wishing you a successful year,

JOHN MORRISON.

Dear Bro. and Sister Huggins:

We think that you will be interested to know that we have reached our distant home, and have had a warm welcome from our loved ones in church and home. Now that we are back, and are rapidly settling into our accustomed life, we send you our greetings and wish for you a Happy New Year.

After leaving you we had delightful visits at Detroit, Chicago, Aurora and Seattle. At each of these places we were welcomed for the truth's sake, and so far as opportunity offered we endeavored to render service to the Brotherhood.

We left Victoria on the morning of December 26th, and had a quiet voyage down to our own land. We did not call at any ports, owing to fear of German cruisers, and each night we forged through the water without showing even a glimmer of light on deck. It was a wierd and uncanny experience. I have traveled a great deal by sea, but never had such an experience before. We reached home on Sunday evening, December 13th, and were glad when we were able to distinguish the faces of our own loved ones awaiting on the wharf.

The church gave us a very warm welcome, and made us feel the sweetness of the fellowship it is our privilege to enjoy. Since arrival there have been large attendances at the preaching services, and the fellowship meetings are just delightful.

Kindly remember us to all the faithful, and accept the assurance of your Christian love.

Yours in Christ,

GEO. AND MAGGIE ALDRIDGE.

SONS OF GOD AND GIANTS

Sermon Notes by J. H. Thomas, M. D.

"And when men began to multiply upon the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, that the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose" (Gen. 6:1, 2).

1. Two classes are spoken of—men, and sons of God.

The "men" spoken of were the descendants of Cain; the "sons of God" were the descendants of Seth, through whom came Enoch, Noah and the patriarchs.

In Cain and Abel we have the types of two seeds, evil and good—the seed of the serpent and the seed of the woman (Gen. 3:15, 16).

Abel was slain and Eve bore another son and called his name Seth. After Seth was born, had married and had a son, "then began men to call upon the name of the Lord" (Gen. 4:26).

2. These two classes married each other.

The result of this intermarriage between the descendants of Seth and Cain was a rapid degeneration from the truth. "Giants" were the product of these illegal marriages.

The world soon was given over to violence and blood, for it is recorded that God looked upon the earth, and behold it was corrupt and filled with violence, for all flesh had corrupted his (God's) way upon the earth.

3. Meaning of the word "Giants."

The word "giant" comes from three different words in the Hebrew. From gibbor—mighty, strong one. Job 16:14: "He runneth upon me like a giant." From napha—fearful one. Deut. 2:10, 11: "The Emims dwelt t herein in time past, a people great and many, and tall as the Anakims," which also were accounted napha, or giants. From nephilum, and means great in stature, or mighty men, physically or mentally—renowned for goodness and wickedness, fallen ones. Gen. 6:4: "There were giants in the earth in those days; and also after that when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bore children to them, the same became mighty men, which were of old, men of renown. See also Num. 15:33: "All the men were of great stature, and there we saw the giant sons of Anak."

Nephilum is not properly a giant, but a people, but doubtless a people of great stature, so a giant was called nephilum.

BE STILL

"Be still, and know that I am God."

Not long ago I was in church services, and this was in the responsive reading. Oh, such a crowd, such music and such beautiful scenery all around. Splendid, all of it. This same congregation will soon move from this opera house into a magnificent building of their own, where nothing has been spared. Money comes, seemingly in such readiness, and the church will stand as one of the beautiful monuments of our little city.

The thought of our own body of people, scattered, and so few in one place, has brought pangs of sadness, but the above text, "Be still and know that I am God," has been ringing in my ears ever since that day. I have wondered if I was too impatient; if I have had a heart too full of trying to tell the story of Jesus and his coming. The establishment of his kingdom on earth, and many, many things so good, so full of food to the hungry, so beautiful to those who believe that Jesus is coming, that he will set up his seat of government at Jerusalem and rule the world from there, that the earth (not heaven) will be our home; and yet, so far as I know, not one impression has been made; rather there seems to be more indifference than at first, and the usual answer is: "Oh, well, it don't matter what we believe; we are all aiming for the same place any way, and you need a church home, so come and be one of us." That I can not do, so I turn away sorrowful, and many times tears are my only relief.

Then these thoughts come. Was Jesus popular? Did he have splendor, wealth and glory? We all know he was very much alone. Can we stand? And the only answer is, No, not of ourselves, but by his grace we are given strength day by day. We must just do our best and truest and he will do the rest, for he says: "Be still and know that I am God."

So, by trusting his word and praying like David, "that the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in his sight," and a prayer that, scattered though we are, some alone, that each and every one, looking for his coming, to set up his kingdom on earth, may be able to stand; for he is near, even at the door.

THE KING'S LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

While sorting over some old tracts I found one for a young lady to send to a young man who is troubled with questions and doubts. The card Bro. Wm. H. Wilson used as a business card to introduce himself to strangers. It occurred to me that the sentiment and truth expressed on this could be used with good effect in our work.

I wrote to Sister Wilson concerning her name and received her consent and hearty approval to use it. In any way I could, in the gospel work we are trying to do. I have arranged for the publication of a four-page folder to use in calling from house to house as an agent for the King's Life Company. Two pages of this folder are to be filled out by the person you call on and returned to the agent. One of the questions asked is, Do you take a religious paper?

The secret is out now, so I will tell you another. There are two things I have never made a success at, these are walking and talking. When I try walking very much I am usually laid up with lumbago or something like it. When I talk with people who call on me I have a nervous attack that makes me feel like an iceberg. For several years I have withdranw from soceity and social affairs, and have given all the spare time I have left, after my housework is done, to study and writing. As my physician says he can not cure my trouble, I am going to seek relief in another way. I am about to begin a campaign. "The king's business requires haste." I believe in a definite plan of work. Then "work your plan" was Sister Woodward's motto presented to me. I say, if the Lord gives me strength to do it I will call at five hundred or more homes at least once if not twice this year and leave at least one tract or a Visitor in each place. Will you, each one, pray for me, that I may have strength and courage for the work?

I do not believe in "Christian Science," but I do believe that "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much" (Jas. 5:16). If you desire to help in this campaign for our King just enclose five cents in stamps for a reply as to how you can begin this campaign in your own neighborhood. DO IT NOW.

THE DRAGON BEAST AND FALSE PROPHET

Brother Huggins:

In The Restitution of January 5th, under the heading, "Prophetic Thesaurus," I wish to call your attention to the exposition of the dragon, the beast and the false prophet (Rev. 16:13). You say: "The beast was paganism enthroned in Rome. This was superseded by Catholicism, which was a religious and political image of the beast, and therefore also called the beast. * * * The false prophet, the pope." Would it not be more in harmony with the record in Rev. 12th and 13th chapters to say that the dragon was paganism enthroned in Rome? It would then conform to the order in which the vision speaks of the draogn, the beast and the false prophet. The divine order is sure to be correct and in accord with the truth.

In the Apocalypse "the beast" nowhere represents paganism. The dragon as a symbol of Rome was imported from Egypt while Rome was pagan, and therefore represents Rome in its war against the woman and her child in Rev. 12. But when Rome became Christian, and cast the dragon out of the Roman heaven, the symbol of Rome is changed to that of "the beast" (Rev. 13:1). It is written in Rev. 13:2 that the dragon gave to the beast his power and his seat and great authority."

Again, instead of Catholicism being an image to the beast, Catholicism itself is the beast, the little horn of Dan. 7:25, and Paul's man of sin (2 Thess. 2:3). To establish this fact it is only necessary to collate the acts of the beast after he receives the blasphemous mouth (verse 5) with the acts of the little horn.

There is no place in the book where "the image" of the beast is called "the beast." If there were it would not be correct, because "the beast" is one thing and "the image of the beast" is another thing. The false prophet is the two-horned symbol of Rev. 13:11, and is the one that makes the "image" of the beast. This clear is from Rev. 19:20: "And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshiped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone.

This testimony proves beyond question that the two-horned beast of Rev. 13 is the false prophet. It is a fact to be regretted that the mistakes of great men are held by some with the same tenacity that others hold to the truth. Dr. John Thomas was a brilliant writer, who did much to unmask the apostacy, but he made some mistakes in his writings. Yours fraternally for the truth,

GEORGE FRANCIS.

[We stand corrected. Bro. Frances' exposition is heartily accepted by us. The article he criticises was meant to mean as much, but its extreme brevity prevented amplification. It may be that others have cosntrued the meaning of the statement as Bro. Francis has, and for this we can not blame them, as such an interpretation is legitimate. We gladly publish this retraction and correction of the statement, and thank Bro. Francis for calling our attention to it.—Editor.]

HOW CAN WE LEARN WHAT CHRIST WOULD HAVE DONE?

By studying the Bible, which is the word of God. This book gives us the history of Christ, his relation to God, and his relation to man. How do we know there is a Christ? "By faith." We read the Bible, and we believe it, believe it was written by inspired writers in the Hebrew and Greek languages, and has been translated into the English language, so we can understand it; we believe it, and belief is faith. What is an inspired writer? One whose mind is under the power of the divine mind, whereby he is both supernaturally informed or quickened and qualified to communicate the information or the influence received. All scripture is given by inspiration of God (2 Tim. 3:16). Great men are not always wise, neither do the aged understand judgment. But the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding (Job 32:8, 9). For the Lord giveth wisdom, and out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding (Prov. 2:6). No prophecy of the scripturre is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old times by the will of man: but holy men of God spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit (2 Pet. 1:20, 21). Then if the very words were dictated by the divine mind, or Holy Spirit, they are literally the words of God, and not of man.

In that book we learn of Christ, learn that he was born here on this earth. On this earth is where he commenced his life, received his education, and chose poor fishermen to go with him when he arrived at the proper age to teach the people. He taught his followers what to do and how to live in this life so they might live with him in the "age to come." So then to learn what Christ would have us do we must "search the scripture; for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me" (John 5:39; Luke 24:27). If we can find what he taught the people when here on earth "with his own voice" we may rest assured if we follow the instructions we shall do as he would like to have us do. He said: "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. 4:17).

What is repentance? To feel sorrow or regret for something done or spoken; to change the mind; to feel such sorrow for sin as to produce amendment of life. "Follow me," said he to the fishermen, "and I will make you fishers of men. And they forsook all and followed him" (Matt. 4:19). When Peter asked what they should have that had forsaken all and followed him he said: "When the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory ye shall also sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matt. 19:28). Be obedient and keep his commandments. Whosoever shall do and teach them shal lbe called great in the kingdom of heaven.

Do not be angry. Whosoever is angry with his brotehr "without a cause" shall be in danger of the judgment. Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." Why? "That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven. Be ye perfect, as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." Do thine alms in secret; pray in secret; fast in secret. Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Take no thought for the morrow. Judge not that ye be not judged. Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. Enter ye in at the straight gate. Beware of false prophets. Ye shall know them by their fruits. Not everyone that hath said, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Confess me before men. If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me. Christ commanded his followers to be meek, to be merciful, pure in heart, peacemakers, to endure persecution. Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be condemned. By following these instructions we are blessed in this life, and will receive eternal life in the "age to come." This is the only way to learn and od what Christ would have us do.

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31).

JESUS IS COMING

Out on the desert sad and alone,
Far from my Savior, away from home;
Which wait shall I go? How shall I turn?
For thee and thy truth my heart doth yearn

Weary and tried, I had forgot
That thou stood just here, in this very spot.
Tempted as we are, discouraged and sore;
Oh, thank thee, dear Savior, for going before.

I see a great light shining ahead,
Our dear Elder Brother is no longer dead;
He is risen, is living, is coming again,
Never to leave us, but forever to reign.

Then let this be our courage, let this be our song;
This strife and confusion can not last long,
For Jesus is coming, coming to stay,
To change all our darkness to endless day.

CRITICISM OF "MILLENNIAL DAWN"

Concerning the Resurrected Body of Christ

I am led to make these remarks by reading what the talented author of "Millennial Dawn" says about the resurrection of Christ, and to expose what he styles "the invisible phase of the kingdom." In Vol. 2, page 122, he says: "The Lord at his second coming shall assume the human form, as he did to his disciples after his resurrection, but such manifestations would be out of harmony with God's plan." He should have said "my plan." On page 126 he says he had power to appear in a variety of ways, but no one of these bodies was his spiritual body, though the fact of his resurrection was proved by them. Just think of it: the resurrection of our Lord proved by bodies which had never died, and which had never been buried—proved by bodies made to deceive them, made for the occasion!

He then adds that Christ was a spirit being really invisible to human sight. Indeed? How then does he know what a spirit being is? I shall show as I go along that he does not know. Just imagine Thomas handling a body that looked and felt like that of his Lord, who had been wounded for our transgressions, and told that it was he, and that he was really alive again, while all the time it was not the Lord's body, but a body made for the occasion, an assumed body! Did they ever discover the fraud, or was its discovery reserved as a laurel for this talented author of the Millennial Dawn?

On page 127 he says the human body of flesh and bone, and its clothing, which appeared suddenly while the doors were shut, did not go out of the door, but simply disappeared or dissolved into the same elements from which he had created them a few minutes before. There, that's just the way it was. He knows all about it, and yet he was not an eyewitness of it. Where, then, did he get his information from? Not from the Bible, that is sure. And yet he adds, as if not quite so sure: "Doubtless he was still with them invisibly." But what religious foolishness!

Again he says: "Some Christians absurdly conclude that the assumed bodies were his spirit body, and seem to disregard the statement of our Lord that this was not a spirit body." Assumed bodies—where in all the book of God do we read about the "assumed bodies" of our Lord? Where do we read the statement of our Lord that this was not a spirit body that he appeared to them in? In Matthew 14:26 and Mark 6:42 we find that when the disciples saw Jesus walking on the water they were troubled and thought they saw a phantom—that is, an apparition or ghost. Bear in mind that Jesus had not died at that time. How did he quiet their fears? By saying, "Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid." In Luke 24:37, after his death, when Jesus stood suddenly in their midst, "they were terrified and supposed they had seen a spirit (or ghost). How does the Lord calm their fears? Just as he did on the water: "Why are ye troubled, and why do thoughts arise in your hearts?" They were ignorant, superstitious and imaginative. It was these thoughts that troubled them. They had got mistaken notions or he would not have addressed them thus, saying to them, in substance: "You are thinking about what is unreal, imaginary. Behold my hands and feet, that it is I, myself. There is no deception about me whatever. I am as real as ever I was. Handle me, not an assumed body. I died for your sins, and I am before you to prove that I have been raised from the dead for your justification. Handle me, for a phantom or ghost hath not flesh and bones as you see me have. It is plain from this that they believed in ghosts.

This matter is now narrowed down to a question of knowledge or truth. Our author says this was not Christ himself, but Christ says it was himself, and I believe him. Again, our author says: "Many suppose that our Lord's glorious body is the same body that was crucified. That is a great mistake, for it would show that it was not perfect, but scarred and disfigured." What an idea of a perfect body! Do the redeemed hosts agree with Russell in this when they sing "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood." Where would the blood have come from if he is not the same? Shall we believe the author or the Redeemed of God?

He next says: "Our Lord's human body was supernaturally removed from the tomb. We know nothing about what became of it, except that it did not decay or corrupt. Whether it was dissolved into gases, or whether it is still preserved somewhere as a grand memorial of God'h love, of Christ's obedience, no one knows, nor is such knowledge necessary. It will not surprise us if in the kingdom God shall show to the world the ransom given on their behalf—the body of flesh crucified for us." I submit that the man who discovered that the Christ that was crucified was supernaturally taken away, in order to make the disciples believe he was risen, and then secreted somewhere, ought to be compelled to find out what became of him. I have my opinion of a man who had facilities for learning so much, and yet neglected to find out what became of him, and so was obliged to form his theories after all. Let us examine this bold statement a moment. Our Lord had a body; he could very well dispense with it. It was not himself, and no part of himself, and never will be. It was removed from the tomb to make believe that the real Christ had risen, when in fact he never died, never was buried, so the real Christ never gave himself for us! And please observe that which really died never lived again; he who is alive never died! But who is it that says: "I am he that liveth and was dead?" Is this true or false? If this is true, then the author's theory is false. Is there any room for such a theory in Romans 14:9: "For to this end Christ both died and rose, that he might be Lord both of the dead and the living." I shall have to say to our author seriously and sorrowfully that he does not believe the scriptures, therefore does not teach them. He may talk about the resurrection, but he does not believe it. We read distinctly that he showed himself alive after his passion. He had been dead. It was not a wretched farce. Has our author any Savior? If so, who is he, and where is he? Will he say that the Lord Jesus, who is in heaven, is he? That can not be, for he died and lived again. Will he say it was he who was nailed to the cross and made a curse for us? How can that be he, when he was not even awarded life again for himself? How can our author be "saved by his life," when he has no life for himself? He needs to find the Jesus Christ that said: "I lay down my life for the sheep;" "I have power to take it again;" and who said, "Because I live, ye shall live also."

Just so long as our author holds and advocates these truth-nullifying theories, just so long he will be without a Savior.

Brethren, we have got to be on the lookout continually for wolves in sheeps' clothing. The Bible speaks of them as "seducing spirits" and "doctrines of devils." Let us heed the exhortation: "Try the spirits and see if they are of God."

BRO. PITTS.

DID JOSEPH BEGET JESUS?

S. H. Thomas

I answer emphatically, he did not. I write this positively, for the reason that in my opinion satan has never advanced an error so seductive and fatal, and at the same time so easy to refute as is this one. I consider it the solemn duty of the Church of God, and also of each one of its members, to make no uncertain sound when dealing with this subject. He who believes this false doctrine rejects one of the first principles concerning the name of Jesus Christ, therefore he rejects the gospel. To such we have no right to extend the right hand of fellowship, nor wish them Godspeed. For he who holds and teaches this doctrine "maketh God a liar, because he believed not the record that God gave of his Son."

There is perhaps no error advanced by satan which has so little ground upon which to stand as this one. Jesus himself never once referred to Joseph as his father, and there is not a single passage in the entire Bible which will bear such a construction. Not one passage which says that Joseph begat Jesus, or that Jesus was begotten by Joseph; but there are hundreds which assert that Jesus is the "Son of God," that he is the "begotten Son of God," and that he is the "only (thus) begotten Son of God." And yet, most strange to say, there are men reckless enough to reject God's word and accept this doctrine of men, thereby exchanging their precious birthright for a mess of pottage.

The prophet foretold our Lord's divine nature and miraculous conception by plain and unmistakable language, by inference and by type (Isa. 7:14; 9:6). Take for an example of type the miraculous conception of Isaac, which is admitted by all to have been a true type of Christ. Both Sarah and Abraham were past age, and, so far as generation was concerned, "as good as dead." Nothing short of a miracle could cause her to conceive under such circumstances. Therefore Isaac, the type of Christ, was called 'the child of promise."

Now, Mr. Josephite, if Isaac was a type of Christ, will you kindly tell us what in your opinion his extraordinary conception prefigured? If not the miraculous conception of Christ by the power of God, as recorded in the first chapter of Matthew and Luke, then what?

There is also another question I would like to ask. In Luke 3:23 the genealogy of Christ begins as follows: "And Jesus himself began to tbe about thirty years of age, being (as was supposed) the son of Joseph, which was the son of Heli, which was the son of Matthal," etc. If Jesus was the son of Joseph, and Joseph the son of Heli, etc., why does not the spirit so state it? Why record that Jesus was only "supposed" to be the son of Joseph?

A multitude of such unanswerable questions might be asked, but space forbids. The scriptures so clearly teach the miraculous conception of Jesus that in order to maintain even a semblance of authority the Josephite is compelled to cut out whole chapters of scripture as spurious; many of them even going so far as to discredit the four gospels entirely. The first two chapters of Matthew and Luke alone leave the Josephite not even the fragment of an argument, therefore he is compelled to destroy them or surrender his position. No combination of words could be selected from the English language to more clearly and positively assert the miraculous conception of Jesus than does the statement found in these scriptures. Therefore it is only necessary to establish the genuineness of these chapters in order to deprive Mr.

Josephite of even the fragment of an argument. The following are a few of many reasons for our belief that the first two chapters of Matthew and Luke are genuine:

The Authorized Version of the Bible, being a translation by the ablest Greek, Latin and Hebrew scholars of the world at that time, contain them.

The Revised Version, both English and American editions, being a translation by the world's ablest scholars of modern times, contain them.

The whole world's Biblical scholars, both ancient and modern, and without any exception whatever, recognize them and pronounce them genuine; and yet you, Mr. Josephite, in the face of the scholarship of the entire civilized world, both ancient and modern, have the assurance to lift your comparatively feeble voice in opposition!

But to continue the evidence: It is a fact which no scholar of note will deny that the first two chapters of Matthew and Luke are found in all except one of the ancient manuscripts now extant which are entire; they are also found in a genuine epistle of Ignatius, the only apostolic father who had occasion to refer to them. Justine Martyr, Hegesippus and Clement of Alexandria, all of whom lived and wrote in the second century, have referred to them. Also Irenaeus and the fathers who succeeded him; Porphry and Julian, enemies of Christ and the Christian faith, and who wrote and labored to destroy it, mention these chapters. Thus we have an unbroken chain of evidence reaching back to the apostolic days. No room is left for doubt.

Mr. Josephite, you contend that the Bible, as originally written, did not contain these chapters, but that at some time since they have been added to the original text and that this corrupt Bible was palmed off upon the world, instead of the original, genuine text, and that you have just discovered, in these last days, this inconceivable deception and fraud. Now please tell me, do you think it possible today to add several chapters to the Bible, and the fraud not be discovered? No, of course you don't! Do you think that there has ever been a time since the Bible was written when such a fraud was possible? If you will consider a moment I think you will see that such an act would be utterly and absolutely impossible, either now or at any other period in the history of mankind. Therefore the bare fact that they are there —with no existing record of their having been added to the original text—is proof positive of their genuineness.

God, who can not lie, hath caused to be written in a book his will and purpose concerning this planet and its people, and therein made careful detail of how earth's children may become his people and share in the glories of the age to come. This book he placed in the hands of the children of men, to guide them in all things while time lasts. Mr. Josephite, do you really ask us to believe that Almighty God is so feeble that he has been unable to protect his word from corruption, and has permitted satan or some other agent of evil to engraft into his holy book several chapters of lies and falsehoods? Or has he merely been careless or heedless in the matter, and so permitted the corruption of his word, thereby giving his people for their guidance in these last days a corrupt Bible, containing a mixture of truth and lies? Can it be possible that he who can not lie calmly sits upon his throne above and permits this monstrous deception, bearing the stamp of his divine approval, to deceive his people? Or has he deputized you, Mr. Josephite, to go through his holy word, scissors in hand, to revise, reconstruct and restore the same to what you conceive to be its original purity?

Again, Mr. Josephite, don't you honestly think it would be more in harmony with faith in and duty to God, as his trusting and obedient children, to thankfully accept the book which he hands us as his word, believing that it comes to us exactly as he intended it should from the beginning? If we believe this, then who will dare to tamper with it or attempt to discredit or destroy any portion of it?

Mr. Josephite, did it ever occur to you that your sect is not confined to these last days? I find that you were quite numerous, even as far back as Jesus time. As evidence I submit the following scripture: "The high priest asked him and said unto him, Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? And Jesus said, I am. Then the high priest rent his clothes and saith, What need we any more witnesses? Ye have heard the blasphemy. What think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death" (Mark 14:61-64). "Pilate saith unto them, Take ye him and crucify him, for I find no fault in him. The Jews (Josephites) answered him, We have a law, and by our law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God" (John 19:6, 7). Poor silly fools! They thought he was the son of Joseph!

"And the high priest answered and said unto him, I adjure thee by the living God that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God. Jesus saith unto him, Thou hast said. * * * Then the high priest rent his clothes, saying, He hath spoken blasphemy. What think ye? * * They answered, He is guilty of death. Then did they (the Josephites) spit in his face, and smote him with the palms of their hands" (Matt. 26:62-67). They said, "Is not this Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know?" Your ancient brothers and ye modern Josephite are as near alike as two peas. They were "offended at him," and cruelly tortured and murdered him, because he dared to proclaim the grand old truth of which he was so justly proud, "I am the only begotten Son of God," not the natural son of Joseph, as ye Jews ignorantly believe.

Oh, my Josephite friend, are you safe and satisfied in such company? Are you willing, when he comes, to be numbered with those who cruelly murdered the Lord? Surely you stand on dangerous ground! And why? What possible advantage is gained by such a position? Granting, for argument's sake, that God has done so unaccountable thing as to cause to be written in a book for the salvation of the world his will and purpose, and then permitted false doctrine, by human agency, to get into this book, and so allowed it to reach us in these last days corrupted, and mixed with error and false doctrines, but bearing the stamp and authority of his holy word, and also his command for us to accept, believe and obey it

—I say, if such a thing were possible, and we do obediently believe what we find plainly stated therein, will God hold us responsible if what we find and believe be error? Nay, verily, Mr. Josephite, the ground you occupy is surely unsound. We stretch friendly hands across the chasm and invite you to come. The ground we stand on is sound and firm, and there is plenty of room and a heart full of welcome for you. But you must leave your hobby behind.

[We thank God for this trumpet blast for our Father's book, and for his Son, from one of his servants.—Editor.]

THE SEALING OF THE 144,000

Who are they, and what is the sealing? This sealing is done under the sixth seal. And the most important task to be mastered by the expositor is to divide rightly the symbolic from the literal. This being accomplished, the exposition is easy.

It will be noticed that after the symbols of the seals are given, literal language in explanation of the symbols are generally given. The second seal commences and ends with symbols, with literal explanatory language between the symbols. In the account of the sealing work the four angels, the winds, the earth, the sea an the trees are all symbols; and the angel ascending from the esat is another symbol; so is the seal, and the forehead on which the seal is impressed. Then follows literal language: "And I heard the number of them which were sealed; and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel."

In confirmation of this view I will say that this is the only place in this book in which a special work is brought to view in favor of Israel, as it is written: "There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob; for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins" (Rom. 11:26-27). We should not forget that Christ said that "Salvation is of the Jews." And in Rom. 11:8 we read: "Boast not against the branches. But if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee." Israel among the nations is the main factor in the plan of salvation (John 11:49-51). "Caiaphas, being high priest that same year, said unto them, Ye know nothing at all, nor consider that it is expedient for us that one man should die for the people and that the whole nation perish not. And this spake he not of himself; but being high priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation." Therefore the everlasting life of that nation is a fixed fact in the mind of God. Therefore we read: "Though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee" (Jer. 30:11).

It is selfish and unfair to give to the Jews all the curses that are written in the book and take all the blessings to ourselves by spiritualizing the plain testimony. It is the same Israel that is scattered that will be gathered. "Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattereth Israel will gather him and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock" (Jer. 31:10).

The angel says, "Hurt not the earth * * * till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads." This testimony indicates that the sealed ones were servants before they were sealed. This would apply to Jews, but not to Gentiles.

In Rev. 14th chapter the 144,000 appear again, where they are said to be "virgins," "not defiled with women." This can only be affirmed of Jews, for all Christian sects are more or less defiled with the false doctrines of Rome. Some are daughters of the harlot, some are granddaughters.

Again, the sealed are "the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb." This could not be said of Gentiles in the east part of this dispensation, but may be true of Jews, as being the first fruits of Israel's ingathering (Isa. 66:20).

Now it seems proper to inquire what will be the counterpart to the sealing of the servants of God in their foreheads. And as there is no record of such a work in the past history of the world we are compelled to look to the future for its fulfillment. In view of the divine utterances on the subject, together with God's covenant with Israel, to turn away ungodliness from Jacob and to gather them to their own land, where they are to remain forever. Paul says to the Ephesians: "After that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy spirit of promise" (Eph. 1:13). This sealing by the holy spirit perfected their understanding in the plan of salvation. And the sealing of the 144000 in their foreheads is undoubtedly for the same purpose, there being some knowledge that they lacked that it was necessary to impart to them. In our Lord's prayer in John 17:3 he says: "And this is life ternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." The Jew has the knowledge of the only true God, but lacks the knowledge of Jesus Christ their Messiah. Now I think it should teach us that this knowledge is what they lacked, and is what the sealing supplied when we read of them in Rev. 14:1: "And I saw, and behold, the Lamb standing on the Mount Zion, and with him a hundred and forty and four thousand, having his name and the name of his Father written on their foreheads" (Revised Version Diaglott, and American Bible Union).

This sealing work is what is necessary to be done for the Jews, and as God has promised to do it for them let us not doubt but that he will surely do it. The angel symbolizes a company, as we read, "till we have sealed," etc.

The sealing will be done in a time of peace, while the four angels hold the four winds. Such a time will in all probability come after the present war is over, when the nations will attempt to compel peace. Then will come the peace and safety cry.

By prophecy we know that the kaiser will fail of his purpose in this titanic war, because the prophet Daniel was shown four great earthly powers and no more. Charlemagne tried to unite again the different parts of the Roman Empire, but failed; so did Napoleon, and so will the kaiser.

In the last great war England and Russia will be the leading nations arrayed against each other; this could not be if the kaiser were to win this war. In Psalm 46:8 we read: "Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolations he hath made in the earth. He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth." And in Psalm 48:4-7 the same subject is continued: "For lo, the kings were assembled they passed by together. They saw it, and so they marveled; they were troubled, and hasteth away. Fear took hold upon them there, and pain, as of a woman in travail. Thou breakest the ships of Tarshish with an east wind." This is thought to be prophetic of the breaking of the British ships in the Mediterranean Sea (Ezekiel 27:26).

NOW

S. Roxana Wince

Read the word "now" backwards, and you have the word "won." Is it not significant when we think of what God says about this little word that our acceptance with him is made dependent upon the use we make of "now," the today of time, that our ultimate salvation is connected with the decisions of the very moment?

To decide now is to win the battle that will set us over into the eternal years. If we hear God's voice today we will not harden our hearts against him tomorrow, for the morrow will become to us another "now," out of which to spell another victory "won." And so it will go on through life.

There is no safety in delay. We can not bank on coming years. If we are to be God's servants he wants us, he needs us "now." He asks us to "give our bodies as a living sacrifice to him." He can use them thus, but if dead, as they are in a measure when old age has crept in, or when desire has benumbed the brain and paralyzed the limbs, of what worth are they in the broad mission fields of earth?

The hands can not build mission churches, set type or scatter tracts; the feet can not take the repentant man or woman, who is in such condition, to "the ignorant and out of the way," that they may hold forth to them the word of life. I do not say that there is no hope for the aged and sick, but that it is out of the question for them to make such a sweet and acceptable sacrifice of themselves to God as they might have made in earlier years, for "a living sacrifice" is the sacrifice of ourselves for the whole course of our lives. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." Notice God's command to remember him now. I "beseech you by the mercies of God" to do this, to surrender yourselves in such a way that all your principles, your motives, your affections, your ambitions, your manner of life will be changed, and you be as a new creature, "alive from the dead."

It is a crucifixion, a sacrifice, a death, that the believing, repentant, obedient soul goes through when he comes to God, for his baptism has in it all of these elements or symbols, and the sacrifice is considered a "holy" sacrifice because the believer, in his baptism, shows that the old man of sin has been put to death. His old self, all that he was in his old unregenerate state, was destroyed "by the sin-destroying efficacy of his union with the crucified Savior." And he "yields" henceforth his members as servants to righteousness unto holiness, or, as in 2 Thess. 2:13, "unto sanctification."

Why do you not come? Why do you put off obedience? Will there be any better time than now? Will you be any better prepared tomorrow? Any more willing? How my heart aches for the dear ones I know, who are throwing away their birthright chance to an heirship with Christ in an inheritance that will never fade away—a real inheritance, in the dominion of the world.

They read the Bible, they believe that man is mortal, that his only hope for future life comes through Christ and the resurrection, and that Christ is coming back to reign over all people, kindreds, tribes and nations; and none can outargue them in a discussion of these subjects, and yet they refuse to take the step that will name the name of Christ upon them—or, in plain terms, make it their own truly name, without which there is no possible chance of salvation.

What will there be tomorrow? Grim death stalking in at the door? Christ coming to change the living and waken the dead? No man is wise enough to tell.

Now! Now! Come now! The morrows are not yours. The moments, the hours, the days, the years are flying. Take the "now," and through it, though spelled backward, "fight the good fight of faith," and see "won" the crown and the life of God never ending years.

PUNCTUALITY

Eight Quaker ladies had an appointment, and seven were punctual and the eighth, being quarter of an hour too late, began apologizing for keeping the others waiting. The reply from one of them was: "I am sorry, friend, that thee should have wasted thine own quarter of an hour, but thee had no right to waste nearly two hours more of our time, which was not thine own." And of Washington it was said that when his secretary in some important occasion was late, and excused himself by saying that his watch was too slow, the reply was: "You will have to get another watch, or I another secretary." Napoleon used to say to his marshals: "You may ask anything of me but time.' And of John Quincy Adams it is said that in his long service in Congress he was never known to be late, and one day when the clock struck and a member said to the Speaker, "It is time to call the house to order," the reply was, "No, Mr. Adams is not in his seat yet." And while they were speaking Mr. Adams came in, he being punctual, while the clock was three minutes fast.

Half the value of anything to be done consists in doing it promptly. And yet a large class of persons are almost always more or less unpunctual and late. Their work is always in advance of them, and so it is with their appointments and engagements. They are late, very likely, in rising in the morning, and so in going to bed at night; late at their meals, late at the counting house or office; late at church, or at prayer meeting; late at their appointments with others. Their letters are sent to the postoffice just as the mail is closed. They arrive at the wharf just as the seamboat is leaving. They come into the depot just as the cars are going out. They do not entirely forget or omit the engagement or the duty, but they are always behind the time, and so are generally in haste, or rather in a hurry, as if they had been born a little too late and forever were trying to catch up with the lost time!—Selected.

EDITORIAL

Thanks to Sister Wince for a Christmas gift. Although belated, it is appreciated none the less.

During the week we have suffered by death the loss of Sister Eliza Musson. Obituary will be found on another page.

During May or June, 1914, Bro. J. W. Hardy was kind enough to contribute $3.59 toward the Helping Fund. For certain reasons The Restitution Company desires to learn the name of the bank which issued the check for $5.00, which included a year's subscription to the paper. Will Bro. Hardy please procure his paid check and send it to the Editor of The Restitution, the same to be returned to him as soon as endorsement is learned.

January 31st three more names were added to the list of believers in this city: Mrs. Salisbury, formerly neutral, mother of Sister Jennie Salisbury; "Aunt Mollie" Strong, formerly Baptist, Sister Jennie's aunt; and Elizabeth Telekey, formerly neutral, but whose immediate family and relatives are Catholics. We pray that these dear souls may "fight the good fight of faith" for the short time that remains for the people of God to fit themselves for the kingdom, unto which God's grace has called them.

Bro. Adams writes that he has just returned from Palmer and St. Paul, where he had good meetings. Two were baptized at Palmer. He also sends three renewals and two new subscribers, and makes the following remarks, which are worthy of being pondered by the Brotherhood: "I find that most of the brethren do not fail to send in their renewals for lack of funds; they just neglect it. If the matter is mentioned to them they are ready to respond. I try in each place I go to get renewals and new subscribers. I generally ask them if anyone one wants to renew or take The Restitution; and they generally take advantage of the opportunity. It saves them the trouble of sending themselves. If a brother in each church would look after this point you would not have to wait for each one to renew just when they get around to it."

APOCALYPTIC PROFOUNDITIES

"The Sealing of the 144,000," an article by Bro. Francis on another page, will be read with interest by such of our readers as enjoy delving into apocalyptic profoundities. In considering intricate subjects like this one able Bible students are led to different opinions. To our mind our dear Bro. Francis loses his usual equilibrium in a place or two in his article, which fault spoils his composition of symmetrical exposition. He admits that the four angels, the winds, the earth, the sea, the trees, the angel ascending from the east, the seal, and even the forehead sealed, are all symbols; but strangely claims that the "twelve tribes" and "children of Israel" are literal, although they are found in a list of symbolic things. The symbolical and literal can not be arbitrarily mixed in this fashion.

The reasons assigned for this mongrel interpretation are insufficient. No one is selfish enough to make the Jews suffer all the curses of the law, and then appropriate all of its blessings to themselves. On the contrary, we say that God's door of mercy is standing ajar for Israel as well as Gentiles. If they refuse to "come in" there is nothing for them but "curses" of the worst kind. To say less than this would be to condone sin. And to say that Israel alone is designated "the servants of God," that this form of speech can not apply to the Gentiles, is to read ourselves right out of the word of God. God have mercy upon us if we are not his servants!

Again, it is an unfounded assumption that because the 144,000 are called "virgins" and "first fruits," therefore they must be Jews. This claim is contradicted by the record. The Corinthians were Gentiles, yet Paul calls them a "chaste virgin" (2 Cor. 11:2). Believers away back in the days of James were "first fruits of his creatures" (Jas. 1:18). To make Rev. chapter 7 both future and Jewish, the claim is even made that no one can be sealed but a Jew. And then without any regard for the facts in the case the statement is made: "There is no record of such a work in the past history of the world." This assertion is woefully discordant with Paul's declaration to the Ephesians, who, by the way, were Gentiles (Eph. 2:11): "Ye were sealed" (Eph. 1:13).

In these editorial strictures our dear Bro. Francis will understand that our remarks are not personal, but have to do solely with the principle involved as to Bible teaching in regard to the matter at issue. Too many of our brethren are one-sided on this Jewish question. They go to extremes when writing on the subject. It seems to us that a mind that is discriminate enough to see beyond the symbols of angel, sea, trees, wind, forehead, etc., to the things which they signify ought to have no trouble in seeing beyond the symbols of the "twelve tribes" and "children of Israel," and so find out what these signs represent. The literal Jew is as much out of sight in these expressions as literal trees, wind, etc., are ignored in the other statements. The Jew is positively not in the premises, and Rev. 7 takes pains to intimate as much. When John comes to enumerate the tribes Levi is mentioned—a tribe that had no inheritance in Israel at all. "First the natural, afterward the spiritual" (1 Cor. 15:46). Hence it comes to pass that Levi has an inheritance in the spiritual arrangement of things. Dan, who had an inheritance under the law, is omitted in the apocalyptic count of the "twelve tribes." Ephraim, too, is omitted. Joseph is added. Thus Ephraim and Dan are left out of the apoclyptic enumeration. At the best count possible it looks like at least two tribes of Israel will escape getting "sealed," much to the discomfiture of some people we know.

The fact is the literalist and the futurist only make a muddle of Revelations. "The twelve tribes' and "the children of Israel" mean to such interpretators the Jews, and no one else. But the usage of apocalyptic figures effectually confounds these wise men. In describing the future state, the immortal state, John tells us that the New Jerusalem has twelve foundations, and on them "the names of the twelve tribes of Israel" (Rev. 21:9). Does anyone dare to say that this can not apply to Gentiles? Are we to step down and out, and "unselfishly" let the Jews rob us of the heavenly Jerusalem? Are our literalist friends prepared to carry out their contention that "the twelve tribes" only imports that the literal descendants of Israel are to dwell in the New Jerusalem? Let the striking promise in Rev. 3:12 answer: "He that overcometh, * * * I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, the New Jerusalem, * * * and my new name." These words bind together the sealing in Rev. 7, and the vision of the New Jerusalem in Rev. 21. The prophecy is Christian, not Jewish; it is for "he that overcometh," not for lying Jews (Rev. 3:9), "who both killed the Lord Jesus and their own prophets, and have persecuted us; and they please not God; * * * the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost" (1 Thess. 2:15, 16).

A man who habitually indulges in violent rage is laying up for himself a store of ills against advancing age, the least of which may be a general palsy—the greatest, a sudden and fatal fit of apoplexy.

COMMUNICATIONS

Bro. Huggins: As we pass into the new year I must write you that you may know how much I appreciate your kindness in sending me The Restitution, as I think it one of the best papers I ever read on the gospel of the kingdom. May God bless you and all the noble contributors of the paper. May all live long to warn the people of a coming judgment. Surely we are living in the time of the end. Christ and the saints will rule the nations and break them into shivers; the hail will sweep away the refuge of lies.

Your brother in Christ, JOHN WEEKS.

Bro. Huggins: I wish to speak through The Restitution a word of approval to Sister Almira Brooks for her short article under the heading, "The Star." In that short but good article the writer reasoned well. It is not always a writer can reason well. When we see such a person he is sure to attract attention by those who know the value of its power.

Our sister gives for her reason for writing that article this statement: "There is not much in this subject, only we should learn to read the scriptures right." Good, Sister Brooks. It is this careless, slipshod way of letting the words of the Bible drop from our lips (when they do) without any thought of what the language is or the meaning intended to convey that is cursing the religious world and blasting the cause of Christianity. Wish there were many more like Sister Brooks to insist on the habit of reading the Bible correctly. Sister Brooks, you did well, and, for one, I thank you for it.

Your brother in hope,

L. S. BRONSON.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES AND OUR DUTY

Dear Brethren:

Another year is opening before us. Will it be the glad year that will bring us home? God grant it may. To quote from a dear brother, "marvelous things are happening every hour."

Surely the present struggle in Europe will end in Armageddon. Listen to the command of God to the nations: "Prepare war. Wake up the mighty men. Let all the men of war draw near. Let them come up. Beat your plowshares into swords and your pruning hooks into spears."

Have they obeyed? Yes, all the mighty nations of Europe have wakened; they have come up to battle. Have they beat their plowshares into swords, their pruning hooks in spears? Yes. Look at the vast sums appropriated to weapons of war. Look at the money spent for vessels of destruction of all kinds. How little is given for the actual necessities of life! "Let the weak say I am strong." Are they saying it? Look at what was a short time ago a comparatively weak nation, Japan. What is she now? Able to cope with the strong powers. Look at what was not far back the little weak kingdom of Greece. Has she made herself strong? When she speaks the nations listen.

Read a little farther in this command to the nations: "Let them come up to the valley of Jehosophat, for there will I (the Lord) sit to judge all the heathen roundabout." Is this near?

Surely this generation shall not pass until all be fulfilled. Read the whole chapter and see what the "all" is.

For many, many years this preparation for war has gone on among the nations of Europe. Untold sums of money have been spent to build engines of destruction; gifted men have used all their force of reasoning, all their brain power, only to invent and build powerful and rapid-firing guns with which to slay one another. Even the unnatural has come to pass—man can sail his ships in the air, and from great heights drop destruction upon the earth. He causes fire to come down from the heavens. The slain of the earth is now many. It almost seems as if children had been begotten for the very purpose of war. Men must serve in this terrible work; if not of their own free will, they are compelled to do so by the power of the state. How long after these nations have battered one another to pieces, have sunk one another's ships, have destroyed the terrible guns of all kinds, killed the father and the sons—how long, I say, do you think it would take Europe to prepare for war on the great scale she has now? A new generation must be born and attain to manhood; new treasures must be accumulated wherewith to build again the weapons of war; new navies must be brought into existence, and finally new armies recruited. Where will they come from? Not one generation, but many will be needed to supply the armies Europe had only a few short months ago.

To the student of prophecy this must be the strife that leads to Armageddon. There is not enough of Gentile time to create another. Every year, ever month, brings it nearer. Things are moving rapidly now. We certainly are now in the beginning of the time of trouble such as never was.

I want to quote from one of our daily papers as follows: "Thousands of women of Austria, Germany and France are becoming insane and committing suicide because of the suspense brought on by the censor. * * The tragedy of silence is killing the women of Europe. * * * It is killing the best women in the world—women without whom there can not be a new Europe. If this war does not end almost at once there will be nothing left of Europe but a page of history."

This after a few short months of strife. How many decades do you think it would take after the end to bring Europe back where she was on the first day of August, 1914? More than Gentile times can furnish. Knowing these things, it is high time we aroused ourselves, put on the whole armor of God, fill our lamps and cleanse our robes. All things cry, "Work while the day lasts."

There is an isolated fund somewhere; there are those whom Christ died to save who can help in this work. There is a cry from the Pacific coast: "Come over and help us." If every member of God's church would give one dollar a year (eight and one-third cents per month) an evangelist could go in and out among the churches and isolated ones, both of the west and the east. Brethren, can not someone in each state or section of a state take hold of this matter systematically and put it through? I do not think we need be troubled about the evangelist. God has reserved to himself many who have not bowed the knee to Baal. I feel sure there are brethren in Christ sound in the faith and in practice who could and would build us up in the most holy faith, and bring light to those who sit in darkness. We can not carry our offerings to Jesus when he calls us; give them to him now.

What are his commands to his messengers? "Call my saints together, those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." Only that which costs the giver something is prized by heaven. May God keep each one of his children from the evil that is overwhelming the world until he come whose right it is to reign.

THE SECOND PSALM

Abstract of a Sermon by J. H. Thomas, M. D.

It is thought that David composed this Psalm after he had taken Jerusalem from the Jebusites and made it the head or capital of the kingdom. The Philistines, hearing of this, encamped in the valley of Rephaim, nigh to Jerusalem; and Josephus says that all Syria, Phoenicia and other warlike people united their armies to those of the Philistines in order to destroy David before he had strengthened himself in the kingdom. David, having consulted the Lord (2 Sam. 5:17-19) gave them battle and overthrew the whole of his enemies. This being so, we can see the force of this Psalm in celebrating the taking of Jerusalem and the overthrow of all the kings and chiefs of the nations.

But if we turn to Acts we find that Paul understands it as prophetic of Jesus, "God's Anointed" (Acts 4:25-27). While Paul makes an application of the prophecy in the violence to and cutting off Jesus, yet it is not the complete fulfillment, for David conquered his enemies and established the throne or kingdom of Israel on Mount Zion. So Jesus is yet to subdue his enemies and establish the kingdom of God upon Mount Zion.

It is at this time that the nations shall rage, and the people imagine a vain thing. Yes, vain in the extremest sense of the word to antagonize him whose right it is to rule in building again the tabernacle of David and setting up the ruins thereof. Yet they will assuredly gather themselves together for that purpose, for Zechariah tells us that all nations shall be gathered against Jerusalem. And God says by the same prophet that in that day he will make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all people; all that burden themselves with Jerusalem shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it.

How plainly this fact of their gathering against Jerusalem proves the nations of the earth are void of faith in the book of God. How frequently has God set forth in type this great gathering together against the establishing of his righteous rule in the earth. Amalek raised his hand against the throne of the Lord, so Moses records, and perished from the earth. So the Philistines and nations contiguous to Jerusalem gathered against David and were destroyed. So the Jewish people arrayed themselves against Jesus and slew him, but the awful destruction that followed in the overthrow of Jerusalem is dreadful to contemplate—all of which is but a shadow of that terrible destruction yet to fall upon the nations, but they heed it not, being faithless in what God has spoken. Therefore the kings or rulers of the earth set themselves (see second verse).

"Let us break their bonds asunder." This is exactly what the Jewish people said: "We will not have this man to rule over us." But what saith the next verse? "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh (spoken after the manner of man) and speak unto them in his wrath." This he did to the Jews who slew his Son, his Anointed, and vexed and ruined them by the Roman armies. So shall he destroy all peoples that lift up their hand against Jesus, God's Anointed, when he comes for the controversy of Zion. Therefore he says in the next verse: "Yet have I set my king over my holy hill Zion. I will declare the decree." (Margin, "I will declare for a decree." New version, "I will declare the decree.") Notice the peculiarity of the words: David is speaking of the heathen and of what God will do to them. Therefore David says: "He (God) that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh," etc. But at the sixth verse the manner of speech changes and he speaks in the first person and past tense: "Yet have I set my king," etc. The reason why the sixth verse is in the past tense is because he is speaking of that which had been decreed, then he concludes to declare the decree, tell what it was, so the seventh verse commences, "I will declare the decree," which decree is concerning Jesus, God's Anointed, not yet born.

"Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee." Some think this has reference to his resurrection from the dead, and quote Acts 13:33. I don't think Paul quotes this Psalm to prove that Jesus was begotten by or through resurrection from the dead, but quotes several passages to show that this man was the one promised, and God's Son—this is the one of whom God speaks when he says in the Second Psalm, "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee." Paul says in the first chapter of Romans, that Jesus Christ was declared to be the Son of God, with power by or through the resurrection from the dead. In this he acknowledges him to have been God's Son before his resurrection, but by a resurrection he was God's Son with power. And John says, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever," etc. He was God's begotten Son when he came to do the will of his Father.

But what is the decree concerning this Son? The answer is, "I will give thee the heathen (or nations) for thy inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." The whole earth then will be possessed by him whose right it is to rule the kingdoms of the world. What a mighty change in the civil, ecclesiastical and political conditions of the earth, for the next verse tells us that "he shall break them in pieces like a potter's vessel."

This may seem severe or cruel or unkind, but it can not be helped. Wrong has no rights; the nations are in the wrong. They have, as were the Jews, been warned by word and by example, but they heed it not, and when he whose right to rule comes to introduce a reign of righteousness they lift up their hands against him and perish in the attempt. The tenth verse is a kind injunction: "Be wise, now therefore, O ye kings; be instructed (or rather reformed), ye judges of the earth. Kiss the Son."

OBITUARY

Sister Eliza Musson

Born August 2, 1843, in old Weston Huntingtonshire, England; died January 31, 1915, at Cleveland, Ohio. She emigrated to America in 1854, coming direct to Cleveland, and settled on Broadway. She was the fourth daughter in a family of six girls. After the death of her youngest sister, and the marriage of the others, she, with her father and mother, went to live with her sister Emma, who was Sister Wm. Pate. During the ensuing years Sister Musson, as she was lovingly and familiarly known, "Aunt Lidy," was an untiring worker in her sister's home, caring for each baby as though they were her own.

In 1880, after the death of her sister, Mrs. W. H. Hudson, she took charge of her family, consisting of three children, and for nine years took the place of mother to them. After Mr. Hudson's second marriage she again took up her home with Sister Pate, and with the exception of a few years spent with her sister Anne (Mrs. Hodson) she continued to live there until the death of Bro. and Sister Pate and the breaking up of the home. Since this time she spent a short while with her niece, Mrs. Weed, but of late years has made her home with Sister Hattie Sanford. Until three weeks before her death she had scarcely known a day in bed. At this time she contracted a cold, and, thinking a change would be beneficial, went to spend a week with her niece, Sister Lang. A few days later she took to her bed and gradually sank to her death. She seemed to realize that the end was near, as she took occasion to tell the family that she felt it was time for her to go, being ready and willing that God's will should be hers, and asked that all meet the condition with fortitude, and as becometh children of the Most High not to grieve over the fact that she could no longer be with us.

She became a member of the Church of God thirty-six years ago, being the first of Bro. Pate's family to obey the truth, after he himself had been baptized. She was immersed in Lake Erie at the foot of Willson Avenue by Bro. Levi Cattell, and has been a faithful servant of her Master ever since. Her disposition was retiring, and yet very assertive when it came to upholding the truth. Her relatives and friends who have been close to her know here as an exemplification of meekness and love beyond the ordinary, and her nephews and nieces will miss one who can not be replaced, and whose noble acts will ever remain a sweet memory and a guide to a better and more upright life.

Funeral services were held in the Church of God, 10623 Lee Avenue, Cleveland, O., February 2nd, attended by a large concourse of relatives, friends, brethren and sisters. After a discourse by Bro. Huggins on Numbers 23:10, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like hers," Sister Musson was laid to rest in the "Congregation of the dead" until her Master returns in glory, when God's people shall "arise and shine" in a halo of majesty that shall never fade (Isa. 60:1).

Edward M. Gates

Born November 12, 1856; died January 22, 1915.

Bro. Edward M. Gates was born in Indiana 57 years, 2 months and 10 days ago. He was married in Sumner County, Kan., February 17, 1886, to Miss Ella W. Randolph by Squire Dean, at his residence. To this union were born three children—Ida O. Huff, Harry E. Gates, and Clair V. Gates, all of Quinlan, Okla. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from Job 14:14. He was baptized into Christ in 1914. He was a patient sufferer from that dread disease, cancer. He expressed a desire to be laid to rest to await the soon coming of Jesus. Funeral services were conducted in a nearby school house, from which he was taken and laid to rest until the Life Giver comes.

"Sleep on, dearest one, and take thou thy rest; and when Jesus comes then thou wilt be blest."

THE DEVIL: IS HE A PERSONAL BEING?

Article 4

We suppose that most people if asked if satan is a good or bad person would instantly answer, "A bad person, of course." Suppose, then, in answer to this acknowledgment on their part, I should say that the Bible reveals God himself, or rather his direct messenger, to be a satan! Well, I presume if we were living in the time of a few hundred years ago they would take me outside the city and stone me until I died, charging me with being guilty of blasphemy.

Now it is a fact that character neither good nor bad is necessarily associated with the word "satan." Satan means adversary, and that may be an adversary for good or bad, as the circumstances may permit. You recall upon one occasion Balaam, the prophet, was about to proceed to curse Israel at the instigation of Balak, and this contrary to the command of God (Num. 22:22). Now carefully read verse 22: "And the angel of the Lord stood in the way for an adversary against him." Now the Hebrew text for the word "adversary" is satan. Then the correct reading of the verse is: "Behold, I went out to be a satan unto thee, because thy way is perverse before me" (verse 22, 32). We gather from this that the simple meaning of the word satan is one opposing, whether that be to oppose one doing good or one doing evil; in either case the one opposing is an adversary, hence a satan.

GEO. B. ALLDRIDGE.

Carlyle well said that the lack of reverence was one of the fatalest maladies of the present age Public and private well-being withers for want of it. Instead of reverence there is conceit and scorn and frivolity. The fountain of all reverence is reverence for God. What is to be done in an age that accounts reverence for God a superstition? It can not be cured by arugment.—Robert Roberts.

WHEN WILL THE BRIDEGROOM COME?

By Sister H. M. B.

As to the exact time of our Lord's coming we do not know, neither is it intended that we should know; but one thing we do know—that the Bridegroom will not come until the bride hath made herself ready.

Dearly beloved, let us live each day in joyful expectation of the Bridegroom's return, having on our wedding garments, so that when the cry is heard, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him," we will have our lamps trimmed and burning, so that we may enter in with him to the marriage before the door is shut.

When we see all these appalling conditions around us, such as war, the white slave traffic and all the kindred evils which we are powerless to check, we realize that this earth is under satanic rule, and our hearts cry out, O come, Lord Jesus, come quickly, and take unto theyself thy great power and reign. Then if we are found faithful he will give us power over the nations, and, associated with him, we will be able to put down all evil authority and power. O glorious hour! Are we praying for it to come? Let us remember, "The fervent, earnest prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

Dear brethren, in these last days let us not be lulled to sleep, as the world is, with the cry of "Peace, peace, when there is no peace," but let us awake and put on the whole armor of God, that we may stand against the wiles of the devil.

Great and precious promises God hath given us, that if faithful we may have an inheritance in his glorious kingdom and share with his dear Son in blessing the nations. Surely the crown is worth striving for. Who would not gladly lay aside all the cares of this life and run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.

The admonition is, "Be ye ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." If we are ready at all times to receive him it matters not whether he comes today, tomorrow or next year—we will be ready when he does come. Let us be happy and rejoice in him always, and let our daily prayer be, "Thy kingdom come."

Be a friend to the world, do a kindness whenever opportunity offers; be quiet, calm, self-possessed and self-controlled; and then you will discover the very essence of Christianity.—Hepworth.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of Rom. 10:14-17), and belief in, the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by Baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31). PRAYER

Our Father, regard us, we pray thee now, and shed abroad thy gracious influences upon all our hearts and minds, that in hearing thy blessed word we may receive from thyself that which shall abide with us for many days, and in the strength of which we may go. We lift up our humble desires and hopes to thee, and beseech thee to be still near us, and give blessing to thy people, that the provisions of thy house may satisfy all hungry souls and incite many to desire thee who have hitherto been content to be without thee. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

NEW JERUSALEM

I have taken this subject and the thoughts attending the inauguration of divine authority, not because I felt you did not know, or that I could bring to your attention anything new, but because the wonderful and inspiring words of the Bible are rich with the things of the kingdom, which blessings we often miss because we are so easily overwhelmed with the things of this life.

Through numerous prophecies and parables the kingdom has been foretold. but I have only chosen a few out of the number: Psalm 37:34; 89:35, 36; 102:16, 17, 19, 21, 22; 145:10-13; Isa. 2:1-4; Jer. 23:5, 6; 31:33, 34; and Isa. 35th chapter.

We might go thus to all the prophets—Ezekiel, Hosea, Joel, Amos, Zechariah, and gather from their vast treasure the words spoken in jubilant language of the times of restitution. "For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." The sleeping saints and the living are changed, not as subjects but rulers. Christ wraps them all around with immortality, transforms their bodies and fashions them like his own glorious body. Think of the pain and weariness, the weakness and discouragements in that word "mortal." Think of the glory, the honor, the qualities of imperishable and incorruptible bodies, the rewards, bound up in that word "immortality."

Because we are the children of light we are chosen and shown the secrets of God, and the future is open to our understanding, while the world lies in ignorance. "Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare; before they spring forth, I tell you of them." The Lord holds his patience, he restrains his vengeance, until his appointed time; but hear him as he tells of his scorching anger (Isa. 42:13-15; 16:2). "The Lord shall go forth as a mighty man; he shall stir up jealousy like a man of war; he shall cry, yea roar; he shall prevail against his enemies." In the animal world the roar of the lion is something before which the weaker animals cringe and flee; in like manner does God go forth to punish the nations, and he shall prevail against his enemies.

List to the cry of the Lord to his beloved. For whose pleasure but his own does God pardon the iniquities of his chosen people? (Isa. 43:1-4, 11, 21-25). For the sake of the race God would save us as his own; he has given trials, vicissitudes, scourgings even, but for his own joy and praise he will lead them back (Isa. 51:11; 45:2, 5, 6, 17, 18, 22-25).

Then when Israel is justified the whole immortal and incorruptible throng shall make heaven's arches ring with the glad strains: "Worthy the Lamb that was slain;" "Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth."

Look at some of the texts on the restoration of Jerusalem: Jer. 30:17-22; Jer. 31:23-25; 31:38; Isa. 33:20-22; 65:8-25; 66:1, 2, 6, 10; 1:18, 19, 26, 27; Psalms 46:4; 48:1; 87:1-3; 122:1-7.

God has a gracious purpose, and it is to people the earth with a righteous race and fill it with his glory. Think of the blessed hope which makes us partakers of the divine nature, share the society of Jesus and the redeemed of every age, free from sickness, pain and death. No sigh shall tell of hidden grief or unrequited longing; no shadow of anticipated trouble, but "abundance of peace so long as moon endureth." "They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house, and thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures. For with thee is the fountain of life." The saints' inheritance will never be marred; the fair plains made new will never be polluted with the impious tread of the sinner. Psalm 21:7-13: "Thou hast given him his heart's desire, and hast not withholden the request of his lips." Surely this denotes the state of intimate and divine companionship to which the blessed Redeemer admits his beloved in relation to himself.

And to be there as ruler with the righteous judge! Where can we learn the way to rule righteously and justly but through the divine writings? The hours of silent perusal and assimilation of God's word in the tedious tasks of life will blossom out in our usefulness as kings and priests in the glorious dawn of peace (Isa. 2:1-4, 20, 21).

The kings, then, will have no temporal powers, but imperishable glory and strength and an unerring wisdom that will qualify them for every conceivable work which God may require them to do. They shall enter the legislative palaces of the nations and disperse them forever. They shall distribute the world's wealth, and take possession of the gold and silver and cattle on a thousand hills; and, as representative of their God, shall see to it that life is made beautiful, pure, free and bright, and that mankind are given opportunity to do justice to the powers wherewith they have been endowed. The landowner must give up the broad acres for which he never toiled; the lawyer must burn his books, for the only just laws will go forth from Mount Zion, the word of the Lord at Jerusalem. There will be no more need of the merchant who is disturbed at the fluctuations of the market. There will be no politicians to go campaigning; there will only be one party over all the earth. The scientist will be found wanting, for in Christ and his are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. In the grand cleaning and purifying process carried out by God's elect the clergymen even will be wiped out, for to kings has been committed these things, even to the feeding of the subjects with wisdom and understanding of the Great Heart. This wisdom of God is a divine reality, and breathes of future power and glory. Then all human splendor, pride and power shall be brought low, and every tyrant dethroned. Then all authority shall be placed in the hands of those who have struggled to obtain this honor through self-sacrifice. Then shall wars be banished to the ends of the earth. Then shall there be true liberty, abundance, safety and enlightenment for all classes and all conditions of mental, moral, social and physical well-being. All this shall be guaranteed by the power, the infallibility, the deathlessness of the occupant of David's throne, and the host of brethren who share his nature, and exercise with him a rulership of strength,, truth and justice, under which the whole earth shall smile with intelligence and peace and plenty, and the very trees of the field shall clap their hands. Imagine one Ruler to whom the whole earth belonged; the grassy hills, the waving forests, the broad plains, the fowl and cattle; One whose wisdom and beneficence were equal to his universal ownership and irresistible power. He shall scatter the proud in the imagination of their hearts; the riches of the Gentiles shall be poured out at his feet, and there shall not remain a spot upon the whole earth that shall escape the scepter of his righteous and beneficent rule (Isa. 11).

And if for a little season, as written in Rev. 20, amidst the joyous and soul-stirring harmony of the reign of Christ, sin and crime shall be allowed to enter their harsh, discordant notes, which shall attract the attention and service of the selfish sinner, those same jangling tones shall sound forth their own knell of death. Only a short time can they interfere; for sin, crime and death must surely lose themselves before the awful majesty of truth, justice and love (Rev. 21:3, 4, 23:27).

The holy city, the Father's house, will certainly be the most beautiful and glorious object in the universe. There will be no tears, for all cause for tears shall be removed. There has been an accomplishment of that sublime sentence, "It is done." The dark shadow of sin has passed away. The wicked, root and branch, are wiped out of the land of the living, and the universal anthem of praise and thanksgiving goes up from a redeemed world and clean universe to the covenant-keeping God.

"And the spirit and the Bride say, Come." Come, if you would inherit mansions where nothing evil can enter; if you would have a right to the tree of life; if you would drink of the river of life that flows from God's throne. Come, if you would walk its streets of gold, if you would obtain eternal life through those pearly gates; if you would see the king in his beauty on his azure throne. Come, if you would be of that throng who are forever free; if you would partake of that rapture that thrills the triumphant hosts as they behold before them unending ages of glory and joys ever new.

The place of gathering has nothing but attraction. Jesus, the fairest among ten thousands, is there. The throne of God and the Lamb, in the glory of which the sun disappears; the city of jasper and gold, whose builder and maker is God; the river of life sparkling with the glory of God and flowing in infinite purity and peace; the tree of life, whose leaves are for healing; fields of living green, flowers that never fade, streams that never dry, fruits that never decay, crowns that never dim, and harps that never discord.

We must be there. We must bask in the forgiving smiles of God. We must repose under the tree of life and never grow weary; we must drink of that fountain and thirst nevermore. We must walk in the golden sands and feel we are no longer exiles; we must put off the rent garments of our warfare and put on the white robes of triumph; we must exchange the toil-worn, dusty girdle of our pilgrimage for the glorious vesture of immortality, and feel that sin and the curse can never more pollute us.

And as a sweeping conclusion to the patient forbearance of our earthly life, and the divine rights of the chosen judges and ministers in Christ's reign, let us again ponder while Christ brushes aside forever the curtains of death and reveals to our vision a world most wondrous and glorified, a world never more cut off from our view, a world where God can live and is happy to live, loving and beloved; a world which shall last in uninterrupted bliss forever and ever.

FAITH

Flora A. Wood

In Hebrews 11:6 we find this statement: "Without faith it is impossible to please God." This is a strong admonition, and one we would do well to take heed. Mark the emphasis of the declaration. It is not that we are exhorted to have faith, or that faith is a good thing to have; but it is most positively stated that "without faith it is impossible to please God." And unless we are pleasing in the sight of God we have no promise of salvation.

We would inquire, then, What is the meaning of the word "faith?" Webster gives this definition: "Faith, the assent of the mind to the truth of what is declared by another, resting on his authority and will take it without other evidence. In theology, the assent of the mind or understanding to the truth of what God has revealed." We find this to be in accord with the definition given by the spirit in Heb. 11:1. There it is stated that faith is the confidence (margin) of things hoped for. How is this? Why, we believe the promises of God on his own assertion, and therefore have confidence that we will receive the things promised. Further, faith is said to be the evidence of things not seen. What evidence? Why, the word of God alone.

This being established, let us look at some of the promises of God (see Psalm 37:9, 11, 29). If in place of this we say the righteous shall be recompensed in heaven; he shall inherit the heaven of God and abide in it forever; the wicked shall live in eternal torment in a burning hell—have we any faith in the word of God? God says the soul that sinneth it shall die. If we say, "Oh, no, it lives forever," do we believe God? The word of God tells us that our eternal life comes to us through Christ, and that he will come again to earth and bestow it upon those who are his. If we say, "Oh, no, we have inherited immortality and have it in our being already," have we the faith in God that is pleasing to him? God has said he will set up a kingdom on the earth and give it to Christ and the saints. If we say that is a mistake, the kingdom is already set up in our hearts, is our faith acceptable to God?

There are many other statements of God which professed Christians wrest from their true significance to suit their carnal ideas, but we will notice but one more. In the scriptures Jesus is plainly declared to be the Son of God by begettal. "Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife. For that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Spirit" (Matthew 1:20).

The angel Gabriel said to Mary, "The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God" (Luke 1:35). "Then Joseph, being raised from sleep, did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife, and knew her not till she had brought forth her first-born child" (Matthew 1:24, 25).

Here God says Jesus is his Son by begettal. Dare anyone dispute with God by saying Jesus is the son of Joseph? The scriptures plainly say Joseph knew not his wife until after Jesus was born. Will anyone say the Spirit errs, that Jesus was conceived of Joseph? Again, "When as his (Jesus') mother was espoused to Joseph, before they came together she was found with child of the Holy Ghost. Then Joseph her husband was minded to put her away privily" (Matt. 1:18, 19).

Here the word of God tells us plainly that Mary was with child before they came together, and that the child was begotten by the Holy Spirit of God. Joseph had not yet been told this, and was minded to not take Mary for his wife, thus himself denying the paternity of Jesus. Now, to believe these written truths from the scriptures is to have faith, is to believe God on his own authority without other evidence. The word tells us that without this faith it is impossible to please God.

How do those stand who deny these plain statements? First, they are in the awful place where they make God a liar, in that they virtually say he testifies falsely. Again, they (perhaps unwittingly) make our Lord Jesus Christ an unclean thing, in that he was born out of wedlock, not of the spirit, but of the lust of the flesh. Again, they array themselves against the Most Holy One. He declares a virgin shall be with child. They make Mary a fallen woman, making her with child by Joseph before marriage. Catholics adore Mary as "the mother of God;" Josephites certainly give Joseph a high honor, in that salvation comes from him, if he was the author of the Savior's life. Do not those stand in a terrible place who thus array themselves against the word of the most high God? The words of Peter might apply here: "Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God."

Some think these things should not be spoken upon, or at least but softly. In view of the fact that we shall all soon stand in the presence of the Lord, knowing as we are known, does it not behoove every child of God to expose error and bring to all, if possible, the truth, shining with the light from God's own holy word? We find at Matthew 12:22-33 that Jesus healed a blind and dumb man. The Pharisees out of their unhallowed heart said: "He doeth this by Beelzebub. Because they said this Jesus said unto them, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men (not a limited term) but the blasphemy against the Holy Spirit shall never be forgiven in any age" (not limited to a certain time). Now, what had those Jews done? They had attributed the work of the Holy Spirit to an evil source. God says Jesus was begotten by the Holy Spirit. Some men say: "Not so, but by the lust of man." Could there be worse speaking against the Spirit of God? This is a solemn thing! Let us in these evil days take heed to ourselves and to the doctrine.

Adam was a son of God, but how? By creation. He was made of the dust of the ground; he was of the earth earthy. The saints are sons and daughters of God, but how? By adoption. Someone wrote that Jesus was made the Son of God by resurrection. Let such read these words spoken by Jehovah, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matthew 3:17; Mark 1:11; Luke 3:22), words uttered over three years before Jesus died and was resurrected. The scripture says in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established. Here are three credible witnesses who say a voice from heaven proclaimed Jesus as his Son. Peter, another witness, said he heard the same in the holy mount. These are the words of God himself. Let us draw near to him in truth; let us receive his words, for they alone are spirit and truth; let us seek a salvation through Jesus, the Son of God, for there is salvation through no other name than that of God which is manifested to us through Jesus the Anointed One. Soon he is coming to take to himself those who have the Father's name written in their foreheads. How do we know we have it written there? When with the mind (symbolized by the forehead) we receive Jesus as the Son of God, obey his teaching, we through coming into Christ have the Father's name called upon us. Jesus inherited this name; we receive it by coming into Christ, through being adopted by God. May he help us to hold the truth firmly and reverently.

AN EXPOSITION OF MATT. 10:28

"And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

What is the meaning of the word "hell?"

It is assumed that the wicked will live forever in torment, from the fact that the word "hell' denotes a place of unceasing woe, in which bad men will always exist in pain. We will now proceed to examine the term in question and see if it denotes any such place.

The word translated "hell" in the text under consideration in Greek is Gehenna, and is a compound of two words, Ge signifying earth or land, and Hinnom and properly means the valley of Hinnom, southeast from Jerusalem, and was anciently celebrated for the horrid worship of Moloch. It was polluted with all manner of carcasses of animals and dead bodies; constant fires were kept burning to avert the pestilence which would infect the city. In this place the Jews placed the brazen image Moloch; they not only sacrificed animals upon it, but even threw their children upon its arms, from whence they fell into the fire at its feet, and to avoid the shrieks and groans of dying infants they would beat the Toph (a drum) to drown their cries. Hence they anciently called it "Tophet," signifying a drum. This practice was abolished by Josiah (2 Kings 23:10). This word occurs twelve times in the New Testament, which the reader can examine (Matt. 5:22, 29, 30; 10:28; 18:9; 23:15, 33; Mark 9:53, 45, 47; Luke 12:5; James 3:6). These are the twelve places in the New Testament where this word is found. We find no place in all these references that sustains the popular view, that it is a place of ceaseless woe. The reader will perceive that the meaning is different from what is generally supposed. It is a true principle in language, that we must determine the idea of a writer by the words he uses. Now if Gehenna necessarily means a place of unending woe it could not be questioned, but what the Bible taught eternal misery; as the real issue is on the meaning of the word itself, and we have before said it properly means the valley of Hinnom, southeast of Jerusalem.

But here we are met with Mark 9:43, where the word Gehenna occurs and associated with it the following expressions: "Unquenchable fire," and "where the worm dieth not;" from this it is inferred that Gehenna must mean endelss misery, because it is clothed with such symbols as to denote eternal perpetuity. As this is the strongest argument that can be introduced upon this point, we will notice those phrases upon which the argument rests.

1. "The fire is not quenched."

It is presumed from this that the wicked will endure forever, because the fire is not to be quenched. But is this a sound principle? Does it follow that because a fire is thus represented that whatever is cast into it must endure forever? Were this a true position, then any combustible material cast into such a fire would last forever. But, says the reader, is there any example of such a nature? Certainly there is. We have a case in point in Matt. 3:11, 12. Christ will "gather his wheat into his garner, but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Here the office work of such a fire is clearly expressed. Chaff is combustible material, and yet it is to be burned with unquenchable fire. This, nowever, is symbolical of the wicked's overthrow.

I will now cite the reader's attention to a class of texts where the idea of destruction is conveyed and in each case the fire is represented as not being quenched (Isa. 1:29-31; 34:10-14; 66:24; Jer. 7:17, 20; 27:27; Ezek. 20:45, 48). These examples will show the reader that wherever the phrase occurs it is indicative of total destruction. Now can we for one moment suppose that Jesus intended any other idea than that of death when he used the expression to the Jews who had always so understood it from the Old Testament? Hence we claim it as a strong proof for destruction.

2. "The worm dieth not."

This phrase was borrowed from Isa. 66:24, and among the Jews was well understood. Around the fires of Gehenna worms were constantly feasting on parts of the dead bodies which the fire did not reach; so between the fire and the worms there was a total destruction of all that was cast into Gehenna. The worm is in all places in God's word an emblem of death and mortality. Please examine the following texts: Job 27:14; 24:30; 19:26; Acts 12:23. The worms lived around the fires of Gehenna and consumed what was not burned by fire; hence both these symbols are against the idea of enduring pain in hell. Now inasmuch as the fires of Gehenna were clothed with such figures, and for over a thousand years everything that had been cast into it had been destroyed, can we suppose that Jesus intend edto convey the idea of eternal suffering, when such a figure had always conveyed an opposite idea? Hence it is evident that Gehenna, wherever used by the Savior, was in harmony with the idea entertained by the Jewish nation, viz., Destruction.

Therefore we conclude that in Matt. 10:28, when speaking of casting the wicked into Gehenna, meant to convey the idea of death. And indeed he says, "Fear him who is able to destroy (not keep alive) both soul and body in hell." Hence soul and body both were to be destroyed in this Gehenna, and not tortured forever. And this position is in harmony with the whole Bible, which represents that the wicked will experience

1. Death (Rom. 6:23; Ezek. 18:4; Rom. 7:5; James 1:15).
2. Will be destroyed (Job 21:30; Ps. 5:6; Heb. 12:29; Matt. 7:13; Acts 3:23; Phil, 3:19).
3. They will perish (John 3:15, 16; 2 Pet. 3:9; Ps. 37:20; 73:27; 2 Cor. 2:15).
4. Lose Life (Matt. 10:39; John 12:25; Mark 8:35).

These proofs are sufficient to show that when the wicked are cast into hell they will not endure forever, but must cease to be (Ps. 37:10).

We ask the candid reader if he can behold anything in the text which we have briefly examined that proves endless suffering in the regions of hell? Can he find any such idea as that the soul is immortal and will live forever? It seems to me he can not. We leave the subject for your candid consideration, dear reader, hoping that we may gain life through Christ. H. V. REED.

BEREAN DEPARTMENT

Dear Bereans:

I have been requested to supply an article for the Berean column, and in reading a little magazine I came across the following article, which I thought others would like to read and which is far superior to anything I could ever compose. I think on these things a great deal, but when it comes to writing them so they are interesting to others, I find it impossible.

Happiness is such a close, vital, human thing, so close to us all, that I am surprised more of us haven't attained it. But I suppose the cares of life, the rush of the office, the hundred petty little things that make up your daily round of life, have prevented us from seeing the good, the beautiful and the true that are around us.

I have tried to say before that happiness is the playing of life's game, playing it for every bit of strength, every bit of determination and will power that is in us. And when we play it that way, what a vista of undreamed-of pleasures and joys is ours—a panorama of human incidents and passions and delights that will fill us with the great happiness of being alive.

Little children are happy because they play it that way. Have you ever noticed them—they do not fret and worry and cry for things they have not. Rather do they play and amuse themselves with what is around them. I have seen a baby enjoy itself for hours with an ear of corn or a raggedy doll. But, Oh! how they play!

Prayer

It behooves us to petition our Creator for the mercies and blessings, to acknowledge him in all our ways. It is not prayer to be seen and heard of men that is pleasing to God, but the petition offered up in sincerity and in accord with God's will, as recorded in the scriptures. May our lives, our actions, manifest a spirit of thankfulness, a disposition to commit our ways unto the Almighty. We must avoid all shams, all Phariseeism, or our words will be only as sounding brass or tinkling cymbal.

When thou prayest thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are; for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily, I say unto you, They have their reward (that for which they sought, viz., the praises of men). But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. But when ye pray, use not vain petitions, as the heathen do, for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking" (Matt. 6:5-7). KATHRYN TOWNSEND.

Everything that thou reprovest in another thou must avoid in thyself.—Cicero.

WATCH

A Bible Lesson Mark 13:34-37

The writer led the midweek Bible study February 3rd. The subject treated under four subheads, the following being an abstract of the lesson:

1. Watch is a commandment (Rev. 3:2, 3; 1 Cor. 16:13; Luke 21:36; John 15:14; Rev. 22:14; 1 John 2:2-4; 5:3).

2. What shall we watch for? (Mark 13:33; Matt. 24:42; 2 Pet. 3:12; Heb. 9:28; Luke 21:28; Titus 2:13; Phil. 3:20, 21).

3. Blessed are those who watch (Luke 12:37-39); Rev. 16:15; Luke 12:40-44; Matt. 7:24, 25; John 13:17; Matt. 25:1-13).

4. What the watchers will see to show them that the second coming is near (Luke 21:29-31; Matt. 24:24-27; 2 Tim. 13:13; Matt. 24:36-44; 1 Thess. 5:1-8; Luke 21:20-23; Zech. 14:1-4; Joel 3:1-2).

I fear some of us forget to watch ourselves and our brothers or sisters to see what they are doing. Rather we are too ready to find fault with them for what they are doing. We never stop a moment to think what we are doing when we talk about them. Would a brother or a sister passing the other on the street, both having on white garments, would either of them be guilty of throwing mud on the other so everybody could see him soiled? No. Well, that is what we are doing when we talk about our brother or sister; we are blackmailing their characters and lives. How does this come about? The lack of love is the explanation. It is my sincere prayer that we who should bear with the weak may stand firm for the right.

Your brother in Christ,

D. K. LEHMAN.

NOT RICH REWARD TOWARD GOD

A young lady was one day visiting an aged man, a friend of her father, who had been associated with him in early life. The man had been one of those who run after the world and had overtaken it. All it could give he had obtained. Pretty soon he inquired the state of his friend, whom he knew to be in circumstances of far less external comfort than himself. As he listened to the story of his less favored friend's patience in suffering, of the cheerfulness with which he could look forward to either life or death, the rich man's conscience applied the unexpressed reproach, and he exclaimed: "Yes, yes; you wonder why I can not be as happy and quiet, too; but think of the difference. He is going to have treasure, even the earth, and I must leave it."

The world is clever, but not half clever enough. If it were as knowing as it thinks it is it would break through the glamors of sophisticated philosophy which its scribes and babblers have so industriously woven around its facilities for the last two hundred years and stand forth in the clear-sighted perceptions of common sense with the imperative resolution to walk wise and sensible ways on the common road, instead of lying in the ditch like a maudlin inebriate, apostrophizing his superior qualities and sinking deeper in the mire.—"The Law of Moses."

EDITORIAL

Rome has priests who are called fathers because they have no children, a pope who is called king because he has no kingdom, cardinals who are called princes because they have no principalities. They say prayers for souls in a place called purgatory because it does not exist, and they call it a religion because it has no religion in it. A queer religion, this!

We begin publication in this issue of a series of Bible lessons by Wiley Jones, deceased. These lessons have been out of print for several years. They are fine, and as they deal exclusively with first principles of truth we propose to reproduce them all in The Restitution for the benefit of our readers.

The spirit of God in Paul revealed sober and stern truth when it said, "In the last days perilous times shall come" (2 Tim. 3:1). The "last days" have come, and they are burdened with perils of every kind. Wars in Europe are shaking the foundations of nations; paucity of money is sapping the Roman Catholic Church of its strength; the abounding iniquity is already causing to wane the love of some brethren, until we are forced to recall the suggestive query of our Lord: "When the Son of Man cometh, shall he find the faith (ten piston) on the earth?" He does not declare there will be none of "the faith," but he does raise the question. It gets pretty close home when we see The Restitution constituency infected by the virus of apostacy, and not able "to endure sound doctrine" longer, order their paper stopped. "Please discontinue my paper," is the way they write, and subscribe immediately for some sheet that spins out "fables" by the yard (2 Tim. 4:3, 4). The article by Bro. Thomas, "Did Joseph Beget Jesus?" and another by Sister Wood on the same subject, will cause many to quit The Restitution. The apostacy is getting very strong and defiant; it may be that there are not enough friends of the truth to keep The Restitutino alive till the Lord comes. If God's will be so, amen; but while we live we promise the world "a good fight of faith." If we must die we shall do so in the faith. We ask God not to live, but to grant us manhood and grace enough to battle to the death for the "precious faith" which he has graciously committed to our trust. Reader, be thou brave and courageous for God and his truth.

WORDS IN SEASON

Reported by Bro. Fred Blyth

"The roots of bitterness inherent in all of us is so like the roots of the willow and cottonwood and some other trees, in that they restrict the growth and sap the life from those growing around them and are entirely selfish."—Sister Nellie Pate.

"The root of bitterness in the case of the rebellion of Korah, Dathan and Abirim (Num. 16) brought punishment, not only upon those guilty of jealousy against Moses and Aaron, but upon all those also who were responsible by association with them. This principle runs all through the scriptures."—Bro. Huggins.

"The best way to forgive our brother is, as the man in the street says, 'Forget it.' This is also God's way, for he says he will remember our sins and iniquities no more (Heb. 8:12), and he casts our sins behind his back" (Isa. 38:17).—Bro. Alldridge.

Bro. Lang suggests as a help toward forgiving our brother and keeping the root of bitterness (Heb. 12) from springing up, "Don't talk about it."

"If we follow peace with all men, and holiness, we will have enough to keep us busy and out of mischief."

"Sin is selfishness. The man who hoards up knowledge and does not share any of it with others, is just as much a miser as the man who hoards up money."

"The brother or sisted who has power enough to make friends has also power enough to make enemies. Some of us are opposed to argument, but in some cases we must argue or allow the compromising of an essential point of truth. Did the apostles argue (Acts 6:9, 10)? We must make the gospel aggressive."—Bro. Huggins.

"In extraordinary times do we fall back on him who has said that he will be our protector and friend? We must remember that therein is our power."—Bro. R. G. Pate.

"Sadness of heart is incompatible in the presence of earthly potentates. Kings are surrounded by courts composed of men of cheerful mind and graceful, buoyant carriage, and courteous manners, and of women of rare grace and beauty. The weak, sickly and whimpering are not there, for they would be out of place. I see brothers and sisters with dyspepsia and rheumatism and all the ills of mortal nature, and most of them go through the fire of trial with countenances that indicate the assurance of the presence of the King of kings, but some few complain and whimper and wear on their faces a continual cloud. This is the greatest contradiction in the world, for we are among those who have been invited into the chambers of the Lord."—Bro. Huggins.

"As is the case of Jacob and Esau, the mind must be right before we can be accepted. Esau had murder in his heart, and was not a proper character to be in the line of the sires from Abraham."—Bro. Alldridge.

"The warning to the Church of God, found in Heb. 12:16 is not against physical but spiritual fornication. In Rev. 2:20:24 Jezebel was leading the believers astray with false doctrine. That is where our danger lies. The fornicator among us might be a strictly moral person. These things come from the inside. They spring up among us."—Bro. Alldridge.

"Every family circle should be a little church, supplemented by the Sunday School. The parents should co-operate with the Sunday School."

"The most painful experience of the Christian life is in the transition from the idealism of the first espousal of the truth to the factism of everyday life."

"We are liable to estimate scripture characters too highly, and take the blues when we compare ourselves with them. Things looked at from a distance appear over-beautiful in the perspective. Memory, which is mental retrospect, works a gigantic trick on us in covering up dark spots in the past. Peter (a stone) is overcoming while he fails; he swerves, and then falls back into line; denies Christ, and then comes back in tears and penitence. He's strong in keeping in the fight. He's a Stoneman in struggling to overcome natural prejudices. He struggles with them way down to the end of his life (Gal. 2:11). Our brethren have their faults and weaknesses, and so had Peter, Noah, Elijah and all the rest, but they were saints of God just the same. The effacing fingers of death come along, and some little points come out and show that the decedent brother was a man of prayer and faith, and had fought and struggled for the truth."—Bro. Huggins.

SOCIALISM UNDER PURE THEOCRACY

That our readers may understand our position they must view it from the fact that the expressions, "Kingdom of God" and "Kingdom of heaven," as used in the Old and the New Testaments, has reference to a real kingdom which Jehovah will establish on the earth over which Jesus with his resurrected saints will rule, and by which the earth will be brought back to its former state before sin entered. The institution of a human government was contrary to Jehovah's purpose, and was therefore usurpation. Cain was the originator of this form of government. God's purpose in the beginning was that Adam was to be the ruler (Gen. 1:28). "To have dominion" means to rule. Disobedience rendered him incapable of this great blessing. This promise was then transferred to the seed of woman (Gen. 3:15). In Micah 4:8 he is called the "tower of the flock." Jer. 23:5, 6 calls him the "Righteous Branch and King, who shall reign and prosper. He shall e .ecute judgment and justice in the earth. In]..s day Judah shall be saved and Israel shall dwell safely."

These scriptures must have a literal interpretation or they are useless as testimony. A pure theocracy is a government over which Jehovah will rule. The Israelitish kingdom was only partly divine. It was God's kingdom directed by men in the flesh. The blessings to be derived from this kingdom were conditional. "If ye will obey my voice indeed and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people; for all the earth is mine. Ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, an holy nation" (Exodus 19: 5, 6). The difference between this theocracy and the one that will be established in the future is that the coming kingdom will be ruled over by immortalized individuals with restored Israel as subjects who will have been brought under that new covenant recorded in Ezek. 20:37 and Jer. 31: 31-35.

We have thus far tried to explain our position in a simple and intelligent manner. This kingdom must begin with mortal men and women on the earth, as now. When asked by Peter what they should receive, Jesus replied: "Ye who have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matt. 19:38). When he comes with all his holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations. He shall separate them one from another as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats (Matt. 25:31, 32). This indicates a judgment or a ruling over these nations. The Revelator saw when all these kingdoms had become the king[illegible]n of our Lord and of his Christ (Rev. 11:15).

These scriptures being true, it will be needful for Jesus to introduce a new form of government in which there will be an ideal citizenship. There will be no privileged citizenship under a pure theocracy such as will be established by Jehovah. This government shall be for the poor of the people. "He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass." Not all who are extended privileges in this kingdom will be willing to submit to the laws under which they are placed. Men of great power and wealth will not willingly submit to the ruler and his assistant rulers. They have too long held absolute power in the present form of government. Judge Lindsay, of Colorado, puts it thus: "Of the political at Washington and the industrial in Wall Street, the latter is much more powerful." He states further: "Our present civilization is a conspiracy against nature as well as justice. The time must inevitably come when the government must manage all our great sources of natural wealth. There can be no political independence until we get economic independence." This is ideal, but can never be established under a human government. The wealthy class will never submit. Labor has always held a subordinate position under every form of government. The greed for power and wealth defeated God's purpose in the Israelitish kingdom, otherwise they might have become a holy nation. Modern day Socialism is seeking for the best under the present form, but are seeking in vain for the want of power.

This government is not what our fathers have founded. It has grown into a capitalized government in which might is right. All who have at heart the relief of the distressed must see that as time passes the present conditions are increasing. This is "the present evil world," and according to Christ must continue until the conditions are as they were in the days of Noah. Then the cup of their iniquity will be full and Jehovah will send his Son from heaven, who will restore all things which are spoken of by the holy prophets.

I want to call attention to a parable spoken by Jesus the Christ. It is the parable of the laborers in the vineyard. This parable can be applied only to the kingdom of heaven or kingdom of God. What led up to this parable is recorded in Matt. 19:16-25: "One came to Jesus and said, What good thing shall I do to inherit eternal life? When the answer was given he was disappointed, and went away sorrowing. His riches made him turn away from Jesus. Jesus said to his disciples that "A rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven." He then states how he may enter by using the figure of the camel passing through the needle's eye. By divesting himself of his load and going through on his knees. We learn from this lesson that riches or worldly wealth will not be permitted there. No privileged class there. Now the law as applied to labor in the kingdom is found exemplified in the parable. Note the conditions under which each labored. All received a penny a day. The one who worked twelve hours and the one who labored one hour received the same wage. Under the law of the kingdom the householder must pay a sufficient amount to provide for every necessity. When complaint was made the householder said: "Friend, I do thee no wrong; didst thou not agree with me for a penny? Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with my own?" A penny a day provided for all that was needed. Where wealth dominated this system could not be permitted. No man then will be allowed to increase his wealth, even through labor. Labor, under the true theocracy, will receive a competency, therefore contentment will exist. No capitalist to oppress labor. The ideal citizenship will then exist. Then will true economic independence exist.

ETERNAL POSSESSION OF CANAAN IS PROMISED

Bible Lesson 1

"The Lord appeared unto Abram and said, "Unto they seed will I give this land" (Gen. 12:7). "Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever" (Gen. 13:14, 15). "The Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, "Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates" (Gen. 15:18). "I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God" (Gen. 17:7, 8). "In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 12:3; Gal. 3:8). "Thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 22:17, 18).

Remarks: This lesson contains the covenant made with Abraham, and teaches that as truly as God "will be their God" he will give to Abraham and his seed "all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession." "Everlasting" means the same as "eternal," both being translations of the same Hebrew and Greek words olam and aionios. What Luke 18:30 calls "everlasting life" Mark 10:30 calls "eternal life." Both call it "eternal" in Revised Version. It follows, therefore, that all the land of Canaan in Asia has been promised to Abraham and his seed as their "eternal inheritance" (Heb. 9:15). How could the promise refer to some land above the skies, when it positively says "this land,' even giving the boundaries of it—"from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates" (Gen. 12:7; 15:7, 18; 24:7; 28:13). The inspired Stephen certainly knew what land was meant, and he described it to the wicked Jews as "this land, wherein ye now dwell" (Acts 7:4). And scripture testifies that Abraham actually went "into the place (eis ton topon) which he should after receive for an inheritance," and that the land upon which he dwelt is "the land of the promise" (teen geen tees epaggelias) (Heb. 11:8, 9). That country is not only renowned and central, but a "good land and large, the glory of all lands" (Ex. 3:8; Eze. 20:6, 15). Extending from the river of Egypt and Mediterranean Sea on the west to the Euphrates on the east, it is, as it were, the bridge and ligament connecting three continents, and is admirably suited to be the royal seat of Messiah's worldwide kingdom. Canaan is called "the middle of the earth" in Eze. 38:12 (Revised Version). We are not to suppose that the Jews who came into the land under the law of Moses were the "seed" referred to in this promise, for they "possessed it but a little while," and even then, at their highest prosperity (under David's reign), they were mere "strangers and sojourners" upon it "as all their fathers were;" and none of them possessed it beyond a natural lifetime (Isa. 63:18; 1 Chron. 29:15).

Lesson II.—Christ the Pre-Eminent Heir

"The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the Son of David, the Sonof Abraham" (Matt. :1 1; Rom. 1:3, 4), "To Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many, but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ. And this I say that the covenant that was confirmed before God in Christ, the law, which was 430 years after, can not disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law it is no more of promise" (Gal. 3:16-18).

Remarks

Here it is testified, with most positive clearness, that Christ is the "seed" or Son spoken of, and that the promise could not be disannulled nor the inheritance obtained by the Mosaic law. Hence the promise is yet to be fulfilled, and by Paul's explanation it would read: "To thee, Abraham, and to Christ, I will give all the land of Canaan for an eternal possession." This, of course, includes the promise of eternal life also; for a merely mortal heir would soon have to leave his inheritance to "others" (Ps. 49:10). Hence the promises of Canaan and eternal life are gospel promises, "exceeding great and precious" (2 Pet. 1:4).

LOVE

Article 1

"But now these three remain—faith, hope, love; but of these the greatest is love" (1 Cor. 13: 13, Diaglott).

How often, while meditating upon God an intense desire fills our whole being to know and understand God. Everywhere men are seeking to know and worship God, but how few are seeking to know and worship the true God!

We ask this question, Who and Where is God? We try to answer our own question. Our imagination is exercised; mental images, strange conceptions and ideas fill our mind We endeavor to make an analysis of the ideas and conceptions impressing themselves upon our minds; but all are unsatisfactory, for they are all human, and view this great question from the human viewpoint.

The other evening on my way home from church my mind filled with thoughts of the goodness of God; I looked up into the heavens, the constellations that now shine at the season of the year with such splendor and brilliancy, wonderfully impressed me with the nearness of God. Immediately over my head was the constellation of Taurus, the group forming the Pleiades, especially arrested and held my attention. Some Bible students think that God's throne is situated upon Alcyone, the most brilliant of this group. I thought of God's question to Job: "Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades?" (Job 38:31)

My eye wandered to the southeast, and I felt my soul ravished with delight and admiration as that most beautiful constellation, Piscus was then in the ascendancy the square of Pegasus, a little to the north, Andromeda, Tacerta, and just the tip of the wing of the Swan, the Flying Horse in all his glory—all spread out before my enraptured gaze. Beloved, I bowed my head and repeated Psalm 19: "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge." We never tire of this grand psalm.

But this only reveals to me something of God's marvelous power and wisdom, like a beautiful building reveals something of the mind of the architect, but it does not reveal to me the architect himself. David said: "As the heart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." All spiritual-minded believers pant and long for God. How can this longing be met? I believe only by a constant and faithful study of God's word, the Bible. For it is only there that we can really meet and commune with God. We strive to find out God; we can not find and know him apart from the revelation he has made of himself in his word.

We ask what God is. Christ answers our question, "God is spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." We ask, What is truth? His answer is, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." We ask, What is the nature of God? John, the beloved disciple, informs us: "And we have nkown and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him."

We ask, What is the nature of gravitation? Newton answers our question: "It attracts all unsupportable bodies toward its center." We ask, What is the nature of light? The same authority tells us it "dispels darkness, imparts life." If we ask, What is "nature?" we are told it is the essential qualities, the constitution, the principle of a thing or force.

We inquire again, What is the nature or principle, or the law, which governs and controls this glorious being, which we know as Jehovah? We answer, Love. We understand, beloved, this to be the very essence or principle of God himself—God is love. Now note the language of John: "No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us."

Faith ends in sight, hope ends in fruition, or when we possess that for which we now hope; but love is eternal, for God is eternal, hence love can never die or cease to exist. Paul says that love is the greatest thing; Paul is right. Love never faileth; if it did God would fail, and that is impossible. Notice again John's wonderful reasoning when he says: "Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment; because as he is, so are we in this world."

Paul and John both agree; the writers of the sixty-six books known as the Bible—all agree, the higher critics' efforts to prove otherwise, notwithstanding. Paul says that we may possess all the wonderful gifts of the Spirit which they themselves possessed and exercised, yet if we lack love we shall fail. Why? Because we lack the nature of God. We speak of the Spirit as a thing; what do we mean? Simply its nature. Hence Paul says: "If we have not the Spirit of Christ we are none of his." Now Christ manifested God in his flesh, this principle or nature of God—love—was the power that controlled and governed his life. To behold Christ in the flesh is to behold God, so

Christ could say: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Show me the Father?" Notice: "Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself; but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works. Believe me that I am the Father, and the Father is me, or else believe me for the very works 'sake."

Now mark well what follows: "Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." See how clear all this is. Christ loved the Father; the Father loved him, and manifested himself through him by his words and actions, which at all times were governed by the principle of love. Now, beloved, can not you grasp this grand truth, that if we love God, and do the things that he commands us to do, that he also will dwell in us as he dwelt in his own Son?

GEORGE B. ALLDRIDGE.

THE SIN OF PRAYERLESSNESS

"God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you" (1 Sam. 12:24).

How few of us have placed prayerelessness among our possible sins! And how even fewer have placed the omission to pray for others in the black list of sins against the Lord! We have called it thoughtlessness, or negligence, or even apathy, but we have not called it sin. But how this word sin, as used in this unfamiliar relation, broadens and deepens the ministry and obligation of prayer! My needy brother has a right to my prayers. They are to be regarded as part of his capital strength. They constitute a part of the forces which were purposed to make him victorious in all the battle of life. My prayers for him are part of his army. I control some of his vital equipment. Without my co-operation in prayer he is weakened and maimed. If I refuse him my prayers I deprive him of so much of his heritage. I defraud him. I wrong him in a far more deadly manner than if I refused to pay a material debt. I disclaim my spiritual debts, and he is impoverished in the central resources of the soul. I help him into moral bankruptcy by depriving him of his sacred dues. Thus do I wrong my brother, and thus do I sin against God.

All this, I say, is a very lofty conception of the obligation of prayer. It is something we owe to others, and if we refuse to pay we leave them poor indeed. On the other hand, how uplifting is the conception that by my prayers I am increasing a man's moral capital. I am helping him to mobilize his spiritual forces. I am sending him army corps to enable him to meet his enemy at the gate and overthrow him. I may share in his warfare, and I may rejoice and glory in his triumph.—J. H. Jowett.

SIMPLE QUESTIONS ABOUT THE SOUL

If the soul is immortal how can it die, seeing the scripture saith: The soul that sinneth, it (the soul) shall die (Ezek. 18:4, 20)?

If the soul is indestructible, how could the Israelites utterly destroy all the souls therein (Josh. 10:23, 30, 32, 35, 37, 39, 40)?

If the soul is the thinking, acting and responsible part (i.e., the man proper), and continues to think and act separate from the body, how saith the scripture, "The dead know not anything; their love, hatred and envy is now perished" (Ezek. 7:5, 6)? "His breath goeth forth, he (man) returns to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish" (Psa. 146:4)? A. C. G.

OBITUARY

Sister Zug

To The Restitution: Please publish that our aged sister, Rachael L. Zug, of Franklin Grove, Ill., died January 28, 1915, being found dead in her home by the person who attended to the building of her fires. She was truly an isolated sister. I do not know of a brother or sister in the neighborhood. She has been laid away to await the call of her Master. I learn this much through The Franklin Record of January 28, 1915.

GOD'S WAY AND MAN'S WAY

God says: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these (earthly things) shall be added unto you."

Man says: Seek first worldly wealth and fame and power; religion you can get on a dying bed.

God says: "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down and shaken together, and running over, shall men give unto you."

Man says: Charity begins at home. Why give to others that for which you have toiled so hard? Your own family may want it.

God says: "Whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

Man says: What guaranty have I, if I give my earnings to the poor, that I shall not come to want myself?

God says: "There is that which scattereth, and yet increaseth."

Man says: It is only by hoarding what you have that it will increase.

Reader, is not God's way better than man's?—Selected.

All about us, in earth and air, wherever eye or ear can reach, there is a power ever breathing itself forth in signs, now in a daisy, now in a windwaft, a cloud, a sunset, a power that holds constant and sweetest relation with the dark and silent world within us. The same God who is in us, and upon whose tree we are the buds, if not yet the flowers, also is all about us; inside, the spirit; outside, the world.—George Macdonald.

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). MEMORIAL

"Aunt Lida" Musson

Today death robbed us of a soul so dear
That just to glimpse our loss evokes a tear;
And when we stop to think of days and years
That she has loved and served and soothed our tears,
Has held us small and helpless in her loving arms,
Protected us as children from all childish harms,
Has watched us grow to manhood, womanhood, and yet
Has loved us one and all alike, with a love abiding, clinging--
Ah, dear "Aunt Lidy" we can not forget!
And the memory of your patient heart-whole care
To each and every one will be a thankful prayer.

MARY MAGDALENE!

From Deepest Depths to Loftiest Heights
An Absolutely True Story

By Dr. N. L. Willard

There are no two characters in the sacred record which so appeal to me as does Simon Peter and Mary Magdalene. They are both so beautifuly natural and so humanly human. I shall not refer to Simon now, but to Mary only, a woman whose record as a whole has never been equaled by any woman on earth! A daughter of the royal tribe of Judah, as was our Lord, she possessed the true blood of nobilty, viz., "exalted," as well as her second name, Magdalene, i. e., "lofty," "magnificent, which, although steeped to the eyelids in infamy and moral pollution for a time, showed later on the nobility of her blood and the innate purity of her heart.

It was fortunate for her, as well as for us, that during her short and dissolute life or career, she was living when the Christ was on earth, otherwise one of the brightest jewels which he gathered might have been lost forever. She was a terror to all things pure or even decent. She was no doubt a physically beautiful woman. The richness of her attire and her seductive words brought scores of silly moths about her red light. Besides this, she had a neat and active little devil for each of her five senses, and two over in case of need—seven in all! If that wasn't enough to make "a full team, with a dog under the wagon and a nigger up behind," I don't know what would!

One day Mary was on the street—plying her vocation, no doubt. Jesus happened (?) to be on the same street, plying his also, and somehow the two met! Now, I wouldn't give a nickel to hear Billy Sunday preach hell fire and damnation to scare sinners "into heaven," but I would gladly give a hundred dollars to have seen this meeting. And I would give another hundred to have heard who opened the ball. But it's dollars to doughnuts that when May saw the approach of that stately Presence her wanton eyes dropped to the ground and every devil in her went into hiding! I don't know which spoke first, or what was said, but presumably it was Jesus, for he knew what to say and Mary didn't. She simply stood mute, while the seven little devils had a fit of ague. I do not know how long this interview lasted, but one thing I do know, and that is when Jesus left her the seven devils, little or big, went first, and Mary was a free woman once more and in her right mind. The beginning of a new life was begun, because the redemption was complete and effective. It is assumed, and naturally so I think, that Mary permitted no opportunity to pass whereby she could listen to the gracious words of her divine Master, her Rescuer, her Hero, and her God.

Now, there were four Marys at the time of the Christ, one his mother, but it is of this Mary alone I sing, because she was at one time totally different from the other three. They were bright examples of pure womanhood in thought, word and deed, with a faith in the Christ that knew no bounds and a holy affection that had no limit. They didn't know my Mary then, for she was fresh "from the streets;" but they all knew her later, when her name led all the rest, and became indissolubly linked with theirs, and with them she was enrolled as one of earth's brightest jewels! Isn't that splendid? It is not recorded that Jesus and Mary ever met while he was going about doing good, but it is reasonable to believe that they did meet, for he could hardly help seeing the neatly but modestly attired woman whose luxuriant hair and lustrous eyes stood before him—eyes which fairly beamed with joy and holy love as they rested upon the blessed face of her Redeemer. Happy Mary!

But here is an incident wherein they did meet, an incident the story of which has rung through nearly nineteen centuries all over the globe, or wherever the word of God has been read, and which will continue to be read until that "same Jesus" shall come again and call her dust from the grave and crown it or her with "glory, honor and immortality, which is "eternal life!" Blessed Mary! The other three Marys will also be there, and I can fancy I see the sweet Virgin Mother and Mary Magdalene walking hand in hand in the glorious kingdom of earth's new monarch, Jesus Christ, supremely happy and in "a glory inconceivable."

There was a certain pharisee named Simon who had seen and heard the Master often enough to become more or less interested in him, and he invited Jesus to dine with him, and Jesus accepted. Now Mary either knew or heard of this dinner, and she determined if possible to offer a tribute of affection to the One who had done so much for her, so she bought a box of alabaster ointment, very precious and costly. Reclining on couches, as they did in those days, the feet were the farthest from the table, and wholly uncovered and exposed. They could therefore be easily approached by anyone without attracting special attention from any of the guests save the favored one. I do not know what Simon and his royal Guest talked about while reclining at the table, but during it Mary came softly in, her face all aglow with the purest emotions of her woman's heart. She quietly approached the blessed feet, and the fountain of her tears was broken up; with them she tenderly bathed his feet and gently wiped them with her rich tresses of hair. Then she kissed and poured the box of alabaster ointment over them, and the act was complete! She spoke no word, for the act spoke for itself. A few moments silence prevailed as Simon witnessed this tender ceremony, and his thoughts showed that he was more or less a skeptic about his guest's claims and pretensions, "for," thought he, "if this man were a prophet he would have known what manner of woman this is that toucheth him, for she is a sinner!" (O you Simon, you old sneaking hypocrite! How did you know she was a sinner? Ever meet her?) But the noble guest read his thoughts like an open book and broke the silence by saying to his host:

"Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee."

"Master say on," replied Simon.

"There was a certain creditor who had two debtors. One owed him five hundred pence and the other fifty; when they could not pay he frankly forgave them both. Tell me, therefore, which of them will love him most?"

"I suppose," replied Simon, "that he to whom he forgave most."

"Thou hast rightly judged," answered the Christ. Then, turning to Mary, who with bowed head stood mutely before them, while the perfume of the precious ointment filled the room, "seest thou this woman? When I came into thine house thou gavest me no water for my feet (a gross violation of Jewish hospitality), but she hath washed my feet with tears and wiped them with the hairs of her head. Thou gavest me no kiss, but this woman since I came in hath not ceased to kiss my feet. Mine head with oil thou didst not anoint, but this woman hath anointed my head with ointment. Wherefore I say unto thee, Her sins, which are many, are forgiven, for she hath loved much." Then he turned to Mary and said: "Thy sins are forgiven thee; thy faith hath saved thee. Go in peace!"

Could ever more gracious words fall upon human ears, and such ears? What Mary said or did is not told, nor was it necessary. Her act was enough. But one thing is certain—when this woman, late of "the streets," went out from the presence of the Son of God she went out as pure as an angel!

Some twenty months later, more or less, the greatest tragedy this earth ever knew or ever again can know was enacted on Calvary, a tragedy so revoltingly brutal and unspeakably cruel in its execution that for more than nineteen centuries no man has dared to go beyond the brief recitals as given by the four Evangelists. From five to seven persons are mentioned by name who witnessed this awful scene, and four of them were women. Both Matthew and Mark put Mary Magdalen's name first, thus giving her precedence over all the rest. Luke and John put her name last—as being at the cross and tenderly solicitous. The fifth member of this immortal quintet was John, the "beloved apostle," to whom was committed Mary, the agonized mother of the august Sufferer on the cross just before he "breathed out." To him also we are indebted for the final record of the acts of this late woman of the slums, Mary Magdalene, and there is a pathos about them that irresistibly appeals to every human heart.

The agony of mind and body which for three mortal hours these loving women endured before Jesus uttered his last cry was known only to themselves and to God. Some of them may have mercifully fainted and been assisted to their own homes. And when that last great cry which has for nearly two thousand years rung around the civilized world, "IT IS FINISHED," was heard, John and his new found mother went to his "own home," bereft of brother and son. But there were two women who seemingly nothing but death could thwart, viz., Mary, the mother of Jesus, and Mary Magdalene! They lingered near, saw the sacred body lowered from the cross, the enwrapping of it in the "fine linen" pure and white brought by Joseph; the hundred weight of spices brought by Nicodemus (who once came to Jesus by night); and when all was prepared these two women—saint, and late possessor of seven devils—sorrowfully walked side by side to the nearby tomb, in which no man had ever lain, saw him tenderly laid therein, the great stone rolled up to close the door upon what Mary believed was her last earthly friend and hope; for Mary, it strangely appears, seems not to have grasped the idea that Jesus must die and "rise again on the third day," so that to her his death was a finality. Neither of the women entered the sepulchre, but "stood without, weeping," and poor Mary as if her heart would break.

The two, however, went sorrowfully home and brought "sweet spices" with which to anoint him as soon as the Sabbath was over (that's the way the Jews kept the Sabbath). How the weary, dreary, leaden hours passed is not told, but as the first streaks of dawn heralded the coming of the "third day," Mary, without waiting for the "other Mary," took her spices and set out alone for the sepulchre and wondering who would roll away the "great stone" for her. But as she neared the sacred spot she saw that the stone was already rolled away and an angel was sitting upon it, who said to her: "I know whom thou seekest—Jesus of Nazareth. He is not here!" This confirmed her belief that her loss was irreparable, and she burst into tears. Stooping down, she peered into the sepulchre and saw two angels, who, seeing her tears, inquired the cause. "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him." They then pointed out the place where he had rested and said: "He has arisen!" Still not understanding, nearly blinded by her tears at this confirmation of the words of the angel at the door, she turned and slowly walked away. Seeing a man a short distance off, and supposing him to be the gardener, she went up to him and with streaming eyes pitifully said: "Sir, if thou hast borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him and I will take him away." The supposed gardener looked at her for a moment, and then in a voice which thrilled her like an electric shock from head to foot. He spoke only one word, "MARY!" with a cry so wildly joyous as to be almost hysterical. She too spoke only one word, "MASTER," and fell at his feet. The recognition was complete. She fain would have clasped and kissed his feet again, but he said: "Touch me not, for I have not yet ascended, * * * but go and tell my brethren that I ascend to my Father and your Father, to my God and your God!" Human feet never flew upon a more joyous errand, for there in this once "woman of the streets" was fulfilled, that God-given promise to her: "Although thy sins be as scarlet, yet shall they be (and are) made as white as wool."

Peerless Mary! Soon to be glorious Mary!

THE HOLY SPIRIT

No. 21

L. T. Nichols

When Are We Baptized With the Holy Spirit?

While the apostles and others had the gifts of the Spirit, no one received the baptism of the Holy Spirit in that day. Notice how it reads in Matt. 3: John the Baptist came preaching in Judea, crying: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. * * *" "But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth, therefore, fruits meet for repentance."

He makes it very clear when the wrath is to be received—it is "the wrath to come." He is speaking of the judgment scene: "And now also the ax is laid upon the root of the trees; therefore every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire."

It is plainly evident that he is referring to the time to come, when the ax will be applied to the root of the trees of unrighteousness, and they cut down: to the judgment scene, when the hay, wood and stubble will be destroyed. "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance; but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear. He shall baptize you with the Holy Spirit and with fire." When one class receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit the other class will be destroyed. The 12th verse will tell without any doubt when the faithful will receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and also when the trees of unrighteousness will be cut down: "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire."

You can not deny that this refers to the judgment scene; and it is not literal wheat and chaff, nor literal fire, but the wheat represents the righteous, the chaff the wicked; and the fire is a symbol of destruction, of the ax that will be applied to the root of the trees of unrighteousness and they cut down: when the faithful receive the birth of the Spirit, and being made immortal can come and go with the freedom of the wind. Investigate this subject carefully, and you can not fail to see that the 12th verse qualifies the 11th, and tells us who will receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit and who will be destroyed, and when. At revival meetings I have listened with horror to ministers and laymen praying to be baptized with fire; in their ignorance praying for the judgment of God to come upon them—praying to be cut down. Dear reader, if you will use your reason and be governed by evidence you will certainly admit that what we have brought before you, from the Book of all books, telling us when we shall receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit, is much more reasonable, grand and beautiful than the fable you have clung to so long.

We Only Have the Promise

There is a text in Acts 2 that all who believe that we now have the Holy Spirit bring up to prove their theory; but the words used will prove that it is not yet fulfilled. While they had the gifts of the Holy Spirit, they did not have the gift of the Holy Spirit, and will not until the latter rain is poured out at the coming of Jesus and they are made immortal. Acts 2:38, 39: "Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit; for the promise is unto you and your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

How clear and plain, and easy of comprehension! We have "the promise" of it, and that is all we do have. The time will come when we will be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God; but that promise has not yet been fulfilled, but we are waiting for the redemption of our body. How little people reason! If we had the promise fulfilled we could not hope for it. "Hope that is seen is not hope, for what man seeth why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." We can wait with patience for the fulfillment of that wonderful promise, and not get so anxious that we will claim to have something that we do not possess. There is a testimony in Lam. 3:26, that is very fitting: "It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord." My brother and sister, seeing that the Lord says it is good for us to hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord, for that more than wonderful time when we can mount aloft, and go and come with the freedom of the wind, can we not say that it is good too?

God Speaks of Things That Be Not, as Though They Were

There is one Bible rule that all interested in the study of the scriptures should understand, and by not understanding it many have built up false theories on Bible texts. If we make a study of any other book we allow the author to put in his own qualifying terms, and we are governed by them; why not be as fair with the Bible? The rule that we refer to is found in Rom. 4:17: "As it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations, before him whom he believed, even God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things that be not, as though they were."

Prophetically speaking, God said to Abraham: "I have made thee a father of many nations," when its fulfillment was to be a future event; or he meant, "I will make thee a father of many nations." In prophecy the present tense is often used instead of the future, "God speaking of things that be not, as though they were." On this principle Paul could say: "He saved us * * * by the renewing of the Holy Spirit."

Or, he will save us by the renewing of the Holy Spirit. The power of the Holy Spirit had to cease being manifested before there could be a renewing. The gifts of the Holy Spirit ceased at the close of the Jewish Age, and there has to be a renewal—it has to come again—that is the meaning of "Anakainisis," the Greek word rendered "renewing," "a making new again." When the latter rain, foretold by Joel, commences, there will be a renewing of the Holy Spirit; it will come again, and then eternal salvation will be given to all faithful ones. The next verse conveys the same idea: "Which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ." When the renewing of the Holy Spirit comes it will be shed on us abundantly—he will pour out his spirit upon all flesh. If there were not a renewing of the Holy Spirit we would be lost, for God's power has to be manifested again to change our vile bodies and make them like unto his glorious body.

Better is the End of a Thing Than the Beginning Thereof.

As we have proven, the faithful will not get the Spirit birth until Christ comes. Christ, the head of the body, is the only one who has received it. The members of the body are being developed, only the feet exist in our day, and to look at the feet as the body of Christ we would fail to realize the wonder and beauty as a whole. Suppose that months before the World's Fair at St. Louis was opened we had gone into some great workshop where the manufacturer was getting up a splendid article for exhibition at the fair, "an unskilled eye seeing the pieces in the workshop, unfinished and among the litter, would form a very unfavorable idea of it if he were ignorant of the plan and the pieces—he would be disgusted to be told that that unsightly piece of metal would dazzle the eyes of thousands at the great fair;" but the eye of intelligence looks at the situation and is not disappointed. We know that the work is being done; we are in the workshop of the Almighty. In Solomon's temple every stone had to be prepared, ready to go into the building without the sound of a tool upon it; so we now have to be prepared for the spiritual temple of the Lord.

LAW AND SIN FOR GENTILES

The Gentile nations did not have the written laws given by God to Israel, and therefore sin against the letter of these laws was not imputed to them (Rom. 5:13). God dealt only with Israel, and suffered other nations to walk in their own ways (Acts 14:16; 17:30).

But while they, like Abraham and Enoch, had no written laws, yet they had God's great book of nature, in which they could see God's power, divinity, wisdom and love (Rom. 1).

And besides the book of nature Paul says that the Gentiles had implanted by God in their minds, hearts and consciences the principles of justice and injustice, of right and wrong, of virtue and of vice, so that their consciences accused or excused them ever since the first sin brought the knowledge of both good and evil into the world (Rom. 1:20; 2:14-29).

By this law in their natures, not by any written laws of Moses, Paul teaches that the Gentiles were convicted of sin, and that by these laws they would be justified or condemned in the sight of God. For God, who looketh on the heart, needeth no written law by which to discover guilt or innocence in man (1 Sam. 16:7; Isa. 11:3).

Thus if the Gentiles kept this law of nature their uncircumcision was counted for circumcision; "he is a Jew who is one inwardly," and all overcomers and new creatures in Christ Jesus are the Israel of God" (Rom. 2:29; Gal. 6:15, 16). So even among Gentiles, who never heard the written law of Moses, there have been new covenant children, who have "walked with God" by faith; who obeyed the law of nature that taught them love for God and man, a law "not written with ink, but with the spirit of the living God; not on tablets of stone, but on the fleshly tablets of the heart" (2 Cor. 3).

Hence members of the true ekklesia have been chosen in Christ before the casting down of the Jewish cosmos (Eph. 1:4; Gal. 4:3; see Greek text). The true sanctuary of God, in his temple in heaven, has always been open to the prayers, sacrifices, praises and worship of the children of men, who "felt after God" from the foundation of the old Adamic world. Before Christ was born, lived on earth, died, arose or ascended to heaven to be the world's great mediator, an angelic priesthood had acted between man and his Creator from the fall of man. And through this angelic priesthood God has answered the prayers of holy men and women of old; has sent them messages of pardon, peace and love; has given revelations of the future, and all the laws and gospel man needed for his salvation throughout this whole long night of sin since Adam's fall. Therefore none that ever lived on earth need any future "fair chance;" God has been able to judge the hearts of all as to rebellion or obedience, and both Jews and Gentiles are "without excuse" (Rom. 1).

THE PRESENT WAR AND THE KINGDOM OF GOD

Fifty years ago (February 14, 1865) I enlisted in the 44th Wisconsin regiment to serve in the civil war. My regiment was made up at Lacrosse, Wis., February 14, 1865.

When we were ordered south for some reason better known to Generals Grant and Lee than to us, the war closed in less than six months after they heard the 44th had reached Nashville, Tenn.

I, for one, am willing to call the civil war a skirmish in comparison to the great war now enveloping nearly all Europe. Time is a very important element. I can not realize the swiftness of this fifty years past and gone. Oh, how we should desire the fulfillment of God's promise as found in Psalms 46:9:11: "He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth. He breaketh the bow and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariot in the fire." Then what will happen, Lord? "Be still and know that I am God. I will be exalted upon the earth; the Lord of Hosts is with us." Now if God is to be exalted upon the earth, when he comes to make his abode with his people, why say we emigrate to heaven either in a disembodied state at death or at the resurrection day?

When the Lord of Hosts shall be with us on the earth, then will be fulfilled the words of Daniel. "The kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven"—not up in heaven, as some affirm—"shall be given to the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him" (Dan. 7:27). "And in the days of these kings"—who knows but the God of heaven that the change is upon us—"shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever" (2:4). Who would be willing to exchange a kingdom of this kind for a kingdom supposed to be in the heart of the Pharisees as found in Luke 17:20, 21?

Jesus called the Pharisees the children of the devil, and if he meant to set up a spiritual kingdom in the hearts of the children of the devil where shall the man of God come in? The following is the true rendering of the Greek in Luke 17:20, 21: "And having been asked by the Pharisees when God's kingdom was coming he answered them and said: "The kingdom of God comes not with outward show, nor shall they"—the Pharisees—"say, Behold here, or there, for behold, God's royal majesty is among you" (Emphatic Diaglott). Christ never answered the question demanded of him, but said the king of the Jews was present, but they did not receive him as such. Teaching little children that God's kingdom that we are commanded to pray for is in the heart is nothing short of blasphemy.

What constitutes a kingdom? It requires a king, dominion, subjects and law. Does anyone believe our Lord intended to convey the idea that God's kingdom should be located in the hearts of those hypocritical Pharisees? If so, our Lord changed his mind afterward, for he said: "Fear not, little flock; it's your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom" (Luke 12:32). Of course he was addressing his disciples.

So, dear reader, my advice to you, as one that loves charity, search the scriptures for yourself, and let the hirelings be lost rather than be deluded by the doctrines and commandments of men.

Jesus commanded his apostles to "preach the gospel of the kingdom" (Matt. 4:23; 9:35; 24:14). Where it says: "Some shall see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom" (Matt. 16:28), how would it sound to say the Son of Man is coming into the Pharisees? "He that is least in the kingdom of God" is greater than John the Baptist (Luke 7:28). How would it sound to say, He that is least in the heart of a Pharisee is greater than John the Baptist? I could cite to you one hundred places of equal absurdity. I have no object in view other than to get the reader interested in God's plans and purposes concerning the kingdom of God," "prepared from the foundation of the world" (Matt. 25:34). Now as there were no Pharisees in Adam's day it is evident the kingdom of God is not in the heart of them, or anyone else. My prayer is that the reader may be instructed in the kingdom of God.—J. T. AULD, in The Evening Chronicle.

"THE PEOPLE OF THE SAINTS OF THE MOST HIGH"

It is written, "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him" (Dan. 7:27). The words, "the people of the saints of the Most High," are by some understod to mean that "the saints" in this passage represent one class and "the people of the saints" another. Let us compare another and similar expression. It is said in Acts 12:11: "The Lord hath sent his angel, and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews." No one would imagine from the reading of these words that "the Jews" are one class and "the people of the Jews" another. As anyone can see at a glance, this is but another way of saying "the Jewish people," or "the people consisting of the Jews." In like manner "the people of the saints of the Most High" are the holy people of the Most High. It will be seen by consulting Dan. 7:21, 25 that "the saints of the Most High" were to be subject to persecution by the eleventh horn of the fourth beast, but finally "the saints (or holy people) of the Most High" themselves will possess the kingdom (vs. 18, 22 ,27). Verse 70 reads: "And the kingdom and authority, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the saints of the Most High," the same as the other verses where "the saints" are referred to.—The Advocate.

CHARACTER GROWS

Many people seem to think that character grows; that it is not something to put on ready made, but day by day, here a little, there a little, grows with the strength, until, good or bad, it becomes almost a coat of mail.

Look at a man of business, prompt, reliable, always to be depended upon. When did he develop all these qualities? When he was a boy.

The boy who has the courage to say no when the tempter would lead him astray, who gets up in the morning, works, plays, studies, neglects no duties be they ever so small, will ever become a reliable, noble, generous, kindly gentleman. —Pomeroy Leader.

To face uninteresting drudgery is a good part of life's work.—William James.

"Am I my brother's keeper" (Gen. 4:9)? Abel was a shepherd, and Cain's question, rendered into plain English, is: "Must I keep my brother like he keeps his flocks?" Cain, thou art condemned out of thine own mouth. Abel thought more of his sheep than Cain thought of his brother!

ONLY ONE CREATION IN GENESIS

It is suggested by orthodox interpreters that there are two creations according to the Genesis account—the first, "in the image of God," who is a spirit, was spiritual; and the second was material. Can this view be proven by the word of God?

There would seem to be little difficulty in proving that this view is not correct. If this were the intention of the account there would be something to indicate it here or in some other part of the Bible. There is nothing of the kind, and in fact all the statements of the scriptures are to the contrary. Instead of Adam being spiritual, "the first man was of the earth" (1 Cor. 15:47). It is the body that determines the nature, and as he had a human body he was a human being. It was not a spark of divinity that animated him, but exactly the same spirit of life that is common to all other earthly creatures (Eccles. 3:19). It is true Adam was created in the image of God, but that in no sense implies that he was a part of God or of the same nature with him. Rather than spend our time disproving all the fanciful theories that could be suggested by men of varied imaginations, we would better devote our ability to the learning of the exact teachings of the word of God. Adam was a man having the moral and mental likeness of his Creator, capable of reasoning, and a ruler in his dominion as God is in his. Thus God made man in his own image, that after his likeness he might have dominion over the beast of the field (Gen. 1:26). The first chapter of Genesis gives a general outline of the entire creative work; the second and third give the details of Adam's creation and fall.

SUNDAY MORNING SERMONS

Spirit Breathings Through Bro. Huggins

Reported by Sister Frances H. Russell

Honor springs out of character and manifestations of spirit, not office, or age.

The Father showed and taught, and Christ learned; therefore he possessed such a knowledge of the Father as no one else (John 12:49, 50).

As in plant life, to develop food and fruits there must be isolation, changed soil, uprooting, tearing from the roots around, so as a member of Christ's body there must be a separation from the world, no affiliation with darkness. Unpleasant as this duty may seem, we are not to wear long faces when this separation comes, for that is where God's glorious promise comes in (2 Cor. 6:17, 18; 7:1).

God's commands are hard for men. They then try to get around his laws; but in men's governments it is universally conceded that laws are to be enforced in spite of our conveniences and our wishes. God is not a hard Master, and we gain a compensation a thousandfold for all sacrifies of the present (Rev. 21:1-7).

All hatred and dislikes come from a high estimate of self; as you go upin the balance, your brother goes down.

Our destitution of gifts, our inclinations, our incapacities, do not disqualify us in working for the truth. We find Moses, although of stammering tongue, forming a law for Israel; and its spirit is incorporated in modern laws of all civilized nations today.

We are the sum total of outcropping thoughts and habits. We ought to bring our conduct in close approximation with Christ to be of use and employed in the kingdom. Now is the period for fitting yourself for the future. As recorded in Matt. 22:11-14, one servant didn't get ready. The King did not say: "Poor fellow, take him out and give him a chance." When Christ asks you why you are not ready that is one time you will be speechless.

The Adamic sin involved sin, and created a condition of provokings and sufferings; and only out of such conditions can meekness be developed. The wicked are on top in this struggle, this hustle and bustle. If anybody was inheriting the earth in David's day it was his enemies. The scene almost caused David's steps to slide. He had just about abandoned the Christian life, but was rescued by a contemplation of God's promises (Ps. 73).

When we are told to be strong it is a disgrace to be weak. It is a shame to be a little, shriveled up dyspeptic believer. We have been given powers to be strong. Strength derived from a promise wanes or grows in proportion to the measure of the faith in which you receive it. Paul wrote joyously even though he was wretched. Paul, in prison with a chain clanking at his feet, or in any condition, appropriated the power of God, because he believed faithfully that God would not forsake him.

"Greater is he that is in you that he in the world." We are stronger than the temptation, and sin can not possibly rule over us since God has pledged his almighty power for us (Rom. 6: 14).

MATT. 11:12, 13

"And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. For all the prophets, and the law prophesied until John."

By comparing this with other scriptures we easily find what is to be understood by it. This is what it teaches:

The prophets prophesied and the law shadowed forth the coming of the Christ, the restoration of the kingdom and glory that should follow, until John. But when John came he proclaimed that the Christ had come, and warned them to flee from the wrath to come. The result was the publicans and sinners whom the scribes and pharisees thought had no right to the kingdom rushed forward at the cry of John to be baptized, and so be ready to be partakers in the kingdom and glory which they believed Christ would immediately set up, and so escape the wrath to come. Therefore we have Christ himself saying, The tax gatherers and harlots go into the kingdom before you.

So also in Luke, when he was speaking of John the Baptist, all the people that heard him and the publicans justified God being baptized with the baptism of John, but the pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him. The account of John's coming and sayings, and the warnings he gave are found in Matt. 3:3-9. Jesus told the Jews that the kingdom of God should be taken from them and given to a people bringing forth the fruits thereof. Therefore the kingdom was yet to be established, though it could be consistently said, as we have seen, that it suffered violence and the violent took it by force. It was not till after that Jesus rode into Jerusalem as their king, but was rejected. He was crucified and buried, but he rose from the dead and ascended up into heaven until the restitution of all things, at which time he will return and build again the tabernacle of David.

But John himself settles the question. Verse 2: "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," or as rendered in the Diaglott: "Reform, because the Royal Majesty of the heavens has approached."

J. H. THOMAS, M. D.

REVERENCE DUE GOD'S HOUSE

Before speaking directly on the matter of God's house it may be well to consider what God's commands are regarding approach unto himself. His commands are to all, both high and low. What are God's commands in this regard? Read Exodus 19:5-17. In this command God is to come to the people, not that they shall see him, but that they shall hear his voice. But before he will even permit them to come within sound of his voice they must "sanctify themselves" for three days; separate themselves from all fleshly desires, cleansing mind as well as body.

The children of Israel were also commanded not to pass the bounds which were set as a limit to their approach to God, which fact accentuates the demand for reverence; and this under penalty of death to man or beast, who so much as touched the border.

Continuing further his directions to his people, God minutely specifies the manner of their building to him a tabernacle, which was to be God's house, a place wherein his people could worship him and give him the reverence due his great and holy name (Rev. 19:30; Ps. 26:8; 93:5; Habbakuk 2:20).

Is there any reason to believe that God's ideas have changed? Is he not always the everlasting, unchangeable Jehovah? And are not his records to be for us as a guide to our actions? Do not let us make any mistake, and hold lightly any requirement made of God's people, as it surely means an accounting with him should we fall into error. By what means, then, are we to know just what God's desires are?

He has left nothing to be guessed at; he explains all things in the record he has left to us. It is not, however, an open page that any foolish man can usurp, but for the reader seeking out his truth, which is like precious metal hid away in the earth, here a line, there a line. It takes time and energy to understand it. We must make it the permanent thing in our life; it is all summed up in the word "wisdom." Let us read what Solomon says in Prov. 8. Space does not permit us to go over the many exhortations of how to obtain understanding; we must obtain it, however, before we can be acceptable in God's sight, and when we do hear it we must follow it by being obedient.

To be obedient we must in our thoughts and actions do as directed; and here is the crucial test. Having heard and understood, no good result will follow unless we obey. We have seen how jealous our God is; how careful to instruct us as to our actions in approaching him, and yet in our daily life how often we forget and disregard those things upon which upon sober though we know are God's desires and commands. We are to think of these things especially when we enter his courts. We are to come with praise and thanksgiving—not half-heartedly; with joy and gladness, not boisterously or with downcast heart (Ps. 100). Our going to God's house will not benefit us unless we go for the right purpose—that is, to worship the Lord (Isa. 56:7). We must remember, too, that we go there to remember the Lord's death and to seek forgiveness for our sins, until he comes again.

I hope that each one of us may take this thought of reverence to our hearts, and that it may spring up and bear fruit to the Lord's honor and glory. HELEN PATE.

HUMAN GOVERNMENTS IN HISTORY

In order that crime of all kinds might be held in check human governments have been necessary. From the beginning the race has been made up of two classes, viz., the rulers and the ruled. It will probably be interesting to know when and under what conditions government began. We learn by sacred writ that a city was built by Cain, the eldest son of Adam and Eve. In this city began the first human government. He had been driven from the presence of the Lord, and had gone eastward from Eden, and had a son whom he called Enoch, after which he called the city. Since that time men have built and ruled the inhabitants in the cities.

We know very little of governments before the flood, except that there were two classes on earth, viz., the sons of God, the descendants of Seth and the children of men, the descendants of Cain. We know from the Bible that sin increased so much that the Lord decided to destroy the whole race except Noah and his family. This would indicate that human government was unable to suppress or even keep in check robbery and other crimes. Jehovah purposed that the earth should be filled with a righteous race through our first parents. It is recorded in Gen. 1:28 that God blessed them and said unto them: "Be fruitful and multiply and replenish (fill) the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion"—that is, rule over the earth. Adam failed and sin entered; and under the reign of sin human governments have corrupted the earth. Cain, the originator of human governments, was a murderer, and therefore a usurper of Jehovah's power. There is no scriptural evidence that the sons of God organized a government or built a city. It is to be inferred that they were governed by laws proclaimed by the Lord. Noah was directed to build the ark by one of God's heavenly messengers.

Cain's seed were left to themselves, and the result was that their thoughts were evil continually. Their imaginations, purposes and desires were evil. Jehovah could not develop a righteous race from such a class, therefore he destroyed them to check sin. Righteous will increase where righteous judgments are rendered. The Lord said to Cain, "Where is Abel, thy brother? He said, I know not; am I my brother's keeper?" He little thought that his Judge knew that he had murdered his brother. The Lord said, "What hast thou done? The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." After judgment was passed upon him Cain knew that it was just and could not be changed. He said: "My punishment is greater than I can bear." The marginal rendering is: "Mine iniquity is greater than it may be forgiven." The Lord has supreme power in the judgment. Crime would decrease and finally become extinct if the criminal knew that his crime would be brought to light as soon as committed. Such a condition could not exist under a human form of government. Delays in courts where justice should exist are responsible for the greater part of the crime committed. We could not expect absolute justice from human courts, but a minimum of justice would be a great relief. In a pure theocracy justice will be meted out to those who are disobedient. The judges there will be the immortalized saints. They will not judge after the seeing of the eye, nor after the hearing of the ear, but will render a righteous judgment. In the language of the prophet, "The soul that sinneth shall die." Out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Christ shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more" (Isa. 2:3, 4).
